by Donald Ogden Stewart will bowl audiences over. Because it blends fun, heartache, melodrama and romance in a new, high-spirited way and the effect is tremendous, as well as BOX OFFICE PLUS. Because it was brilliantly directed by H. D'Abbadie D'Arrast from the story by Mr. D'Arrast and Douglas Doty. Because it will gross a barrel of money and revolutionize production everywhere!

"LAUGHTER"

It's a screen success before released. Which means a real grosser. There aren't many "Laughters" on stage or screen.

Nancy Carroll plays well. If he can duplicate his work in "Laughter", Fredric March is a star. He is a merged breeze of all breezes.

Hugely enjoyable entertainment. The sort the flaps like. They'll talk about "Laughter" for a long time.

"Laughter" Surprises H. O.

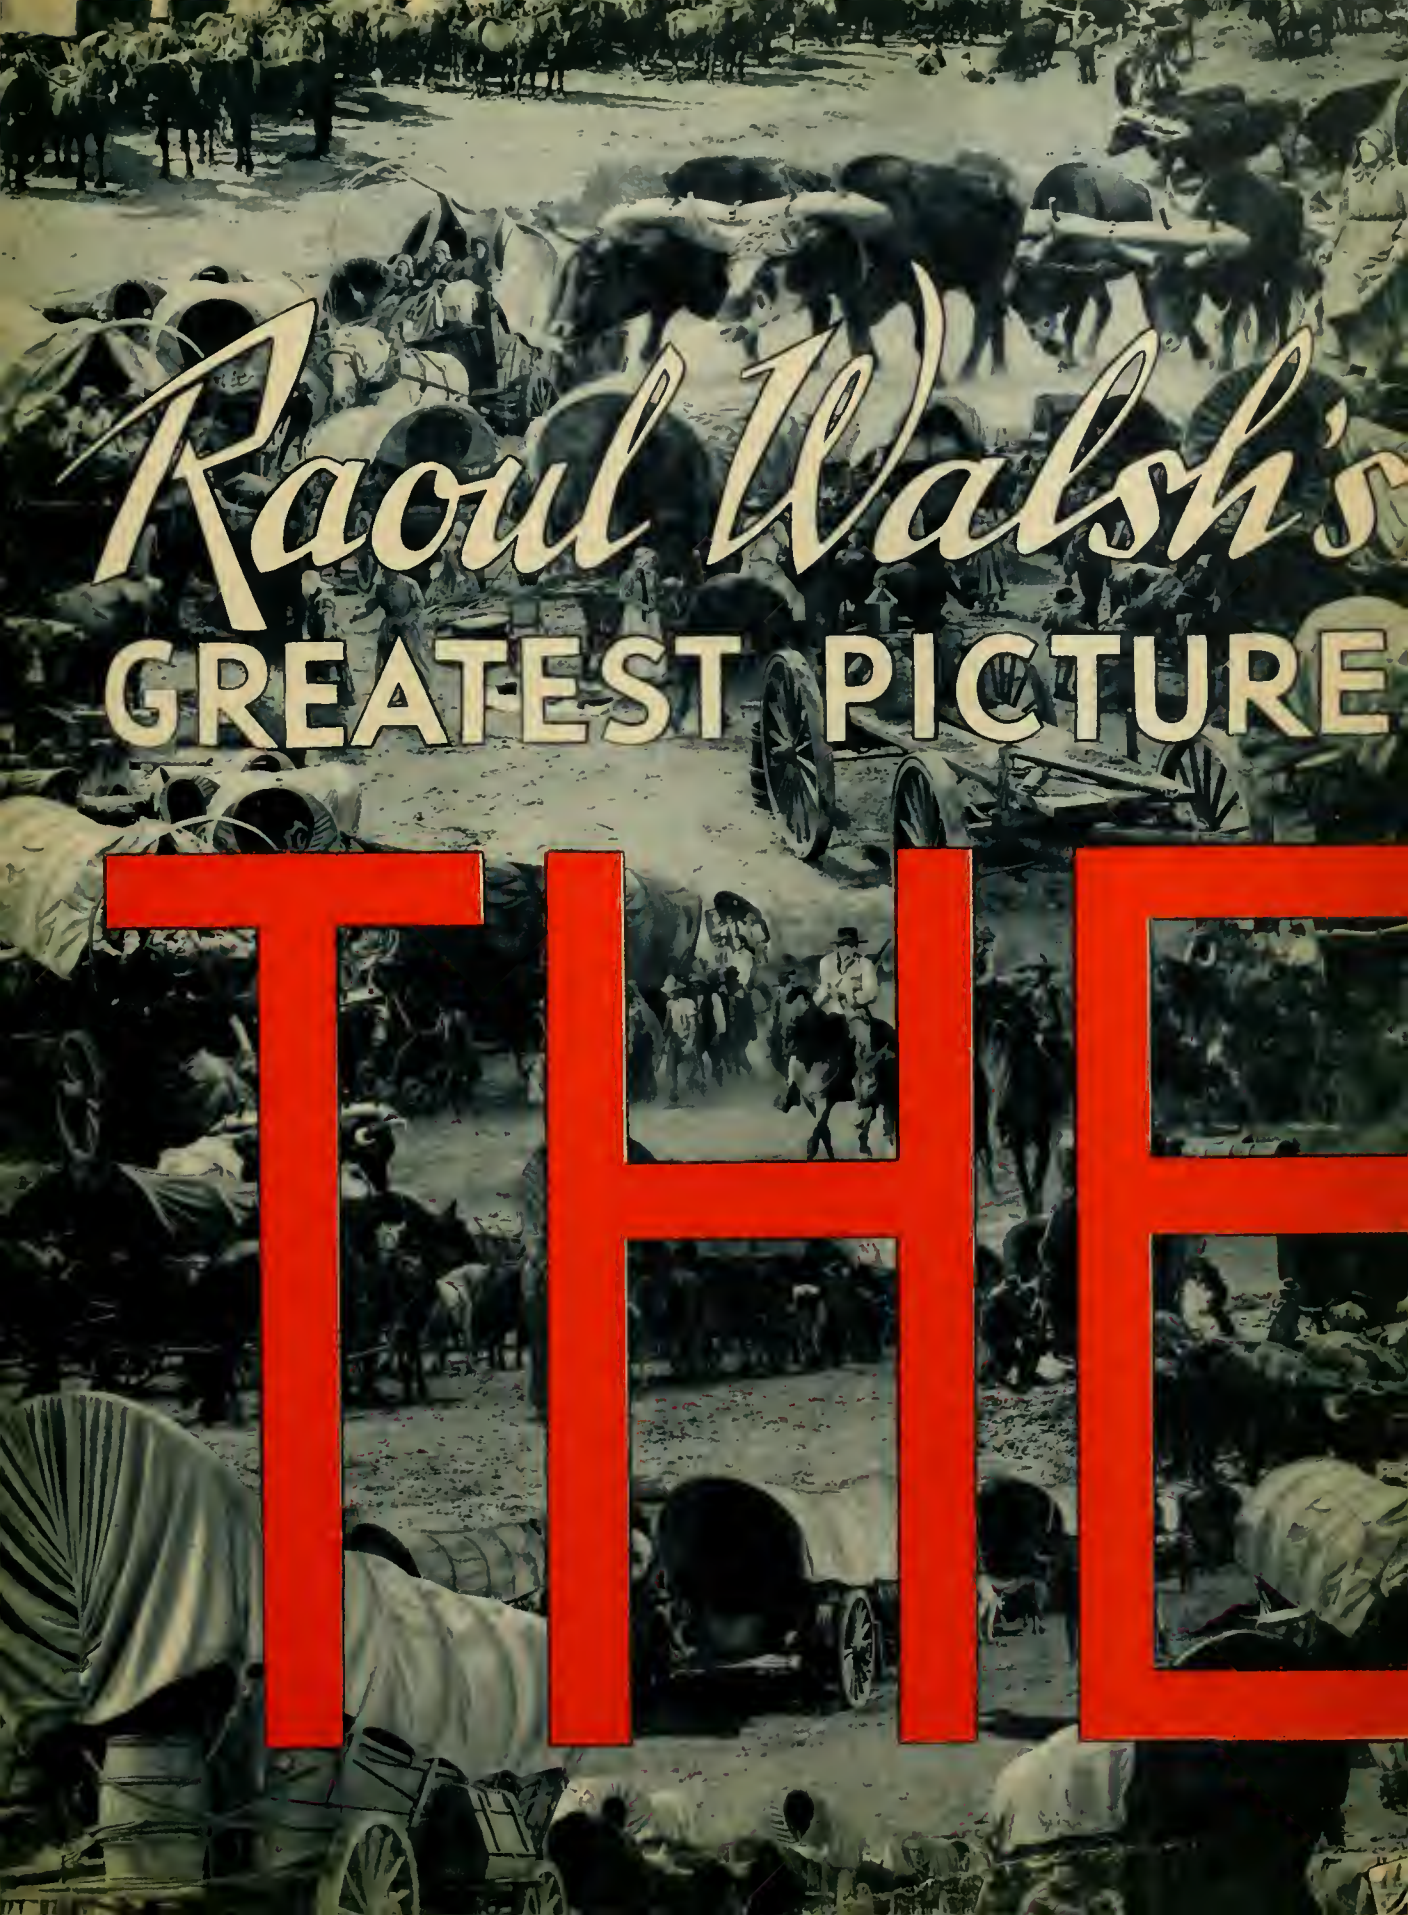
Finished and sent to Paramount's home office, a tumult started at the first projection room showing of "Laughter". The Paramounteers asked each other why no one had said anything about the picture before.

The oldest Paramount staff man could not recall of a studio turning out a big picture and keeping it a secret.

"Laughter" Wins Against Gold in New Par Film



Nancy Carroll, put to the test, comes off with high honors. Fredric March is a knockout feminine spectators will adore.

Sime Silverman, publisher of Variety, thought so much of "LAUGHTER" that he ran three praise stories about it in a single issue of his publication.

And from the Hollywood Reporter comes this significant comment:

"Paramount has turned out one of the best pictures of the year, and one that should stand as such in the opinion of any audience."

"Give Us Good Films and to Hell with Depression," Is Answer to NEWS Quiz

What Survey Shows

There is no slump at box-offices of the nation when good pictures are available and exhibitors everywhere are optimistic over the season's outlook.

Producers are not "coming through" with pictures of sufficient quality to maintain patronage.

The cry of "Wolf" by some showmen applies only when pictures offered are not up to the standard demanded by a discriminating public.

Good pictures are getting big grosses, despite unemployment, wage reductions and depression in other lines of business.

The day is past when ordinary pictures can make money, for the novelty of talkers has worn off and the public now is buying carefully and with a full advance knowledge of quality.

Showmanship is helping to keep box-office intake up to its present level, although the need to give the public "more for the money" has increased overhead and decreased net.

Chains, along with individual operators, are finding that "the picture tells the story" in writing gross business.

Stage shows are helping to maintain business at many theatres, although the dropping of "flesh" in others has not affected business.

Unemployment in many instances is helping box offices, pictures offering needed divertissement in the present period of economic depression.

Short subjects are playing an important part in bolstering programs.

Miniature golf courses, except in isolated instances, are not providing serious competitions to picture houses.

Box-Offices of Nation Holding Up Well During Present Situation; Optimism Prevalent in Most Spots; Bad Films Cause of Slump

Optimism, spurred by the realization that good pictures command good grosses, regardless of condition in other lines of business, motivates the picture business today, it is shown in a national survey of theatre business just completed by MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The industry commands good box-office intake, regardless of slump, when good pictures are released, but there is a dearth of meritorious attractions to command box-office intake, the survey shows.

Find Ordinary Pictures Passé

Prosperity, so far as picture business is concerned, is inseparably bound up with good pictures, key cities of the nation emphasize, pointing out that their depression is due to inferior attractions.

Producers are not doing their share in providing quality pictures which will get money at the box-office, exhibitors insist, declaring that block booking and misleading advertising are driving patrons away from the box-office.

Protection is looming large as a "life and death" factor in the future of subsequent runs, who feel they cannot exist unless releasing arrangements are changed, the survey makes clear. These subsequents find that first runs are getting the business, due to the newness of attractions and more favorable atmosphere.

A few instances, the survey brings out, show that subsequents are benefitting by the shopping tendencies of patrons, who are patronizing the lower-priced houses.

The MOTION PICTURE NEWS survey, covering every section of the nation, discloses forcibly that theatre business is singularly free from the depression existing in other lines of business. While grosses are off in some localities, the drop in no case is alarming, being due, so exhibitors say, to the dearth of good pictures.

Some exhibitors are counteracting drop of box-office receipts with the addition of stage shows. Others are finding that meritorious shorts can help hold grosses to an even keel. In some sections, country store and giveaway ideas are helping business. Others are finding that extensive ballyhoo is the answer.

Films Not Up to Snuff

The day of ordinary pictures has passed, it is shown by the symposium, because the novelty of sound has worn off, and people are demanding more for their money than ever before.

Since the day of forced runs, when impressive running time and advertising campaigns could be used as a selling point, the industry has undergone a revolutionary change, so that now the public cannot be "kidded" on outstanding pictures, the survey demonstrates.

All sections of the nation are "wised up" on picture values, it is shown by the survey, the discrimination extending to all classes and all runs, various sections report.

Except in a few isolated instances business is on the upward trend, exhibitors being confident they can make money with worthwhile pictures.

Exhibitors in various sections are complaining that distributors are not giving them proper support in helping to sell films to the public, and are

"POOR PICTURES"

(A TRAGEDY IN FIVE CHAPTERS)

FOR two weeks or more, Motion Picture News sleuths have been on the trail of the truth about box-offices. The results are presented to you today.

Roaming in and out of circuit headquarters, and wherever theatre business is talked about, digging into bank statements and factory statistics, these collective Brisbanes have unearthed facts and a not inconsiderable array of data about depression.

Their discoveries are interesting. The dope, assembled for the first time since film clouds lost their silver linings, include a lesson or two which the industry has always known, but occasionally forgets.

Twenty Per Cent Under Normal

TO begin with, let the facts have their say:

In many sections of the nation there exists a business vacuum which has many theatres gasping for air. Not because they won't pull through. Not at all. But because business adversity is a strange and unknown creature in the film family and nobody quite knows how to handle it.

The flux is decidedly variable throughout the land, but in averages research shows grosses have dropped twenty per cent. under last year. The exact ratio depends on what part of the map you study. Unemployment, widespread and serious, is one reason and the indifference to pictures is explainable largely by that factor.

Average, Or Good, Not Enough

BUT, looming up like a leviathan that blankets all other explanations, is the irrefutable lowdown on pictures themselves.

To repeat in 1930 the bromidic wheeze about exceptional attractions drawing in the kale is almost sufficient excuse for legalized murder. Yet, no matter how you look at it and from what angle you endeavor to solve the current day problem, the answer is the same.

Any sales manager, if he would tell you what he thinks, will admit that the average picture—better than that, the good picture—no longer does anything but average business. Pictures have to reach higher than ordinary levels to persuade the shopping public to part with its money.

When Loudspeakers Warble

THAT type of film has been rare, a limited number of attractions, of course, providing the exception. The consequence has been that the quarters have not been passing across box-office windows with that rapidity which the theatre operator prefers to see.

When this publication, some weeks ago, checked and double checked on pee-wee golf as a national theatre disturbance the net result of the investigation demonstrated then and there that nothing will keep the public out of theatres if the loudspeakers are warbling attractions the mobs want to see.

The spotlight on the depression ailment merely confirms, and at the same time strengthens, that fundamental truth.

The Answer to the Question

THIS business and its constituents can have no commercial aches when fine pictures are produced. The entire explosive career of the industry demonstrates this to be so.

When the leaders bring in new production brains, when they delegate to the skill of many what too few men in Hollywood are endeavoring to do and cracking up as they try to do it—then will production take the spurt forward which will dissolve fears that come with periodic spells of depression. Not before.

Old stuff, you may say. Add wearisome, too.

Certainly. The truth is always that way.

Clara, Locked in Car, Won't Talk; Yawns at Harry

Chicago—Clara Bow, acting like a recently scolded girl, kept very much out of the public view and contact while passing through the city during the past week. She completely ignored reporters' pleas for interviews and remained not only inside the Paramount private car, but securely locked within her particular compartment, as well. All provocative inquiries from the newsmen were either ignored completely or answered only with a sleepy-voiced affirmation or denial.

"Is it true," a voice shouted at her door, "that you and Harry Richman are definitely 'quits'?"

"Uh-huh." Followed by a luxurious yawn.

Clara's car was switched about the maze of Chicago's inner railroad yards, from the terminal of the Santa Fe Chief to the La Salle Street station and the Century. Clara remained aboard, the sole occupant during the troubled hours of the yards' journey.

Dixie Lee, likewise New York-bound to work on Paramount's "No Limit," fell heir to picture space in the dailies, as a result of Clara's voluntary seclusion. Dixie, a local gal, heard opportunity's knock after winning one of those contests at the College Inn here. She followed it to Hollywood.

Toledo Theatre Ad Man's Anti-Dictionary Complex

Toledo—A new record for honest advertising has been chalked up by the Pantheon theatre here. One of its newspaper ads on "Girl of the Golden West" proclaimed that the picture has "12 Big Anti-Climaxes."

The town is now flooded with book agents peddling dictionaries to theatre ad writers.

Believe It or Not, Some Wall Street Circles Are Lending Ear to "Big 4" Plan

That famous theme song, "Merger, I Love You," is being crooned in financial circles these days with a fervor rarely exceeded. That is, if Wall Street rumblings in Times Square are to be credited.

The latest, and by easily the dizziest, to hit the film district in some time purports to tie in RKO, Fox, Loew's and Warners, all in one company with David Sarnoff and Hiram Brown pulling the strings designed to make the works go 'round.

The tip-off of what is presumably transpiring is attributed to the heavy purchases of Warner stock by Pynchon & Co., downtown financial firm which specializes in the Harley Clarke stocks. The affiliation between Pynchon and Chase Securities Corporation which, in turn, means the Chase National Bank, is understood to have drawn closer in the last two weeks by virtue of a $10,000,000 advance made by Chase Securities to the brokerage firm.

These are the links in the chain which are said to have induced Fox and Warners to think along the same lines.

On the other hand, RKO and the Warner Brothers are working closely together to offset the strong and friendly coalition which has developed between Fox and Paramount.

The dopesters declare that, if a consolidation of such magnitude is worked out, fully a year will elapse before the financial tangles can be untangled. In the interim, a year is a long time and many things might happen.

For the present, official comment from the four companies involved is limited to this:

Sam Morris for Warners: "I haven't heard a whisper of it and Harry Warner is out of the city."

Hiram S. Brown for RKO: "You're the first fellow to talk to me about it."

Nobody at Fox would talk, the impression being conveyed that, even if there was something to it, obviously no company executive would tip it off.

And efforts to reach Nick Schenck came a cropper.

De Milles' Status Puzzle on Coast

Hollywood—Future status of the De Mille brothers is a matter of speculation here. William is definitely out at M-G-M and there is doubt as to Cecil B. remaining with the company. Meanwhile, Jeannie McPherson has returned to the Paramount fold.

Color

Wilmington — It was announced through the columns of the Wilmington Theatre News, fan paper, that the ushers employed in the theatres in which the Amos 'n' Andy picture is to be shown will say "check" and "double check" until the picture finishes its engagement here. The ushers now use the customary "yes, sir" and "no, sir."

Schnitzer Beams On Le Baron, but Coast Wonders

Hollywood—It looks like spring cleaning on the Radio lot, only a lot of the boys on salary don't know it. Joe Schnitzer, who has been on the scene for about three weeks, is expected to remain that much again, hiring new people and firing the old.

And, while Schnitzer is on record via a statement that this talk about Bill Le Baron's resignation is the bunk, the report simply won't down that Radio's production chief is very much on the spot. Schnitzer declares Le Baron holds a long-term contract which will run to its conclusion, but by "long-term" is meant the limited number of months which the present agreement really has to go, than those who rely on their informative pipe-lines are content to let the matter rest.

Schnitzer did beau geste in Le Baron's direction this week when he said that when the latter's contract does run out, "I personally will do everything in my power to see that it is renewed on an equally happy basis."

Then Radio's president stepped a step further by covering the same ground insofar as associate producers and other studio executives were concerned.

Some of Hollywood's substantial citizenry simply don't understand it.

Ax-Swinging Tournament Reported Brewing at RKO

All may be quiet along the Potomac, but not at Radio Pictures headquarters, if confidential reports aired throughout the New York trade this week are to be seriously credited.

Impending changes in executive personnel are being whispered about, the yarn most often repeated concerning two individuals high up in the ranks of the organization.

S.M.P.E. turns spotlight on mechanics of industry at New York convention. Turn to pages 37 to 46 for inside dope on the confab.

INSIDERS'

THE pinwheel is still revolving. Take the situation of this high-powered theatre operator (*).

He was a headliner in this celluloid show business ever since the day this Insider entered the industry; that's a long time now. His operations were always big. Important chap, too. The circuit he managed grew from a handful of houses to the most affluent in its particular territory.

Then, here in New York, some things began to happen. Business wires were pulled and, in less time than it takes you to read this, said big league operator was out of the picture and the chain had a new set of bosses. But that didn't end the tale.

The present owners are having trouble. Loads and loads of it. Maybe some—come to think of it, unquestionably plenty of it—is being stirred up by the decapitated executive, for the man is in a position to make the going rough.

Now, in the offing, is something like this:

Millions are at stake and perhaps in jeopardy. The leader who purchased the chain is one smart hombre. His history shows that when a situation grows tight, he has always found the sagacious step is to meet it before it grows tighter. Translated into terms of prophecy, and with all mystery dropped, what this yarn is trying to get over is that the deposed executive may shortly find himself back in the post he was forced to vacate—at a considerably higher figure, and with more power placed in his hands to wield.

If it happens—and it might, easily—try to analyze the reasons for the move. If you remember what The Insiders have narrated here, the job won't be so hard.

Misery Note

Last week, a certain circuit—unnamed it shall be—used $30,000 worth of red ink to record its losses. This was in the East. In another section of the country, the same circuit dipped into the ink to the tune of $100,000. Nationally, and as of a few days ago, the chain was painfully behind its figures of last year.

Maybe it's management. Perhaps an inheritance from a previous administration. Probably both, with a general sprinkling of punk pictures thrown in. At any rate, the figures are as you get them here.

Something has to be done about it, of course. So this Saturday, the powers that rule will probably fire sixty or seventy ushers.

Television and Headaches

With television reported to be developed to a point where it is ready for commercial use, but being held back by the big electrics until such time as economic conditions are such that the industry is ready to undertake the new development, major companies are said to be keeping eagle eyes on all advances in this field.

The idea is that the various companies don't want to be caught napping in case there is a violent upheaval, when and if commercial television is introduced. The strides being made are emphasized by the legal point raised this week to determine whether the televised broadcast of a prize fight constitutes a violation of the Federal laws prohibiting interstate transportation of fight films.

The broadcast which resulted in the inquiry demonstrates how imminent is the introduction of regular broadcast of news events, provided latest developments in television are made commercially available. With the industry now trying to dope out its status in view of the impending wide screen development, television looks like a real headache of the not-distant future.

It Is to Laugh

Graft, ugly word, but rarely more notorious and flagrant than the manner in which a certain man in this business practices it. You would imagine from the publicity fanfares which have heralded this career over the years that morally and ethically he was above indulging in that sort of thing. But it's really pretty much the other way.

For this man—name familiar, but not supplied on request—not so long ago signed a certain star to a contract running into a total figure that makes the Bank of England's reserve look sick.

But first he took his luminary into a corner, or maybe it was a walk in the park, and arranged his split. That gives the double-crosser not only his handsome weekly salary, but a cut from the player, at the same time mill-stoning his company with a contract that only a miracle—maker could turn to profit.

Yet, they give this guy dinners.

The Long Lane

They think hard and long over in England. Here's a story that proves it:

About three years ago, the Warners decided to open up their own offices in Britain. The plan was part of a world-wide expansion which provided that the W. B. standard was to fly everywhere. An understandable ambition. And so, the Vitagraph exchanges were bought and re-dubbed Warners.

By the switch, Gaumont, then and now one of the distributing subsidiaries of Gaumont British which, you must remember, is England's biggest exhibitor, naturally lost the Warner product.

What happened was this:

From that time, almost thirty-six months ago, until this fall the Warner product couldn't make a sizeable dent in the Gaumont British line, three hundred theatres long. The Warners sold all around them, but not to them.

A long time to square away what they thought required an accounting, but the Gaumont British crowd stuck it out until they figured their point had registered.

"The Butcher"

To his face they "yes" him. Good old industry custom. Behind his back, this directorate's aide-de-camps call him "The Butcher." Maybe he wouldn't burn up if only he knew.

The monicker is unsavory, but is well-earned for this self-styled imperator of the studio has a habit of completely disregarding the sensibilities and often the physical welfare of those who work under his wing.

For instance. In a picture just completed, this dubious hero of dubious practices permitted a score or more of extras

You Tell Us—

to suffer needless and totally unwarranted discomfort—perhaps injury—because he allowed them to do stunts requiring the skill and training these extras didn't possess. Stark realism, his fetish, was the excuse.

Where the head of the studio was while all this was going on is something the record so far doesn't show. Suspicion has it he was studying the stock market reports.

More Changing Times

It used to be in the days of not so long ago that publicity departments turned out press books, not so that showmen could pick up an occasional idea to help his box-office, but for stars in the studio and the sales force. The gag was pulled to keep the stellar luminaries happy and the sales crew steamed and it worked.

Today in this business when stars do what producers tell them and sales, or lots of them, are closed right here in little old New York, the picture is tinted differently. Publicity hounds have received their orders to grind out their press books for exhibitor consumption, not their waste baskets.

Good old banking influence.

Al and Joe

Al Jolson is back in Hollywood ready to make his first talker for United Artists. It is rumored, however, that Joe Schenck, who negotiated the deal, is no longer particularly delighted over it.

It seems that when the agreement was made it called for Jolson's services in four talkers. The salary for each picture is said to be $500,000, or a total of $2,000,000 for the four.

With Jolson essentially a filmusical and at the present time a not so heavy favorite at the box-office, it looks as though super work on the part of Schenck will be necessary to make the receipts show on the black side of the ledger.

That half million salary nut is plenty to begin with. Add to that the cost of production, in the Croesus-like manner with which U.A. makes 'em. Also distribution, print cost and advertising and the prospects look anything but bullish—for Joe.

Al? Just another "Mammy" song for him.

What's the Answer?

This comes to you via the shears and paste-pot and from an observer who enjoys the reputation of knowing what he's talking about:

"Some day in The Insiders' column you might tell me why chains make it a practice of sending managers into the smaller cities who make no attempt to identify themselves with the town, who spend their time in exploitation of questionable value rather than in making and developing vital civic and newspaper contracts, and who are unavailable to patrons and meet friendly overtures with coldness, evidently fearing they are a prelude to pass-begging.

"You might also explain, if you can, why chains insist frequently upon transferring a manager who has just learned a town's likes and dislikes, and why a well-filled press book is considered more important than a well-filled till.

"I am sure chain managers as well as newspapermen would read your explanations with profound interest."

Other folks have been asking the same questions, but nobody yet has provided the answer.

Spectacle

LONG in the business and one of its most highly-vaunted production geniuses. As a matter of faithful reporting, this chap had a long list of money pictures to his credit. That is, until the last year, or two, or three.

But the hand that was once so deft seems to be slipping and the outfit that holds the bag to the tune of thousands and thousands—the contract, you know—isn't too happy about matters as they stand today. That, as you might imagine, will mean something that is something when renewal time rolls around.

Sad, but true, is the producer's ignorance of what is going on almost under his own sensitive nose. Always with his head roaming through the clouds while his body walks on earth like other mortal men, the tempest that brews will probably reach him last. He's totally unaware of his prestige barometer's drop.

You've heard, no doubt, the wheeze about ignorance and bliss, folly and wisdom. Here's one case where it was never more truth.

LIKE his Hollywood colleague, the stormy petrel around whom this explosion hovers has too many responsibilities, too many pictures to turn out. But the System is to blame for that, not the stormy petrel.

Here in New York, cost sheets are being scrutinized. And balanced with rentals. The cost sheets are coming in second best and that explains the fuss. Headquarters wants to know, is asking a couple of whys and not a few wherefores and the answer from the golden West is:

"I have too many pictures to make, can't see them all and you'll have to take the weak sisters with the strong."

But New York, knowing what a job it is these days to raise the dollars which Hollywood spends without understanding their value, has an entirely different idea. For instance, the head of this company remembers when his on-the-spot producer didn't have a long bankroll with which to play, made pictures costing between $60,000 and $120,000, instead of from $150,000 to $400,000—with the emphasis on the latter—and supplied exchanges with attractions that made profits reasonable things to earn.

Mr. President wants to know why the practice of yesterday can't be followed today and proposes to find out within the next two months. He understands what a battle impends, even if the producer on the Coast doesn't, and proposes to have his own way about it.

It wasn't so long ago that this Hollywood personality had New York on the telephone and raised the usual thing because headquarters in the East permitted a pet studio story to go to a competitor for $75,000. What New York said to Hollywood isn't on the record, telephone rates being what they are. But what New York, as represented by the president of the organization, remarked after the conversations ended won't bear repetition in any respectable family chronicle.

The insane frenzy over story rights will have to stop, the decision is. Negatives will have to end their heavenly peregrinations and learn once again what earthly ozone smells like.

The fracas, or its pieces, may ever remain a secret because the cover-up will be so complete. But, if you can dope it all out, you're on the track of one of the biggest inside upsets that this whoozy old business has witnessed in its none too placid existence.

William Fox, Mystic

Has Bill Fox been conferring with Al Smith and John Raskob about motion pictures at large and one big company, in particular?

Is Fox about to float a finance company, backed by a well known Wall Street crowd and, if so, what for?

Well, is he?

Sob Sisters and Males Fall for "Eve-lyn" Laye

Chicago—The spectacle of an actress who was a stranger to high hat altitudes so completely won Chicago newspaper train-meeting crews that the resultant publicity on Evelyn Laye's visit here read more like an elegy for a departed President of the republic than a story about the doings of a professional woman. Even the lady journalists put their best Sunday edition adjectives to work.

In the maze of phrases dedicated to her charm, her pulchritude and her wardrobe not much of news was woven. It appears, however, that she is not to marry Ronald Colman—not at once, anyhow.

"Ronny," smiled the little London blonde, "is the sweetest, most charming and reticent boy alive. But, marry him? Why, he's not even divorced."

Evelyn, she says it's pronounced "Eve-lyn," doesn't care particularly about making her profession a step to great wealth.

"I know that sounds artificial," she adds. "But all I really care to have is a sufficiency to enjoy the good things of life, and enough to provide for a comfortable old age."

She talks like that—the diction of an instructor in rhetoric. And when she says it, it sounds reasonable.

Musicals at Paramount Out; MacDonald Dropped

Hollywood—Paramount is off musicals, it is indicated by report that Jeannette MacDonald's option will not be renewed. With musicals out, there is no place for her, it is stated.

Washington Slant and Task Of Pleasing All Factors Impossible Hurdles

A four-way swap of the nation's most important theatres is still being talked about, but the conversation is unofficial. There it may remain.

The plan, first sprung on the industry by Motion Picture News many weeks ago, would provide for a split of the country into a quartette of divisions with Fox and Loew's, Warners, RKO and Publix parcelling their houses on predetermined geographical lines and with each remaining out of the other's back yard. It is felt that this would permit a more intensive development of each major section with worries of overbuilding and cutthroat competition removed from the reckoning.

Along the Potomac

What the government would have to say in connection with such a project is not known, but the general attitude of Washington toward mergers at large, and in particular, the close scrutiny with which it surveys activities in the picture business, leads those who have been discussing the plan to watch their step.

The human equation is considered to be of prime importance as well. One observer who knows what the shooting is all about pointed out this week that it would be a super-man's job to work out a gigantic deal of this nature with personalities like Sam Katz, Nick Schenck and Spyros Skouras, as well as the presidents of the respective chains, to blend into a harmonious set-up.

The move now under way in New York to add the Paramount, Warner and RKO houses on the Coast to Fox West Coast Theatres, thereby making that string the overlord of the Pacific Slope, has been regarded by some as another step in bringing the four-way pool closer to realization. This is incorrect.

Oldknow Soon to Name Successor

Los Angeles—Just how long will Oscar Oldknow remain on the Coast? This question is being discussed a great deal about the Fox West Coast Theatre offices at present, as it is understood that Oldknow was to be out here for about 30 days.

If he leaves, just who will take his place is a matter of conjecture. No one individual being slated for that job apparently, as yet.

It is rumored that Charles Kurtzman, who has been with Fox theatres in the east, will be brought out here, but in what capacity is not known. Kurtzman was formerly associated with the company on the coast and knows the situation at this end.

Mitzi and Moe

Chicago—This city was the scene of a tender reunion between prominent professionals recently when a leading picture actress and her "discoverer" got together at a dinner at the New Bismarck Hotel to talk over old times. The principals were Mitzi Green, Paramount pet, appearing at local theatres here, and Moe Snyder, who spotted Mitzi several years ago and obtained screen tests for her which later led to responsible parts in productions.

Moe and his wife, Ruth Etting, entertained Mitzi and her parents at their first reunion since the juvenile actress attained prominence. Moe first caught Mitzi doing an impersonation as part of her parents' vaudeville routine in New York. He was so impressed at the time he urged the screen tests, and, later, a try at Hollywood.

Protection Cut to 14 Days, Demand In Penna., W. Va.

Pittsburgh—Reduction of protection to 14 days will be demanded by the western Pennsylvania and West Virginia exhibitor association, its members decided at the annual convention here. The meeting was enlivened by the reading of the decision of Judge Burrows of Hartford, Conn., declaring the old standard contract illegal. Zoning schedules now call for 28 days' clearances for first runs.

David Selznick is new president of the association, succeeding Anthony Jim, who declined to run for another term. Other officers were reelected as follows: William Wheat, vice-president; Joseph Gellman, treasurer; Fred Herrington, secretary. William Lipsie was added to the board of directors.

There was considerable discussion of insurance and it is likely that the organization will act as agent for an insurance company, commissions to be added to the treasury.

Sunday Benefits Planned

Twelve Sunday benefit shows are to be staged in different towns, the proceeds to go to the organization. New dues are at the rate of 15 cents per seat or $2 per month to theatres which show slide or screen advertisements sponsored by the association.

The convention recommended that in future, advice or assistance from the association is to be extended only to members. The organization, says Herrington, is tired of helping slackers. Luncheon was served each day in lieu of an annual banquet.

Exhibitors Demanded Arbitration, U. S. Supreme Court Told in Thacher Appeal

The Reason Why

Al Lichtman went to see "Once in a Lifetime," stage play which pokes fun and takes cracks at the picture business, et al. Then Joe Schenck took in the piece.

Talking later:

Lichtman: "You see. Exactly what I told you was wrong with Hollywood."

Schenck: "Is that so? You think the play rings true because no distributors are mentioned in it."

Court Erred in Credit Committee Case, Brief Avers

Washington — Briefs setting forth the government's position in the so-called credit committee case have been filed with the United States Supreme Court in anticipation of argument of the case in the near future.

Explaining its action, the department of justice stated that the court, in the case against First National Pictures, Inc., and others, held that the credit committee rules complained of by the government were not in violation of the law. The department, in support of its appeal from the decision, cites the first section of the anti-trust act, which says, among other things, that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal."

The brief filed with the Supreme Court asserts that the lower court erred in not holding that the picture corporations "have engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to coerce and require exhibitors of motion pictures in the United States acquiring a motion pictures theatre by purchase or transfer to assume and to perform the uncompleted contracts for the exhibition of motion pictures in such theatre existing at the time of such purchase or transfer between the former owner or operator of said theatre and any appellee distributor and any other principal of any member of an appellee Film Board of Trade."

Also, that the court erred in not holding that the picture corporations "have engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to deprive exhibitors of motion pictures in the United States acquiring a motion picture theatre by purchase or transfer of the right to have any court of competent jurisdiction determine whether such purchase or transfer has been fraudulent and for the purpose of avoiding contractual obligations.".

In its brief, the department also states: "We submit that this case is governed by the numerous decisions of this court condemning as an illegal restraint of trade any agreement not to deal, or even any concerted action by members of a trade having such a purpose and effect. This court has also said that such an agreement is equally invalid where the restraint may be removed by complying with the conditions fixed by those imposing the restraint. And it is no justification of an illegal combination in restraint of trade that the primary object of the parties to the agreement is to protect themselves against trade conditions which they consider inimical."

The brief states that in its opinion the Supreme Court "has never sanctioned an agreement among the members of an industry to act in unison in making an agency of the group an extra-legal tribunal to compel fulfillment of contractual obligations. Such a restraint on competition seems particularly obnoxious to the anti-trust laws where the enforcing group, as in this case, has monopolistic control of the industry. The alleged justification would seem to become even more untenable where, as in this case, the pressure of the group is applied to those who in most cases are not under any legal liability to the members of the industry."

Distributors to Cite 24 Alleged Errors in High Court Hearing Oct. 27

Citing 24 alleged errors in the Thacher decision outlawing compulsory arbitration in the industry, distributors will go to bat before the United States Supreme Court at Washington, Oct. 27, in an effort to upset the decree and restore the arbitration system in the picture business.

The distributors, represented by Cadwallader, Wickersham & Taft, New York, will deny that any conspiracy existed in setting up of the arbitration system, as charged, and will put forward three affirmative defenses to support their contention that the arbitration system is legal and beneficial.

Distributors contend that Federal Judge Thacher erred in holding that the making of the standard contract and arbitration rules of 1928 and the means of chosen to bring about their general adoption were unlawful acts either under the Sherman Act or the common law.

Called Reasonable Restraints

To support this stand, distributors say that such acts were normal and reasonable regulations of a business and that the contract and arbitration rules were adopted by a committee appointed at the Trade Practice Conference sponsored by the Federal Trade Commission. They also assert that the contract and arbitration rules were adopted pursuant to the demands and upon the insistence of exhibitors.

The court also erred, say distributors, in holding that distributors refused to make departures from the standard contract when requested by exhibitors, and in "refusing to hold that each contract between distributor

Publix Optimistic

There is every reason for optimism, declares Sam Katz, head of the Publix circuit. "Especially is this true in Publix," he declares.

"What has happened," he says in commenting on general conditions, "is that from a tempo of over-expansion and over-production the world is assuming the steady, progressive pace of normalcy. Just as the United States has been the first among nations to recognize this and adapt itself, so has Publix been first to divest itself of superficialities, in order to sustain all necessities for easy, normal progress."

Amos 'n' Andy May Introduce New Show Angle

RKO may be paving the way to a new slant on picture merchandising by virtue of its plan to run "Check and Double Check" in approximately 300 cities day and date throughout the country, beginning today.

The Amos 'n' Andy opus opens at the new RKO Mayfair, which was formerly the Columbia, next Friday, but gets under way generally today throughout the country. The dates have been spotted in so that word-of-mouth comment, if it should be unfavorable, will have little effect on the first run situation upon which Radio naturally depends for its big money. If New York critics should sock the film, it will have little effect on the rest of the of the country—provided the main stem comments do carry weight with out-of-town exhibitors, because the showing here is one week behind the key cities. In other words, Radio is playing it safe.

The day and date gag has been tried before, but old-timers have difficulty in recalling as extensive a tie-up as the one prepared for the radio team. In 200 newspapers, double page trucks appeared during the week as advance guard for the picture. The cost to Radio is up in six figures.

Tonight, Amos 'n' Andy will do a radio stunt over the regular RKO hour and will tie in their picture over the "red" network of the National Broadcasting Co. At the same time, Pepsodent swings into line on behalf of its headline team in the form of cooperative store window displays. The Marx Toy Company and the Williamson Candy Company are likewise cooperating.

The campaign reaches beyond RKO's province and embraces Publix and Warner theatres as well. A. M. Botsford of the former and Dave Weshner of the Warner theatre department are working hand in hand with Radio to plug the picture.

Producers and Exhibitors Combine to Bring Back Kid Attendance to Theatres

F. W. C. Active

Los Angeles—Fox West Coast Theatres for months has been concentrating on kiddie appeal. The circuit sponsored formation of Mickey Mouse Clubs and matinees, and reaped big box-office results from its campaign. Especial attention is being given to pictures for the new season as regards kiddie appeal.

The drive being conducted is expected to result in increased grosses during the coming year over houses of the chain.

Kids Still Get Big Kick Out of Old Time Stunts

Proper combination of product and selling will remedy the situation caused by drift of kid patronage and bringing back child attendance, in the opinion of Publix home office executives.

William Saal, general director of film buying, points out that years ago the kids came to theatres to see serials, and cared nothing—the same as today—for the sex dramas.

"We must approximate the same type of entertainment today," he asserts, "with sufficient allowance, of course, for enlightened and changed conditions.

"With proper product, it shouldn't take long to build up a permanent matinee audience that will do much to stabilize gross," he continued. "Children form habits very easily, and with proper encouragement they should go for specials in a big way—because the kids don't dislike the movies. They've just stopped being interested in them."

Serials Go Big

Check-up made by Publix Opinion shows that wherever the serials, "The Indians Are Coming" and "The Lone Defender," have played, results have been "excellent."

"Stock activities in the nature of dog shows, airplane shows, singing clubs, etc., have proved beneficial in every case," Publix Opinion states. "In addition, managers are going in for special matinee shows at which an all juvenile program consisting of serial, suitable shorts and suitable features are shown. These are proving extremely popular."

Publix Revamping Its Forces on West Coast

Hollywood—Stanley Brown is to manage the Paramount and United Artists here, with Leon Levy transferred to Seattle and Portland as division manager, while "Bob" Blair, former Northwest chief, is to come here later to handle the Paramount with Brown going to United Artists.

Juvenile Patronage Sought in New Lineup of Pictures; Serials Big Draw

Efforts to win back the children to picture theatres of the nation will be one of the big developments of the 1930-31 season. With producers taking the lead in providing attractions with juvenile appeal, exhibitors are following in directing their efforts to booking and properly exploiting films which will induce the return of kiddie patronage.

Following the child vogue which accompanied cartoon comedies last year, in which the Mickey Mouse offerings played a leading part, producers have come to a realization that the alienation of child patronage through concentration on sophisticated dramas was bad business all around.

Such a course meant an immediate drop at the box offices, plus great potential future loss, through destroying the picture-going habit in the adult patrons of tomorrow.

Last spring Motion Picture News caused something of a sensation when it announced exclusively that Paramount was preparing a program in which kid appeal would be given major consideration, with the Tom Sawyer and western films calculated to reattract the waning child interest.

Other companies, sensing the way the wind was blowing, began falling in line, with the result that the new season will be marked by a great crop of kid pictures. These will include all manner of attractions with stories of youth and the outdoors relied upon chiefly to turn the trick.

Stone Going Abroad

Hollywood—Jack Stone of the Fox foreign department has left for Europe to look over the talker situation.

Going On Own

Pat J. Flaherty, organizer and general manager of Red Star Music Co., who will begin operations at the head of his own music publishing company about Dec. 1. Flaherty resigned early this month, declining Fox's offer to renew his contract. Difference of opinion on the allotting to De Sylva, Brown & Hendersan of music scores on a number of forthcoming Fox pictures is the asserted reason for Flaherty's resignation.

Appeal to Kids

Get back children patronage, is the substance of orders issued to managers of the Loew circuit. Stress is being placed on the danger to future business because of the childrens' drift away from picture theatres.

Serials and shorts with juvenile appeal are methods being employed by the chain to win back kid patronage. Our Gang and other Kiddie Club ideas also are being utilized.

Serials Aiding In Luring Back Juvenile Trade

Serials, because of the talker development, again are assuming proportions of the first water, according to John Balaban of Paramount Publix, who cites the success of chapter plays at kiddie matinees in Chicago to back up his contentions.

"The serial, which held such an important position in our programs years ago," said Balaban, "is gaining an equally important place in its talking version. As a means of getting the children back into the theatre it gives promise of being invaluable.

"It is no secret," he continues, "that the principal reason that child attendance has diminished since the advent of sound is because a majority of talking pictures hold no particular appeal for juveniles. Sophisticated drama and drawing room comedy, while perhaps elevating the standard of the entertainment we are enabled to present, have at the same time tended to keep children away.

"But talking serials, which they understand and enjoy, have the ability to transform scantily attended children's matinees into packed houses. Properly and economically exploited, these serials will get real business on Saturday and Sunday matinees."

Balaban's remarks are prompted by success of Universal's "The Indians Are Coming" at the Senate and Norshore theatres, Chicago. A number of serials, Balaban says, lend themselves to effective exploitation.

Manager, $400 Sought By Police at Toledo

Toledo—Elmer Smith, erstwhile manager of the Ohio for Jack O'Connell and Roy Sherman, is missing. So is about $400 worth of receipts, O'Connell reported to police. In accordance with the quaint American custom, both Smith and the sugar are being sought. W. LaVon Boone, formerly with the Charnas-Feigley chain of second-runs here, is the new manager of the Ohio.

Warners Seeking Vindictive Enemies as Rumor-Mongers; State Business Is O.K.

Shearer Resumes Soon

Hollywood—Norma Shearer is planning to turn Irving Thalberg, Jr., over to his nurses about the first of the year when she resumes picture work in "Gondola of Dreams."

Distributors to Cite 24 Alleged Errors in Court

and exhibitor was a matter of negotiation and bargaining between the parties negatived unlawful coercion."

Six Years of Effort

In support of their defense, distributors point out that: "The standard exhibitor contract and rules of arbitration of May 1, 1928, having been evolved after six years of experimentation, are reasonable and normal regulations for the intelligent conduct of the industry; so that whatever restraint they produce falls short of unlawful coercion.

"The impetus toward standardization came from the exhibitors themselves."

"The situation had become intolerable and a uniform contract had become a trade necessity."

"Negotiations for the contract had been under way since 1922."

"Every effort was made to secure adequate representation of the exhibitors."

"The exhibitors were largely responsible for the terms of the present contract."

"The terms of the standard exhibition contract aim to combat specific evils and are reasonably commensurate with the needs of the case."

"The procedure adopted and the standardization resulting are in line with a current industrial trend."

Arbitration is well adapted to the needs of the industry, distributors assert, pointing out the need for speedy termination of disputes; the costliness of other modes of settlement; the stabilization asserted to have resulted from arbitration and elimination of friction; and the general tendency toward arbitration in industry.

Held Fair in Practice

The "reasonable character" of the contract and arbitration rules is reflected by the manner in which they have worked out in practice, states the distributors' brief, declaring the enforcement methods "are reasonable and have been applied fairly by the Film Boards of Trade"; and "that exhibitors have given "unequivocal evidence of their endorsement of the contract and rules."

The decree is inconsistent with the "facts stipulated of records as well as with the court's findings of fact," distributors insist, asserting that the injunction should be directed "solely against the so-called 'supplemental agreements'."

Business Foes Believed to Be Back-Knifers; N. Y. Stock Exchange Aids Probe?

Who is trying to stab the Warners in the back?

The brothers won't talk, but the suspicion that unknown assailants, expert at their craft, are surreptitiously hurling knives at them, in the deliberate hope that some day they will land, runs through their minds.

Dodging all inquiries and refusing to answer questions leveled in their direction, it is nevertheless a fact that the Warners believe stories which credit them with having lost control of their organization are being deliberately broadcast by business enemies to discredit the organization and batter down the morale of the selling force.

When Ira Nelson, a minority stockholder, filed a bankruptcy suit against the Warners in August, advance word of the action was more or less common property among Wall Street brokerage houses. The Warners wondered why, investigated and, it is understood, traced the leak to a source identified with the business. Confirmation of this is, however, impossible to secure since no one over on West 44th Street will do any talking.

Exchange Investigating?

In financial circles, the current decision of the governors of the New York Stock Exchange to probe reports that some of its members were circulating damaging information about issues of highly competitive companies is, to some extent, credited to claims made by the Warners, or those acting for the Warners, that enemies were trying to give them the "works." This, too, cannot be verified.

Another slant is the widespread verbal and printed comment on the manner in which the Warners are reported to have over-extended themselves, coupled with which are stories of impaired credit and a shrinkage of liquid assets. These yarns are also on the list of things which the Warners propose to have explained.

The attitude of company executives today is calm and unruffled. There is no disposition at headquarters to minimize whatever mistakes have been made, but the stand taken is that if it is true the Warners have gone haywire in some of their expansion moves, other companies in the industry are in an identical spot. They insist, further, that business is good and that the forerunner of their 1930-1931 product is far beyond their anticipation in point of salable appeal.

First National, companion company of the Warner organization, states contracts in its possession today outstrip the number rolled up at this time last year by two to one. The impression also prevails that the backbone of the slump in theatre business has been broken and that the curve will swing upward from this point on.

Women's Tastes Responsible for Slush and Mush

Toledo—Prevalence of "slushy, gushy, mushy movies" in the current product was blamed on the tastes of women patrons by Philip J. Wood, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, in a talk before the Toledo Motion Picture Council.

Asserting that theatres are dependent upon women fans for support, Wood declared: "As long as American women will flock to see Gilbert and Garbo make passionate love, that is the type of picture the producers will make for them. When the women display a taste for a higher type of picture," he said, "they'll get it."

Taking a slam at censorship, Wood asked: "Why should any two persons decide what is best for six and a half million theatregoers in Ohio to see? Their tastes can't be identical with yours and mine. What they find objectionable might not displease us."

"Half-baked reformers who point the finger of scorn at motion pictures in general" also came in for a drubbing, Wood remarking: "They've seen only the worst pictures. If they had ever seen a picture like 'The Big Trail' or 'Abraham Lincoln' they wouldn't voice such sentiments."

Paramount to Produce in England for U. S. Market?

London—Paramount's ten-year lease for one of the stages of the British and Dominion Film Corp.'s studio which is W. E. equipped lends credence to the report that the company intends resuming production in England on or shortly after the dawn of the new year.

The dope is the pictures will not be mere quota films, which often means they are made at a minimum of expense and sometimes with the same amount of quality, but pictures that will be sent back to the States.

Pathe-RKO Still Talk It Over; Deal Almost Closed

The Sarnoff-Walker deliberations which will determine the fate of Pathe continue, with anticipation by those in the know, that Pathe will be sold to RKO under a plan which provides for the rooster brand to continue as is. The deal will give Radio its own newsreel.

Rembusch and Abramson Join Ranks to Battle "Whitewashed Movie Monopoly"

Reed in Scrap

Indianapolis—Former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri is to be attorney for Frank J. Rembusch in the anti-trust actions he has pending and plans against the Hays organization and its members, it is understood. Rembusch for some time has been conferring with the veteran Missouri Democratic leader.

Picture Chiefs Ignore Bids to Business Meet

Chicago—Officials and sponsors of the Seventh Conference of Major Industries, in session here from October 20 to 22, inclusive, expressed amazement when advised that prominent members of the industry who had been invited to attend the conferences and the Wednesday evening banquet which concluded them were ignorant of the purposes of the conference and the identities of the organization sponsoring them.

The Conferences of Major Industries are participated in by leaders of American Industry, finance and education, annually, and are for the purpose of discussing problems pertaining to American economics and education. Representation of the motion picture industry, as one of the large industries of the nation, and as a factor in education, was urged on the industry's leaders by officials of the industrial conference. Among those to whom invitations were extended were Adolph Zukor, Carl Laemmle, Harry M. Warner, William Fox and Cecil B. De Mille. Mr. Zukor's acceptance was the only one received.

Representatives of other industries and educational institutions who took part in this year's conference, as in other years, included P. E. Crowley, president of the New York Central Railroad; L. A. Downes, president of the Illinois Central Railroad; George M. Verity, chairman of the board of the American Rolling Mills Co.; Harvey S. Firestone, Jr., president of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co.; R. E. Wood, president of Sears-Roebuck, and Julius Rosenwald, chairman of the board; Silas H. Strawn, president of Montgomery Ward & Co.; Walter P. Chrysler of the Chrysler Motors Corp.; Samuel Insull, public utilities magnate; Mathew S. Sloan, president of the New York Edison Co.; Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, and numerous others.

The conferences are sponsored by the Institute of American Meat Packers, a scientific and industrial foundation representing 250 American packing houses. Various civic and educational institutions and organizations are annually enlisted to assist. Among them this year were the University of Chicago, the Chicago Association of Commerce, the Industrial Club of Chicago, and the Commercial Club of Chicago, each representing major industrial, civic and educational institutions of the Mid West.

The annual dinner which closes the conferences is attended only by leaders in education and industry.

Indiana Exhibitor to Enlist Aid Of Al Smith, Roosevelt In Court Action

Indianapolis—Frank J. Rembusch is mapping plans for his drive against what he terms "the movie monopoly." His next step will be the organization of the American Association Against Monopoly, which is to campaign for reforms in the picture business.

The battle, according to Rembusch, will be taken into the courts and into politics, and he is planning to ask former Governor Al Smith and Governor Roosevelt to become directors of the organization.

The new association, states Rembusch, will not be against any one party, creed or lawful business. He plans to finance its activities through sale of his book, "The Unaffiliated," now on the presses. The book denounces alleged monopoly in the industry.

Rembusch has accused the Department of Justice of whitewashing the industry in its investigations and prosecutions of the credit committee and arbitration cases, and asks that the Supreme Court postpone hearings on the arbitration case appeal to give him and his associates time to present more evidence.

Ivan Abramson, independent producer who is suing the Hays association and its members for alleged conspiracy, also is active with Rembusch in forming the new association. He also has asked the Department of Justice for a postponement of the Supreme Court hearing on arbitration, declaring that a decision may prejudice his case. Meanwhile, Abramson has submitted a series of questions to Hays and Adolph Zukor for answer before trial of his action.

Van Beuren Shorts May Go From Pathe to RKO Soon

Radio-Keith-Orpheum's 50 per cent buy into the Van Beuren Corp. may result in a switch of the five series of shorts handled by the latter corporation from Pathe to Radio Pictures. Several of the releasing contracts held by Van Beuren with Pathe are understood to expire shortly.

While the buy gives Radio's theatre organization a half ownership, control of three of the five directors remains with Amedee J. Van Beuren. The deal provides for RKO to play the short subject line-up 100 per cent in all of its theatres.

The series are Aesop's Fables, Topics of the Day, the Grantland Rice Sportlights, Song Sketches and Vagabond Adventures.

Grauman Turns Observer

Hollywood — Sid Grauman says he is going to sit on the sidelines and watch the other boys worry over business conditions. He has no definite plans for the present and is not anxious to make any until the picture business reaches normalcy.

Musicians in St. Louis Reject Compromise Bid

St. Louis—Proposed compromise which would have restored musicians to the first run houses here, but not to the Missouri or any subsequents, has been rejected by the union. Whether the operators and stagehands now will carry out their threatened sympathy strike is awaiting to be determined. Representatives of the musicians brought back the compromise offer after conferences with circuit heads in New York. If this strike goes through, it is probable that houses affected will be closed.

Free Pony Golf Is Wilmington Wrinkle

Miniature golf courses have been springing up so fast in the community of Richardson Park, just outside of Wilmington, that Charles Grier, a real estate broker, hit upon building a course which will be free to the community.

In the meantime many of the "Teenies" are drawing vast crowds until wee hours of the night, while a few others are faring rather poorly. One of the pioneers on Delaware avenue, in one of the best residential sections of Wilmington flourished during the summer months, but now it is deserted most of the time. The patrons seem to be going downtown course, convenient to the theatres, although cutting down the box-office receipts to a certain extent.

Change Fox Title in Run at K. C. House

"Let Us Be Gay," Fat Chance for Norma Shearer

Montreal—Just try to be gay in pictures in this hotsy-totsy berg. Norma Shearer has found out that even a native daughter isn't immune from the censor shears.

First of all, the board refused to consider a picture having the title of "The Divorcee" because of religious principles. It was finally presented under the title of "The Love Career" and there were changes in the story to fit.

Norma tried to be gay during Famous Players' Prosperity Week with "Let Us Be Gay" at the Palace, but word got around that the censors had used the scissors again and business at the Palace wasn't as prosperous as expected by Manager George Rotsky.

Publix Subsidiary for Virginia Houses Formed

Exhibitors Yawn at Salesmen's Pretty Stories; Wait for Price Break

It will have to be full steam ahead, generated via all forms of selling media, to push sales quotas over the top this season.

Unaffiliated circuits and lone house operators, whose aggregate rentals admittedly represent the revenue from which national distributors eke their profits, are in no rush to sign contracts for 1930-1931 programs, Motion Picture News learns. And while sales managers are understood to express no concern over the ultimate fate of their quotas, the realization is spreading that their organizations and their exploitation and advertising departments will have to get behind the product and sell it hard.

Practically every distributor is set with its national circuit bookings, or well on the way toward consummation of those deals, but subsequent runs are sitting back undisturbed by the selling barrages directed at them by salesmen.

This condition is not peculiar to any one distributor, but has a wide application throughout the industry. The usual reasons for waiting to see which way the circuits go are ascribed to the situation, but regardless of how the set-up is analyzed, the fact is that exhibitors, in many instances, are not buying and sales costs appear to be on the increase.

Reports from all over the country indicate that salesmen are being compelled to visit and re-visit exhibitors in order to land contracts and, while to some extent this practice has always existed in the trade, the condition has rarely, if ever, been quite so pronounced as prevails this season.

Bucket of Gin Story Denounced

Chicago—Tom Gilliam, president of the local Warner Club, while looking about for eligible prospects, sent a request to the Coston office for a list of Warner theatre employees. Several days later an eight-page memorandum, bearing about 300 names, was received. The list represented the personnel of the Warner houses in Illinois and Indiana, operators, janitors, ushers and tickket takers included.

The club will stage a Hallowe'en party, the night of October 30, in the Warner exchange building here. Officers emphatically denied a report that members would be permitted to bob for apples in a bucket of gin.

Too Many Seats Sending Managers To Wailing Wall

Toledo—Two down and eight to go is the current score in this heavily over-seated community. The season started with nine houses playing first run pictures and one grinding away with Mutual burlesque.

The Empire, local haven of hip-wavers, folded a couple of weeks ago. The State, which was the only first-run picture house not in the downtown district, has switched its policy to subsequent runs. An unverified rumor has one of the film theatres on the main stem following suit any day now.

"The Big House" is standing 'em on the sidewalks at Loew's Valentine this week, but until the arrival of that widely publicized opera in town business was so universally bum that one kibitzer suggested the city ought to erect a wailing wall in St. Clair St. for the use of house managers.

Allied to Resort to Court Action If Zoning Plan Is Foisted Upon Illinois

A Surprise

Threatened court action by Chicago independents if efforts are made to force them to subscribe to a zoning plan they do not approve comes as a surprise, as it is generally understood that C. C. Pettijohn had the okay of the government before the zoning of the country was begun. However, the independents feel that efforts to prevent double-featuring and giveaways is a breach of the spirit which prompted the consent decree in the Fox West Coast protection trial.

"Publicity" Is Chain Reply to Horwitz' Fight

Houston—"Publicity" is the way Houston exhibitors of the big chain theatres sum up the fight of Will Horwitz, independent operator of three subsequent run theatres here, against the protection policy of the chains.

Horwitz has brought to the public through display ads, hand bills and screen advertising blistering indictments of the "big chains," "money hogs," who are seeking to force him to raise the prices on his pictures. He lost a recent plea in Federal Court for an injunction restraining Publix and other producers from withholding his pictures 120 days.

Horwitz prices at his largest theatre are five and 15, and five and 25 cents after 6 P. M. At his other two theatres prices are always five and 15 cents. He is still showing at these prices, but his product is on last year's contract.

"Horwitz is a showman," said one exhibitor. "He knows his public. He will show these last year's contract pictures at old prices, and when they are used up, will sign the new contract and raise his prices. Then he will say to the dear public: 'The money hogs made me do it; but look what a fight I made for you!'"

Allied Maps Plans For New Offensive

Washington—Allied States Association soon is to invade another state territory to form an affiliated unit at the request of independent exhibitors, the organization states. The meeting already has been scheduled, although the place is confidential. Conditions in this and other territories from which requests have been received now are being investigated. Recently an Allied unit was formed at St. Louis.

Demands Right to Run Theatres In Own Way and Hints at "Consequences"

Chicago—No zoning plan will be approved by the Allied unit here and any attempt to force its members to subscribe to a general plan without their consent will be carried to the courts.

This is the substance of a warning sounded by a spokesman of the exhibitor unit, who says the association will ignore further changes made by the zoning committee. The independents unanimously rejected the proposed schedules.

"Running our theatres in our own way is our business," he said. "Any attempt to regulate the conduct of our business for us, against our wishes, constitutes conspiracy, and will be met with court action. If we and our businesses are left alone, we shall make no objection to what they are able to saddle on anyone else."

The zoning committee, meanwhile, has completed its listing of downstate towns, other than those in which Publix is represented, this week. No other change in the plan as published exclusively in Motion Picture News two weeks ago was made. The clause regulating give-aways, or bargain admissions, was not altered, despite the objections of independents. This clause, it appears, however, will prove to be just one of those things—though it will remain on the books no attempt will be made to invoke arbitrary penalties for its infraction.

Discretion is being used by all exchanges in putting the plan, which has not been approved, into work. Any and all objections to its provisions, from any and all quarters, are being politely heard and compromised before a contract is actually drawn.

Grief for Exchanges

Failure of the Chicago committee in drawing up its new plan of release and protection to specify the "C" release theatres is bringing plenty of grief to local exchanges, now that very discreet attempts are being made to incorporate as much of the zoning plan as possible in contracts.

Pre-release "A" theatres, definitely designated in the new plan, play the third, fourth and fifth weeks (after the Loop). Pre-release "B" houses, also classified in the plan, play the sixth and seventh weeks, while the pre-release "C" houses, given no description whatever in the plan, play the eighth week, or immediately preceding general release.

Taking advantage of the plan's failure to specify the "C" release houses, every exhibitor in town who is operating something a shade better than a livery stable is now claiming "C" release privileges in buying film. If he is successful in convincing a single exchange that he belongs in "C," the rest of the road is paved for him. He merely has to show his contract at the other exchanges and all are obliged to make the same deal with him or lose the sale. Exhibitors who are refused the "C" classification deal leave the exchange in a huff and take their business next door, even though, were they to ask for the same deal in the exchange which finally gets their business, they would in all probability be turned down. The disappointed ones, also, hold out for much lower prices than they have formerly paid for film.

The situation is causing a lot of trouble and ill-feeling but, despite this, it appears that there is little chance of the "C" houses being designated.

A Fine Job

Universal has given another example of its aggressiveness and showmanship by issuing a second announcement booklet for the new season. The 42-page book, being sent to exhibitors now, contains a complete and revised line-up of the new season's product, supplying information not available when the first announcement was published in Motion Picture News.

Milton Silver, advertising chief, is responsible for the entire stunt and has done a fine job of it. He has made expert use of colors in the book.

HAGE.

Protection Issue Is Highlight of Suit at Rochester

Rochester—Although permitted to finish a second-week run of "Holiday" at the Regent, after shifting it from the Eastman, Paramount Publix last week still faced a suit for damages to the Linwood Amusement Co., operator of the Strand, which claimed second run rights. Pathe also is named a defendant in the suit.

Paramount Publix was permitted to complete the last three days of the week at the Regent when Supreme Court Justice Rodenbeck set aside a temporary restraining order against showing the film granted by Supreme Court Justice Taylor. Attorneys for Paramount Publix argued at the hearing that a film does not become second run until a lapse of time has occurred between showings. "Holiday" opened at the Regent the day after finishing at the Eastman. Herbert E. Kaufman is manager of the Regent and Carroll Fenyvessey of the Strand.

Modesty

Chicago—Ivan Lebedeff, RKO featured player who won distinction through his performance in "Street Girl," made himself a lot of friends in Chicago during a recent visit here. He was acclaimed as "regular" by such experts on the subject as Jack Hess, Bill Brumberg and Frank Young. Lebedeff stated he did not wish to be a star in pictures—just an assignment that will give him a chance at the work he likes will suit him, he said. Lebedeff was advised while here that a fan club has been organized for him, the members of which are each pledged to be responsible for no less than ten customers for each and every picture playing here in which he has a part.

Spoor Wide Film Achieves Depth, Natural Vision

By Sherwin S. Kane

Chicago—Spoor-Berggren wide film and projection equipment were given their first theatre try-out at a secret screening for RKO executives at the State-Lake here early Sunday morning. "Danger Lights," a Radio railroad drama, photographed on 70 mm. film with Spoor-Berggren cameras, was the picture which provided the test for the third dimension process and projection equipment.

The vastness of the projection surface affords a lasting impression of the Spoor screening. The picture occupied a full three-quarters of the space enclosed by the proscenium arch, which measures approximately 50x36 feet. The light of the projected picture, amounting almost to brilliancy, is a second impressive spectacle provided by the Spoor equipment. Both factors combine to bring into stark relief on the screen the most minute objects and details, such as rings worn on the fingers of principals, fields in which blades of grass and grain are separate and distinct, bolts on pieces of machinery, buttons on clothing, lacings on shoes, and innumerable other details which pass unnoticed in pictures photographed on standard film.

Remarkable in view of the enlarged screen surface and unprecedented clarity of the picture is the fact that the result obviously is not obtained by magnification. If this were so, the "grain" of the film would be apparent and, close up, the photographed objects would reveal a thinness that the closest observation of the screen did not disclose. The pictures are remarkable for their naturalness and merit the term that has been applied to them by Spoor "natural vision." This, more nearly than any other term, is the proper description for the film.

The impression of depth, or a third dimen-

Wide Film Merry-Go-Round Ride to Be Continued with Grandeur Run

Motion picture business is on another merry-go-round trying to dope out the public viewpoint toward wide screen pictures. With the Coast a hubbub of wide screen conversation, distributors are finding that their ear-to-the-ground soundings on the wide film development are falling short of the mark.

M-G-M was first in on the present wide screen wave, opening its first Realife picture, "Billy, the Kid," in Detroit, New York and Kansas City. The results have been below anticipations in the introduction of a process which was heralded as revolutionary.

At the Capitol, New York, "Billy, the Kid" will do around $60,000 on the week, which is not so hot. However, the dopesters say it is the fault of the picture rather than public apathy toward wide screen pictures.

Uncertainty to Continue

Meanwhile, more uncertainty probably will follow reception of "The Big Trail" on Grandeur film, opening Friday at the Roxy, for the reason that the grosses will not properly reflect public attitude toward wide film, as the picture probably would be a box-office hit on standard film.

M-G-M has made no plans for production of other Realife pictures, pending public reaction to "Billy, the Kid," meanwhile other producers are preparing to place wide screen pictures on the market.

The Realife Lens

In 12 Cities

Marketing plans for Realife, M-G-M wide screen process, will depend upon public reaction in 12 trial cities. These are Detroit, New York, Kansas City, Providence, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Washington, Kansas City, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit and Los Angeles.

Realife is photographed on 70 mm film and then reduced to 35 mm positive. This, it is said, eliminates defects common to magnified images and produces clearer definition.

The size of the projected picture may be regulated to fit any screen requirements. The only special projection equipment necessary is: special aperture plate with openings as follows: top, .945; bottom, .910; width, .473; a special Bausch & Lomb super-cinephor lens, and a special cylindrical condensing system such as is used on high intensity lights. The special equipment is said to cost around $100.

Fox to Hold Up Grandeur Until Market Is Ripe

Hollywood—With no wide film pictures slated for production at this time, it is understood that Fox Grandeur will not be used until the demand for the wide film reaches a point where it warrants the added cost of its production.

None other than Winfield Sheehan, head of the Fox studios here, is reported to have said that wide film pictures were out at Fox, at least for some time to come. Fox pioneered this phase of the business and spent several hundred thousands of dollars in perfecting their devices. However, the cost to the exhibitor in machines to show this film is so great that the idea is impractical for universal use.

Other companies are experimenting in the wide film but most of them are using wider celluloid for the negative prints and then printing the positive on standard film. When projected this gives the wide film effect, and the difference between it and Grandeur is negligible. "Realife" film is made on this plan and "Billy the Kid" is the first picture to be made with this process by M-G-M, owners of the device.

United Artists have a process which involves the same principle and "The Bat Whispers," which is now being edited, will be the company's first venture into this field. Further plans for the use of wide screens will be held up by United Artists until the effect of this talker is known. All the scenes for this picture were taken inside and no outdoor shots were made. Just how these will appear is a leading question at present, as the effect of wide screens for outdoors is already known.

M-G-M also plans to show "The Great Meadow" in Realife film and it is being shot on that type of film at the present time.

"Realife" Hailed As Enhancement Of Film's Sweep

New York critics agree that "Realife," M-G-M's new wide screen process, provides added scenic embellishment, but generally regard its use for close-ups and intimate dramatic portrayal as not always effective.

One critic maintains that some of the scenes in "Billy, the Kid," upon which the New York dailies base their reactions, were blurred and for this "Realife" is held responsible. Most of them, however, have nothing but praise for the manner in which the sweep of the outdoor scenes is enhanced via the new method.

What they have to say is this:

AMERICAN—The "Realife" screen proves effective in panorama shots of the gorgeous background against which this story has been filmed. But in more intimate sequences it is somewhat distracting.

DAILY MIRROR—Wide film photography has reached its greatest heights in this stirring, gigantic outdoor thriller. The awe-inspiring scenery of the western plains and mountains is reproduced magnificently, with a depth and clarity heretofore only hinted by the experimental giant screens. And enacted in these magnificent surroundings is a real thriller, packed with action and suspense. . . . "Realife" makes the chases, a fire, the battles doubly exciting. And the scenic grandeur surpasses all you would imagine.

DAILY NEWS—It is far and away the most tremendous picture of the outdoors yet undertaken by the microphonic camera. Stretches of prairie land are photographed by the new Realife process which presents depth so essential in a production of this nature.

EVENING JOURNAL—. . . it presents some of the most striking out-door shots yet filmed. And the scenic sweep of the production is enhanced by the use of "Realife," which gives an illusion of depth to the vivid backgrounds. . . . And the wide film heightens the action, especially in the long shots where much more can be seen than is possible on the standard-size screen.

EVENING WORLD—Of course, the real draw of this picture is in the fact that it is photographed upon Realife, which is to M-G-M what Grandeur is to Fox and Magnascope to Paramount. Realife is larger than the other two, being about three times as wide as the regular screen and half again as high. It fills the entire proscenium of the Capitol.

Its inventors claim that it gives unprecedented depth and clarity to the photography, and in some instances it does. But, like all wide-screen photography, it is blurred more often than not. Then, too, because of tthe wide-screen photography, some difficulty doubtless was experienced in placing microphones at advantageous spots, for a number of the speaking parts are undisguishable. Many a time you are unable to understand what the characters are saying.

There's one thing, of course. Because of the wide screen, you get a full sweep of the action. When Billy, the Kid, is being besieged in a ranch house or when the action is out in the open, you get a full view of it rather than having to see it through medium shots and close-ups. And this, it seems to us, might prove in time to be a saving grace for the screen, for it might conceivably bring back that action which the talkies have curbed.

GRAPHIC—The greater dimension movie is effective in outdoor sequences, adding to the realism of the natural settings.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—The device is called Realife and it is supposed to provide not only scenic breadth, but also stereoscopic effect. The screen employed in the display occupies the entire proscenium of the theater and must be at least three times the breadth of the average screen, and a bit higher. It is admirably devised for the portrayal of panoramic views of outdoor scenery, but not entirely effective in the more intimate scenes. Probably it will be more successful in the latter field when the producers realize that it means the doom not only of the close-up but of its relative, the semi-close up. That is, of course, if the Realife screen actually proves triumphant. Anyway, the device is hardly more successful at providing the third dimension than its predecessors have been.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—In the order of their importance an invention takes precedence over the film at the Capitol Theater this week and, as far as I am concerned, "Realife" serves it purpose well in those panoramic scenes where an illusion of depth is intended to make the distant action more believable. The film that has the distinction of introducing this new optical effect to the screen is "Billy the Kid." From a standpoint of locale, the sweeping panorama of the New Mexico hills provides a splendid background to test the illusory qualities of "Realife." * * * Without wandering into technicalities about the method whereby the picture is filmed, it is enough to say that "Realife" endeavors to give an illusion of depth. At times, where the scope of the scene is big enough, this new invention seems to achieve that effect. At least it is noticeable that faraway objects can be seen with the same clarity of vision as those close to the camera's eye. I believe that the process gives a greater clarity of vision than Magnascope—but that its stereoscopic qualities are not as great as those of Grandeur or any other actual wide-film throw where film above the standard size is used instead of lens devices.

POST—In order to dispose as quickly as possible of this "Realife" business I might as well say that to my untechnical eyes it looks like nothing more than an ordinary photographic enlargement, containing all the defects of blurred outlines and hazy backgrounds which commonly accrue to such pictures.

To be sure, there is a certain immediate impressiveness in the large screen but as soon as the eye becomes accustomed to it the heroic figures seem to shrink back to the dimensions of the ordinary film. It has been asserted that "Realife" captures the elusive third dimension, but this was not apparent. Though I tried hard to be impressed, I found the perspective as flat as ever. Indeed, the tonal values of the old-fashioned film were altogether lacking in the new process, some of the scenes being as feeble in their contrasts of light and shade as the earlier impressionistic photographs of Dr. Arnold Genthe. * * * The scenery, which is what is known as majestic, is given full sweep by the enlarged screen, and a certain grandeur results.

SUN—"Realife," as the big, wide screen at the Capitol is referred to, is Grandeur films on a wider and higher scale. It is effective, principally, on account of its increased size, but it tends to scatter the sound and the interest by its inability or refusal to focus on mere intimate objects such as people It is, though, excellent in its panoramic effect.

TELEGRAM—The screen employed occupies the entire proscenium of the theatre and must be at least three times as wide and considerably higher than the average screen. Like its predecessor, Grandeur Film, it is admirable when used for panoramic views of ourdoor settings, but its effectiveness is dispelled when it deals with more intimate scenes.

Then, too, it is neither more nor less successful than its predecessor in providing the so-called third dimensional effects, and it seems to me that it scatters the sound considerably.

TIMES— * * * has the decided advantage over the Grandeur and other wide-screen inventions of being projected from a standard-size positive print. The result is tremendously effective, for the picture not only fills a screen virtually the full width of the Capitol stage, but it has an increased height, which other such inventions did not possess. It is questionable, however, whether the images are as sharp as they were in the Grandeur productions, although the outlines are never perceptibly blurred.

This picture is chiefly noteworthy for this enlarged screen idea, for the story is merely a moderately entertaining and often unconvincing Western melodrama. The scenes in the open, however, are impressive, and often they have a stereoscopic illusion, which was also beheld in the Grandeur subjects. * * *

The enormous screen permits the director to unfurl his story with fewer close-ups than would be employed in the standard-size screen, but Mr. Vidor still takes advantage occasionally of the close-up to emphasize the expressions or actions of the characters. * * *

The views on the wide screen are so compelling that when one goes to see a picture on an ordinary sized screen the standard image looks absurdly small.

WORLD—A number of its exterior scenes, embracing the mountain country of the sun-flooded Southwest, are made impressive and beautiful as they fling themselves upon the vast canvas, and in these views of nature's own making "Billy the Kid" is at its best.

Detroit—"Not since the debut of the talking picture four years ago has the movie industry developed anything so important in bettering its entertainment facilities as the Realife process of projecting film," declared Harold Heffernan in commenting on "Billy the Kid," now current at the Paramount.

He says the new invention was greeted enthusiastically at a preview held here and adds the reaction of the audience then present "made it clearly apparent that the small screen is due to pass out of the running very shortly."

His reactions are these:

"The Realife process offers many valuable points in its favor. It naturally presents a wider range for the eye to rove over, but its most intriguing feature is the illusion of depth that it manages somehow to convey in certain groups and backgrounds.

"In one sequence of the premier picture, "Billie the Kid," is a scene presenting foreground action which calls for a rescue. While the action is in progress in front of the camera the audience can see, apparently miles away, the approach of the rescue party. Thus the old close up and cut-back style of relating an exciting incident is despensed with.

"By using a special film stock the grainy effect which might be expected of an enlarged picture such as this is avoided. The detail, even in panoramas of mountainous backgrounds, stands out with a surprising clarity and definition."

sion, is obvious; yet not completely convincing at all times. Outdoor scenes, where panorama shot were possible, appeared to fulfill the third dimension promise with greater effect than indoor scenes; though in the latter there appeared to be a marked difference where props were sparsely used in backgrounds and where they were not. Crowded or solid backgrounds dispelled the illusion noticeably, in some instances.

From a visual consideration the picture was the most satisfactory. All angles of vision were equally good. Side-views appeared to have equal effectiveness with center views; and first rows with last. No distortion was apparent from a variety of positions in the house. The only defect apparent was a minor blurring of objects in motion from a close-up position. This characteristic, however, was decidedly unobtrusive and detracted nothing from photographic or action values.

From the first row, looking almost directly up at the picture, no distortion in the way of elongation was apparent. It was as though one looked out of a window at a scene enacted in a nearby building at a slightly higher elevation. There was no more discrepancy in the view than there might be in vision altered only by perspective.

Distortion Absent

From extreme side aisles the screen presented the same faithful picturization. Distortion was nowhere apparent. Moreover, from side aisle seats, the third dimension impression in many shorts was accentuated. Objects "stood out" from their backgrounds without obstruction or distortion much in the manner in which they actually do when they are viewed more from the side than from directly in front.

At the rear of the theatre and from a variety of balcony positions the view of the screen was as true as from seats in the center of the house. The enlarged projection surface and the "lightness" of the picture on the screen were the obvious factors in achieving this result, and indicated that the same result might be attained in vastly larger theatres. (The State-Lake seats 2,800).

Photographic results, apart from the details which are brought into prominence, are, in many respects, remarkable for their "naturalness." An oncoming train does not rush up and, in a flash, envelop the entire screen. It advances with apparent, yet natural speed, and when it passes in front of the camera it still retains a proper perspective, passage and position in relation to its background. Remarkable, too, is the fact that objects surrounding a speeding object are not distorted by the action photograph. In other words, not only the object in motion retains its natural outlines and proportions, but so do the secondary objects which it passes. It is in this, as in many other respects, the nearest representation of natural vision afforded the screen.

LeRoy and Lauste Honorary Awards in S. M. P. E. Blocked by "Dirty Politics"

Search on For Old Relics

Historical committee of the S. M. P. E. has launched a wide-spread search to reach the industry's attics and dark cellars, for all old relics, films and documents importantly concerned in the early history of the business. These will be placed in a special repository to be given over to films in the Museum of Peaceful Arts, which is located in the towers of the New York Daily News building on East 42nd Street.

Voice Dubbles Suggested for 'Dumb' Players

Favorites of the screen who lost favor abroad with advent of sound can be reinstated to their former high places simply by use of "dummies" in talkers.

This interesting fact was revealed at the S. M. P. E. convention in a survey made by C. J. North, chief, and N. D. Golden, assistant chief of the M. P. Division, Dept. of Commerce, who suggested that producers tear down the mask which hides an unnecessary condition, and state, "frankly," in an explanatory title to foreign audiences, "that while the actors do not speak the language in question, it was considered fair in the interests of realism to employ voice dubbles, so that their favorite stars of the silent film days could still be brought before them, even though they could not speak the language."

The old system of writing foreign-language captions on the screen of American-made talkers shown abroad, as explanatory of the English dialogue, is out of the question and only in "musicals" which have a minimum of dialogue may this be done, the survey asserts.

North and Golden likewise sounded the deathknell for dubbing sound pictures. The two chief methods of talker production, they stated, rested in production of multi-linguals at Hollywood or some foreign studio center. Both have many advantages and disadvantages, they declared, and it is yet too soon to judge which is the most practical.

Stiff Battle Ahead

While American companies are readying for a battle, they will be met with strong opposition, by companies abroad, for supremacy of the film markets in Europe, it was pointed out.

"There is a widespread feeling that European producers are adapting themselves more readily to sound than they did to silent production. From less than 650 theatres sound equipped early in 1929, total installation number has jumped to 4,950, exclusive of Russia."

With American companies contributing approximately 150, and foreign companies, including quota pictures, sending in 300, the foreign field will have more foreign-version talkers on hand this season than since inception of sound, according to the government chiefs.

New Standard Changeover to Be Approved

Theatre owners throughout the country will soon be asked to accept a new standard for changeovers, final draft of which now is in the hands of the Projection and Standards committees of the S.M.P.E., as forwarded by the technicians' branch of the Academy of M. P. Arts & Sciences. It merely awaits indorsement of the S.M.P.E. before becoming effective, having already passed muster before big producer-distributor-exhibitors.

Following the trend to revise old practices now obsolete because of sound, and formulate new standards, suggested plans for an improved type of projection room are to be made for widespread use of the industry.

Crawford Quits S.M.P.E. Committee at Convention

Resignation of Merritt Crawford as a member of the historical committee was tendered at the convention of the S.M.P.E., which terminated Thursday night in New York. Crawford's refusal to further serve was as a result of the society governors turning down honorary membership of Eugene Lauste and Jean LeRoy, pioneer inventors.

8,500 Seats for Picture House in "Radio City"

RKO will have direct charge of the various theatre structures to be incorporated in the RCA-Rockefeller "Radio City" in New York, to be occupied late in 1932 or early 1933, according to R. N. Goldsmith, vice-president of RCA, in an address before members of the S.M.P.E. The film theatre will seat 8,500, with the vaude house having a 5,000 capacity.

Service!

In last week's issue of Motion Picture News appeared detailed abstracts of majority of papers and discussions delivered at the New York convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Edison Faction Fighting Crawford Prevents Awards to Old Film Pioneers

Sensational charges and recriminations said to have been hurled at a closed session of the board of governors have unearthed what many have branded as "a dirty political trick" to prevent Eugene Augustine Lauste and Jean Acme LeRoy, aged and worn-out pioneers, from securing honorary memberships in the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which a majority of the technical association believe they so justly deserve.

Led by Merritt Crawford, a bitter fight has been under way in the society for over a year to honor the aged inventors, but political maneuverings of a certain element blocked the awards. Despite unanimous approval of historical committees of the society, voiced on two occasions, the antagonists have been successful in check-mating the award.

"Dirty politics" are blamed, and they revolved around Crawford's past charges that Edison is the commercial and not the inventive genius of motion pictures, which prompted Edison cohorts on the board of governors to retaliate, and punish Crawford through Lauste-LeRoy, who are understood to be but innocent bystanders to the fray. Climax of the affair is expected to result in splitting the society wide open for severe criticism by the industry.

Edison Okay, Others Not?

When the spotlight at the meeting was turned on the Edison "lieutenants," the latter charged that men like Edison, already an honorary member, should be recognized by the society because of their great success in commercializing motion pictures, and no one should be honored for contributions to motion picture science, this despite the fact that entire sympathy of the S.M.P.E. is supposed to lean toward inventors and not commercialization specialists. If commercialists only were to be tendered honorary awards, it is pointed out by insiders, men like Zukor, Laemmle, William Fox and others would be eligible.

The Edison fighters further charged that Crawford "probably was getting something out of it," full knowing the impossibility of this because of the economic status both of LeRoy and Lauste.

LeRoy is a pioneer inventor of the projection machine and Lauste built and designed the first wide film projector, inventing the "loop" and indispensable second sprocket. Lauste is also understood to have been the first inventor to record and reproduce sound and scene upon the same film. His pioneer discoveries have furnished many of the fundamentals of the modern talking picture. Exhaustive research of Bell Telephone Laboratories, the Historical Committee of the S.M.P.E., and others, during the past two years, have established these claims to be true.

Industry Turns About Face on 65 and 70 And Goes to Work on 50 mm. as Standard

Cost of Complete Changeover Would Be Too High, Bringing About Further Depression

As exclusively stated in Motion Picture News two weeks ago, industry leaders will not plug development of any wide film which necessitates wholesale junking of present equipment as used in production and exhibition.

This decision is prompted by certain technical obstacles which 65mm. or 70mm. present in theatres and the desire to steer clear of the giant financial burden which the industry would be forced to shoulder, jeopardizing its economic structure at a time when business conditions in the industry are showing the first signs of brightness following a hectic period of depression.

It has been learned from authoritative sources that financial and technical moguls will immediately set to work developing 50mm. as the standard wide film width. This standard, it is stated, will only require slight changes in present equipment and is also more practical from a projection standpoint, being more naturally proportioned than 70mm. which is just double the width of currently used 35mm. stock.

Raw stock interests and large equipment manufacturers who would benefit most by a changeover to 70mm., are understood to be in sympathy with the practicability of 50mm., so much so that many sponsors of 65mm. and 70mm. stand ready to junk millions in research and laboratory equipment to push 50mm.

50 mm. Already Agreed Upon

That the Academy of M. P. Arts & Sciences, through its technical bureau, and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, working through its Standards Committee, have already secretly approved adoption of 50mm. is said to be a fact, both organizations merely holding official announcement of their findings until the final okay comes from Hollywood producers.

Placing the sound track on film has rushed through the engineers' laboratories development of wide film, first talked of at least five years ago before sound started its revolutionary movement in the industry. Taking away this space from the picture frame by sound, gave 35mm. stock a picture with undesirable proportion, which were corrected by masking the height. The smaller area of picture requires a greater magnification of the film to cover the same size of screen, and, as the magnification had already been pushed close to the limit set by the graininess of the film and the unsteadiness in the projector, the utilization of a portion of the film for the sound track has made the projection of the pictures of even moderate screen dimensions not altogether satisfactory.

Simultaneous with the general introduction of sound has come a desire on the part of the industry for a larger projected picture which will include more action.

Wider Screens Are Taboo

"Although several methods have been suggested for the realization of large screen pictures with the present 35 mm. film," states the S.M.P.E. Standards Committee report as given at its New York convention this week, "this committee feels that none of these methods offers a permanent solution to the problem." Which means that wider film, and not wide screens is the only solution.

"There are many obvious advantages to wide film," the report states. "It not only permits a sound track of more satisfactory width than in use at present, but it makes possible large screen pictures having a greater variety of composition and more action without exceeding a practical limit of magnification."

Concrete evidence that engineers have been instructed to keep in mind the industry's economic condition is discovered in the Standard Committee's admission that "in considering a new standard for motion picture film, this committee has been guided not alone by engineering principles but by considerations of the cost to the industry of a new standard and of the necessary transition period.

Speed Standard Adopted

Present standard speed for running film through projectors has been changed by the S.M.P.E. Standards Committee from 80 feet a minute for silents, to 90.

The 90-feet-a-minute speed for sound remains the same.

Standard Release Prints, as adopted by the technicians' bureau of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences, were approved by the S.M.P.E., which at the New York convention referred its members to the Oct. 11 issue of Motion Picture News for full text of the new schedule.

The next step in theatre standardization will be a standard for screen brightness, which now runs in screen color from a bright yellow to a blue.

The Standards Committee likewise urged exhibitors to entrust theatre sound control not to an operator but to an experienced engineer.

S.M.P.E. Recommends Adoption Of a 1.8 to 1 Ratio of Width to Height

"It is obvious," it was stated, "that any practical recommendation must involve the ratio of screen width to screen height that is already established within reasonably narrow limits by both the proscenium arch and the balcony cut-off in existing theatres. An investigation of this subject shows that, whereas a few of the larger theatres can use a ratio of width to height as great as 2 to 1, the ratio for the smaller theatres is usually less. After careful consideration of this subject, this committee recommends the adoption of a 1.8 to 1 ratio of width to height as the best compromise. This ratio seems to be not out of line with prevailing sentiment among members of the Academy.

65 or 70 mm. Impractical

"During the deliberations of the subcommittee, it became increasingly evident that the adoption of release prints with a width in the neighborhood of 65 to 70 mm. would be economically impracticable for a large proportion of theatres. It seemed desirable, therefore, to give consideration to a film size intermediate between these dimensions and the present 35 mm. standard. We are working on a layout that will permit the use of the 1.8 to 1 ratio and that will provide for a wider sound track and more suitable margins. We are attempting to assign dimensions to this film that will permit the most economic use of existing 35 min. equipment.

"While the specification of the release print dimensions is the problem of most importance, this committee has under consideration a negative of such proportions that it may be printed by optical reduction on the new intermediate film size or by contact on a larger film for the de luxe houses. An agreement on the above plan has been reached so recently that there has been insufficient time to complete the final details for presentation to the society," it is stated.

The Wide Film Mess

Two months' of concentrated research on advantages and disadvantages of various methods of procuring wide pictures is expected to clear up the muddy mess in which the industry has been hurled with failure of its production and engineering chiefs to arrive at a practicable standard.

Lester Cowan, director of the technicians' branch of the Academy in Hollywood, has secretly been chosen, by all interests, to straighten out the situation, Motion Picture News learns, exclusively.

Cowan departed from New York yesterday, following conferences with technical moguls at the S.M.P.E. convention in New York.

The Exhibitor's "Pal"

If full entertainment value of a wide sound film can only be secured by using another projector and another projectionist, what matters these little things in an exhibitor's life, stated J. I. Crabtree, president, at the banquet of the S.M.P.E. Wednesday night in New York.

And this despite the heavy financial burdens under which theatre owners have been made to labor in recent years because of forced mechanical changes brought about by sound.

Crabtree told the engineers that sound, in its present form, must be bettered if patronage of the American audience is to be held. Which prompted one exhibitor wit to chirp: "are dese engineer guys trying to tell us sumtin'?"

Industry Is Carefully Picking Its Way in the Adoption of Television

Big Chiefs Are Plenty Hazy Over Economic Status of Ether Movies

The unimportant part which television played in the four-day session of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at New York is said by observers of technical progress to be significant of the fact that the industry intends to watch its step, in a most cautious manner, before accepting this tremendous new factor as part of the electrics' scheme of entertainment. This is to be the policy followed, they say, at least until wide-film, or a wide screen and the obstacles which the latter present, have been fully coped with, and the economic status of television more clearly defines itself.

Only one of the 42 discussions at the New York meeting involved television, and this lone contribution was merely repetition of a demonstration given innumerable times in the Bell Telephone laboratories, which is sponsoring, among other television angles, the H. E. Ives televisor.

Economics the Big Point

The economic status of widespread adoption of television has not been definitely fixed in the minds of powers who control the nerve-strings of the industry, particularly as it affects practical marketing methods, and the relation and influence of the home angle with regular theatre entertainment to be offered by television. These factors alone, and without considering the many technical imperfections yet to be corrected, are sufficient to halt television for many years, it is said.

C. Father Jenkins, "the father of television" in this country, told a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative at the May meeting of the Society of M. P. Engineers at Washington, that at least five years will elapse before television would assume practical proportions to allow for theatre adoption. He did agree, however, that a much shorter period, possibly two or three years, would find television occupying an important spot in the radio field, broadcasting directly to homes much in the same manner as present radio programs are being used.

Television and "Radio City"

RCA-Rockefeller's "Radio City," on which it is said, the combined interests will spend $250,000,000 for a group of theatre buildings in mid-town New York, may be expected to be held in abevance until television is further developed. This, so insiders state, because RCA is interested in building up the legend, "the home of television," around its proposed theatre community, and "Radio City" without full development of television, technically and economically, would defeat the purpose for which the center was originally designed.

British Television Unit Here

Baird Television, England's most important television unit, will attempt to steal a march on American companies, with plans already nearing completion for a wholesale invasion of the field in this country.

Baird, so reports from London state, has been successful in gaining a foothold for television in the public's scheme of entertainment, and plans to make inroads into America before our electrics are ready for the big drive.

"Producers Do Not Fully Appreciate Engineers"

"Absence makes the heart grow fonder"—for somebody else, according to Major Edward Bowes, who told S. M. P. E. members in an address which opened the New York convention, that "producers out in Hollywood do not fully appreciate the engineers." He stated that "one mighty serious and disorganizing problem of the industry was that offices were 3,000 miles way from factories."

The M-G-M executive urged engineers to force upon the production officials "recognition of the engineer's work and his problems."

J. I. Crabtree, society president, immediately took up the cudgels in behalf of the technicians and stated that "engineers will soon have more to do with the actual entertainment end of the business than ever before," and closer working arrangements will be enforced, he stated.

Old Slate Reelected At S. M. P. E. Confab

With but one exception, officers of the S. M. P. E. were re-elected. J. I. Crabtree, Eastman Kodak, was returned to the presidency, with W. C. Hubbard, General Electric, elected vice-president. H. T. Cowling, Eastman Kodak, was elected Hubbard's successor as treasurer. J. H. Kurlander, Westinghouse Lamp, continues as secretary.

W. C. Kunzman and Frank C. Badgley are new members of board of governors, which also includes: S. W. Palmer, Paramount-Publix; J. A. Dubray, Bell & Howell; Peter Mole, Mole-Richardson; Simon Rowson, Ideal Films, London; K. C. P. Hickman, Eastman; E. I. Sponable, Fox; L. C. Porter, General Electric; D. Mackenzie, Electrical Research.

$32,263 "In the Kick"

When W. C. Hubbard, of General Electric Vapor Lamp Co., turned in his current and final report after five years as treasurer of the S.M.P.E., he revealed cash on hand totaling $32,263. This compares with $1,500 in the "till" when he took over the job back in 1925.

Hubbard refused to again run for the treasurer's post and was elected vice-president. H. T. Cowling, Eastman Kodak, succeeded him as treasurer.

756 Engineers Now on Roster of S. M. P. E.

Total membership to date includes 756, according to J. H. Kurlander, secretary, who told delegates attending the S. M. P. E. convention that the roster had jumped 200 in one year.

Eight honorary members are listed, including Edison, Eastman, Ives, Jenkins, Maurey and the presidents of the French, German and English cinematographic societies.

Sustaining members (companies which contribute heavily, financially) include Agfa-Ansco, Audio-Cinema, Bausch and Lomb, Bell and Howell, Bell Telephone, Case Research, Consolidated Film, DuPont-Pathe, Eastman Kodak, Electric Research, General Theatres Equipment, Mole-Richardson, National Carbon, Pacent, Paramount, RCA Photophone and Technicolor.

Of the remainder, 356 members belong to the New York division; 122, London; 107, Pacific Coast; 77, Chicago, and 18 in foreign countries other than England. Forty-five applications are pending, it was stated.

Wide Film Brings Out Home Office Executives

Every home office equipment concern and film company on New York's main stem sent representatives to the fall meeting of the Society of M. P. Engineers, held this week at the Pennsylvania Hotel in New York, to get the lowdown on sound, color and wide film as revealed by industry technicians. The result was one of the most widely represented and largest gathering in the history of the business.

The registration list, which follows, does not include industry leaders and "big name" personalities who attended as guests:

Altman, Fred E., Eastman Kodak, Rochester.
Anderson, A. H., Duplex M. P., Inc., Laurelton, N. Y.

Shining Glitter Gone from Sound, So Film Technicians Turn to Other Toys

Producers the Santa Claus to Engineers Who Send the Bills and Headaches

Sound and its glittering novelty appeal have come to the parting of the ways—practically and theoretically. Practically, from the viewpoint of theatregoers and theoretically insofar as the industry's technical wizards are concerned.

Talkers, so it is said, have at last become part-and-parcel of the picture business, and as such no longer deserve, nor can they command the undivided attention of the fathers of progress, which staid old gentlemen—in the person of film engineers—now are busily engaged in dusting off the pedestal to make way for a new king: the wide picture.

Within one year, those in on the know predict, discussion of sound will be ruled out in up-to-the-minute circles, and in its place wide pictures will be the king-pin.

Color and television are in for a temporary setback, it is pointed out, with both of these developments held for grooming until some future date.

The field of progress in technical circles is already beginning to narrow down to development of wide film, with the Progress Committee of the Society of M. P. Engineers accepting this new trend as one of the highlights of the past few months.

While it is true that laboratories cannot completely ignore talkers, it is expected that from now on film engineers will shower upon sound no greater attention than is paid to any other routine phase of the industry.

The Industry Progresses

Sound was the predominating factor in the field of progress in the past six months, as reported in the following S. M. P. E. convention report, but leaders expect the next survey will find wide pictures on top. The report follows:

Plans for ultimate adoption of wide film have continued throughout the summer as several producers were known to be engaged actively in further experimentation. According to reports from production centers, negatives for several pictures have been made on wide film as well as on the usual 35 mm. width. Agreement has been reached among leading producers on perforation standards and sound tracks but there is still a division of opinion on total width and size of frame. One possible solution of the projector problem is to make the negatives on wide film and make reduced prints on 35 mm. for showing on the present standard projector fitted with a shorter focal length lens.

A transparent paper support which can be coated with either a positive or negative emulsion was placed on the market and the claim advanced that it was suitable for cinematograph film. Another innovation was the introduction of a film containing a layer of aluminium foil 0.005 mm. thick.

European Studios All Wired

The bulk of the leading studios of Europe had installed sound recording channels by July, 1930, one of the finest being located in a studio at Wembly, England. Services of American engineers were in demand by several Russian firms to assist in establishing an expansion program.

A report was published during September giving the final results of a comprehensive survey of the methods used to silence cameras in the Hollywood studios. Eighteen types of equipment were tested. One very interesting "blimp" was constructed of a cellulosic composition, the sections of which were so tightly fitted as to render the housing both airtight and water-tight.

The investigation dealing with methods of silencing arc lights for sound motion picture work mentioned in the previous report of this committee has been continued and its results published. Data on tests made in 14 studios and reports from the Los Angeles Bureau of Power and Light are included. One improved type of arc lamp contains a special built-in choke coil which takes care of commutator ripple. The intermittent feed has been eliminated, non-grinding gears installed, and a new type of positive carbon used which is said not to squeak during feeding of the arc.

Improvement has also been noted in high wattage incandescent lamps. Such lamps must necessarily be subjected to rough usage and it has been a problem to make these sufficiently strong for such service. A new system of bringing the current into the bulbs of 5 KW. and 10 KW. lamps has greatly increased their strength, reduced their heating tendency, and permitted the introduction of any amount of current. In the method used, the glass does not come in contact with current-carrying parts.

Incandescent lamps are stated to be in almost universal use in sound studios in England. For overheads and banks it is general practice to use 6 to 12 lamps (1500 watt) in a fan cooled single aluminum reflector. The average lighting of a set is 400 foot candles. The use of tungsten powder for cleaning bulbs is not generally favored.

According to reports from the Motion Picture Division of the U. S. Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the demand is increasing in foreign countries for sound pictures in native languages. The plan of dubbing foreign lines in pictures made with English speaking actors is being discouraged.

Sound film records made in England at the Wembly studios are identified by photographing at intervals on the film, a lantern slide carrying the scene and shot numbers. Each half minute, figures up to 10, in Morse code, are printed on the side of the film opposite the sound track. Corresponding figures are recorded on the picture negative in the space reserved for the sound track.

By controlling the ratio of direct sound to reverberation, Maxfield states that the true illusion of nearness or distance of the speaker can be secured. There is a critical range of 50 steps of the total 120 sensation units within which sounds may be reproduced pleasantly in theatres.

New Flashing Lamp Appears

An improved type of flashing lamp has been devised by Zetka which is stated to have fifty times the life of older types and to be of much sturdier construction. Recordings of nearly 25,000 feet have been made.

A beam microphone which may be focussed on one speaker has been perfected by a Hollywood sound director.

Balantine has studied the effect of cavity resonance on the frequency response characteristic of the condenser microphone. Two effects causing increases over the uniform response of condenser microphones are: (1) increase of pressure on the diaphragm, and (2) acoustic resonance in the cup-shaped recess of the ring stretched over the diaphragm.

Two large equipment manufacturers during the summer of 1930 announced lower prices on sound-on-film equipment and the option of purchasing the general installation without the disk. One producer who supplied disk records exclusively began early in the summer to supply sound-on-film features as well. It is considered by some exhibitors that film records "wear" better than disk records and have noticeably less of a metallic note when played. There are 3,500 theatres, however, equipped only for disk records and it will undoubtedly require at least two years to effect a complete change-over.

A system of recording being developed in Russia employs an oscillograph with one thread and is stated to be suitable for either variable width or variable density recording. Another sound-on-film process utilizes a sound print having the record engraved in the edge of the film. A saffire roller pick-up device is employed in the reproduction. A roll of clear celluloid is engraved in preparing the master record and this record is then transferred to the sound print. No stages of amplification are said to be necessary in reproduction.

A report was published the latter part of May, 1930, and a second report in September, 1930, giving the results of extensive tests made on acoustic materials for set construction. Reverberation times were measured with the new materials as against times for an empty room. The greatest absorption coefficient was found with Zonolite plaster brushed 1ETAN inch thick over burlap or chicken wire.

While it's true, as seen by the S.M.P.E. committee on progress, that greater importance on the program has been given cartoons, similarity in thought will oust them from public favor just as quickly as theatregoers registered approval some eight or ten months ago.

In addition to cartoons, sound pictures introduced other changes in the previous routine of motion picture programs, it was stated at the engineers' convention. For instance, overtures played by orchestras have largely been eliminated, the value of the news-reel enhanced, and the value of comedies lessened, with general length of programs remaining two hours. So the committee finds it any rate.

Plan of Dubbing Foreign Lines In English Versions Being Discouraged

New Code Completed for Prevention of Fires in Studios, Labs and Theatres

S.M.P.E. Progress Report Urges Exhibitors to Contact Their Patrons on Music Tastes

Picture Producers Association have drawn up a code on studio and laboratory practice, the exchange and the theatre. It gives specifications for the handling of film from its development to the delivery of the finished print.

Further information has been published on the Hunter-Pierce developing machine which was mentioned briefly in the previous report. The machine consists of horizontal tanks arranged one above the other with a vacuum system drying compartment on top. It processes 12 separate strands of film simultaneously at the rate of 10 feet per minute and has a capacity of about one million feet of film per week. The film is fed into and taken off the machine from the same end. During processing the film is twisted constantly and is so exposed that any breaks can be repaired very quickly. Lasally has also published a description of two developing machines, those of A. Debrie, Paris, and of Geyer-Werke A.-G., Berlin. The former apparatus is a twin machine, each part of which works independently. The developing and fixing end is located in a dark room, the washing, dyeing and drying end in a light room. Film passes in loops through the various baths at the rate of 1,600 ft. per hour. The Geyer machine is of somewhat similar design.

Sensitometric Control

A slowly growing appreciation of the value of sensitometric control in motion picture film development has been apparent since the advent of the sound motion picture. It is also understood to be a general practice in the larger laboratories to make duplicates of the bulk of negatives as finally edited.

A new continuous printer has been designed for sound film records which works at 120 feet per minute. Contact is established by a curved gate with a flattened aperture through which the films are pulled at the correct tension. The printer may also be equipped with an automatic light change attachment. A strip of thin film with perforations on its edges (corresponding to scene changes in the negative) is fed into a special gate attached to the front of the machine. The fibre strip is moved forward at a slower rate than the film and as each hole passes over a contact (of which there are 20) a light change is effected. Changes may be made for scenes as short as 6 inches. It is not necessary to mark the negative in any way by this system.

Specifications have been drawn up by a subcommittee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on a standard release print including leader, run-out and cues. It applies to either silent or sound prints.

Gauge Music by Audience Taste

According to trade reports orchestras have been returned to a few theatres in this country and South America which discharged their orchestra over a year ago with the installation of sound equipment. An inventory of several leading theatres on the Pacific Coast reveals, however, that certain houses appear to have a patronage who wish orchestras and shows, whereas others have a patronage who prefer a first class selection of pictures. It appears to depend, therefore, largely on the type of clientele a theatre enjoys.

Sound motion pictures have introduced certain fundamental changes in the previous order of motion picture programs. Overtures played by an orchestra have largely been eliminated, the value of the newsreel enhanced, the value of comedies lessened, but greater importance has been given to cartoons. The general length of program remains one of approximately two hours duration.

About one-third of the motion picture theatres of the world had been equipped by September, 1930, for sound reproduction of either the synchronous or non-synchronous types. In proportion to the total number of theatres, Canada leads the list of countries with 70 per cent sound installation, the United States is second with 55 per cent, Great Britain third with 47 per cent. European theatres are rapidly converting their old equipment over for use with sound pictures.

"Dummies" in Booths Suggested

The suggestion made by Edgar that projection rooms in major theatres will be equipped with extra dummy machines for handling film with sound records only, has been realized in the showing of the feature production "Hell's Angels" at the Chinese Theatre, Hollywood. Volume with less distortion, elimination of troubles from heating of the film, and a lowering of projector vibration are some of the advantages cited by Edgar. Three dummy projectors connected in parallel were used in the Chinese Theatre demonstration so that two sound tracks could be played at the same time. Six reels of "Magnascope" film were included in the picture which was projected on a 24 by 37 foot screen and 9 extra loudspeakers were added to the regular installation which consisted of three horns. A special amplifier system was installed to accommodate the 12 horns, which made possible an increase in volume equal to five times the normal value of the regular sound installation.

One of the most interesting innovations in projection equipment of foreign origin is the French Nalpas double projector. Two complete sound-on-film or disk assemblies are mounted compactly on a single rigid support.

A resynchronizing device of British origin consists of a footage counter and a dial graduated into 16 sections, each of which corresponds to a frame. The device is attached to the 90 foot per minute spindle by a flexible shaft. The footage counter is set to correspond with the edge number on the film and the dial hand is moved to zero. The exact foot and frame passing the aperture can be detected at once, during projection.

A power level indicator has been announced for reading the signal amplitude in voice transmission circuits; levels from minus ten to plus thirty-six decimals can be measured. A monitor has been developed to meet the needs for accurate indication of volume levels from power amplifiers in sound reproducing equipment.

Optical Lens in New Device

In a new type of sound-on-film reproducer, mechanical parts in the optical path have been substituted for a cylindrical lens which illuminates only 0.0005 inch of the film area, thus eliminating the usual slit. A new ultra-sensitive vacuum tube has been developed in which the grid current is reduced to a very low value for measurements as low as 10-17 amperes. Such a tube will indicate a flow of 63 electrons per second.

A new 72 inch dynamic cone speaker and directional baffle has been announced which is claimed to deliver clear mellow low frequency 50 cycle sounds and high frequency 7,000 cycle sounds. The letters "s," "f" and "th" can be distinguished clearly. Another type described by Bostwick, utilizes a moving coil piston diaphragm in conjunction with a 2,000 cycle cut-off. By using this speaker as an adjunct to the ordinary type, it is claimed that uniform reproduction of sounds from 50 to 11,000 cycles may be obtained.

Bull has published data on methods of measuring loud speaker efficiency. Good horn type speakers used in theatre installations are said to have an efficiency of 35 per cent; ordinary commercial speakers only 1 to 6 per cent.

At a meeting of the Societe Francaise de Physique, Dundoyer described a new type of light bulb for sound reproducing equipment. A rectilinear filament is arranged parallel to a flat plate fused in the bulb and a microscope objective used to produce a greatly reduced image of the filament on the film.

A projection lamp of novel construction is designed so that the upper part of the bulb is spherical, whereas the lower part narrows to a cylinder, near the base of which is the filament.

Wide O Lens for Enlargements

Methods of using wide-angle lenses to project a much enlarged picture on the screen have been employed in several of the large theatres for certain scenes of such pictures as "Old Ironsides," "Trail of Ninety-Eight," "The Hollywood Review," and "Hell's Angels." In one process, a movable screen was utilized which traveled downstage as the growth of the picture occurred. These methods all tend to overaccentuate the graininess of the picture. The same defect holds if too large a picture is attempted with wide film; tests having shown

The Tip-Off On Music

Return of orchestras to theatres depends, entirely, upon the type of clientele a theatre enjoys, as indicated by results of a recent survey which revealed that patrons in some sections favor orchestras with sound pictures whereas others are content without them, according to data announced by the S. M. P. E. Progress Committee.

On this basis, an exhibitor contemplating installation of an orchestra should first contact his regular theatregoers for the lowdown, before making the change, it was stated.

Scenario Writers and Axes

About 80 per cent of amateur scenarists have been eliminated because of their inability to write dialogue for sound pictures, members of the S. M. P. E. attending the Fall convention were told.

that width of 50 feet is the maximum permissible before such effects begin to appear.

When space is at a premium back stage, the public address system with outlets over the proscenium arch, has been utilized quite successfully as a substitute for the usual horns during presentation of shorts, such as song cartoons.

Non-Intermittent Portable

A novel portable non-intermittent projector for educational use has been made available by Gaumont. It consists of a folding metal case, hinged at the top. Film moves continuously around a hollow sprocket containing a stationary prism. Light from a source on the front of the projector, is directod toward the rear through a condensor system and then through the film, where it strikes the first prism. At this point, it is reflected on to the second prism and thence through the rotating lens drum, and is directed finally through a suitable lens system onto the screen.

A number of theatres throughout the United States have increased the size of their screens anticipating the advent of the wide screen picture. Practically all the theatres in one circuit on the Pacific Coast have installed larger screens. A survey indicated, however, that about 60 per cent of the theatres in this country lack space for screens of more than 24 ft. width.

The large ballroom in the Atlantic City Pier Auditorium has been equipped for showing sound motion pictures and required one of the largest installations ever made. A social center motion picture theatre has been completed in Newark, N. J. It contains a theatre auditorium seating 436 persons, a ballroom, billiard room, ping pong room, coffee and cigarette counters, card room, and indoor golf facilities, all decorated in modernistic fashion.

Eyring has shown that an auditorium to have a single optimum reverberation time, should not only be free from echoes and have the proper amount of damping, but the absorbing material should be fairly uniformly distributed, resonating bodies eliminated, and a condition for diffusing sound should be assured. MacNair has suggested that the rate of decay of loudness sensation is a better criterion for the arrangement of damping material in auditoriums than decay rate of sound energy.

Educational Movement Afoot

Several colleges are planning to institute a cultural course on photo play appreciation during 1930-31. Arrangements have been made to release the negatives of outstanding historical pictures made several years ago, for re-editing for educational purposes.

To correlate efforts being made in different countries on the production of educational films, Will has advocated that the International Cinematographic Institute (League of Nations) prepare a statistical record of the demand for such films.

Motion pictures will be made from hidden viewpoints of all public events in Vienna in which the police take part; the films will be used later for police instruction. Eighty per cent of the workers in a silicate factory in Russia are claimed to have been taught to read by means of sound films.

Gottheiner and Jacobsohn have reported on improvements in their technic in X-ray cinematography. In this type of work, the difficulty in the past has been to get sufficient exposure to make pictures without over-dosing the patient and working the X-ray tube over its capacity. A new lens of f/1.25 was used, constructed of two spherical cemented elements. A camera equipped with a shutter admitting more light, and improved X-ray tube, a fluorescent screen, and a highly sensitive film were employed. With this equipment it was possible to take pictures for as long as 25 seconds at a time, whereas 2 to 3 seconds was the maximum exposure which could be used with older apparatus.

Research in Television Field

An International Institute of Television was founded in Brussels, Belgium, which will deal with results of researches in connection with the broadcasting of pictures. Eighteen companies were reported to have twenty-two stations in operation in the United States for television experimentation. No license is granted by the Federal Radio Commission however, unless evidence can be shown that the work represents legitimate research.

A three-day test made in September, 1930, to transmit televised signals across the Atlantic ocean, failed and was abandoned. A permanent equipment installation for two-way television was set up in April between the Bell Laboratories and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company's offices, which are about two miles apart.

Television images transmitted by radio were shown as a part of one regular performance at the Proctor Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., on May 22. A loud speaker system was used to transmit the voices of the actors who performed before a "television camera" at the General Electric plant, about one mile distant. A 48 hole scanning disk covered the subject twenty times per second. Four photoelectric tubes respond 40,000 times per second to the impulses reflected back from the subject. The images were transmitted on a wave length of 140 meters; the voices on 92 meters. At the theatre, the light impulses were reproduced first on a small monitor "teleptikon," then transferred to a light valve where the light was broken up by a 48 hole scanning disk to reproduce the images which were projected on a screen six feet square set under the proscenium arch. Head and shoulders of the subjects were reproduced in a black and white picture showing gradation of tones. The system was developed under the direction of Alexanderson.

Baird Plugging Television

Marked progress has also been made in England in the development of television in the hands of Baird Television, Ltd. On July 1, 1930, a demonstration of television was made before press representatives on a 3 by 6 foot screen. Screen brightness was ensured by using 2,100 ordinary metal filament lamps instead of neon tubes and Kerr cells as in earlier experiments. Commutator contact switches, turning on one lamp at a time, sweep the entire bank of 2,100 lamps in one-twelfth of a second. The receiving outfit on a portable truck, was installed in the London Coliseum and demonstrated as a part of their regular variety program three times daily from July 28th to August 9th, 1930. A talking film made on Friday, August 8th, was televised as a special feature of the program on the closing date of August 9.

In another television system, patented by Lieut. Wold of the Quartermaster Corps, U. S. Army, mechanical scanning is said to be rendered unnecessary by the use of a lamp house having a lattice work of filaments, different junctions of which become luminous successively.

An attempt to make a motion picture record of the moon's shadow from an airplane during the total eclipse of the sun on April 28, 1930, was partially successful. Clouds obscured the earth below the plane which flew at an altitude of over 18,000 feet, but the shadow bands were photographed on the cloud layer. A special sound recording camera fitted with an f/1.4 lens and hypersensitized panchromatic film was used. Radio time signals received by the plane were recorded. Accurate timing records made on a reel of sound film by Dr. Pettit during the eclipse showed it to be 1.7 seconds earlier than calculated.

Spherical Lenses for Color

According to plans announced during the summer of 1930, positive prints made by the additive Herault Trichrome process have the three successive frames dye tinted. Projection is made with a Continsouza-Combes nonintermittent projection which at 24 frames per second is said to suppress flicker. This projector does not use mirrors or prisms, only spherical lenses. The Wolf-Heide process is said to use a similar projection method.

A new two color additive process is reported to have been used in making "The School for Scandal" shown during the early part of October, 1930 at the Plaza Theatre, London.

Sound prints by the Technicolor process are now made with a silver image sound track having a contrast or "gamma" of unity which is claimed to represent a material advance in the art of reproduction. The feature picture "Whoopee" was made with a sound track which was developed in this way. It is stated to be impractical to control the gamma of the sound track as closely as this on black and white prints.

A new plant for the Multicolor process, be-

It seems that the conversation ran something like this:

"Extensive tests on acoustic materials for set construction involving reverberation times measured with the new materials as against times for an empty room, reveal that the greatest absorption co-efficient was found with Zonolite plaster brushed 1/16 to ⅛-inch thick over burlap or chicken wire."

The reporter contended that delegates should confine themselves to convention business and not enter into a discussion of chicken-coops.

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

"A BUNCH 'o the boys were whooping it up." The scene was one of those pre-convention parties where the gang renews acquaintances, some of which date back to the first S. M. P. E. meet held 14 years ago. Hilarity reined supreme, the hour was late.

Suddenly, loud knocks on the hotel door, and "Big Bill" Kunzman responded. Imagine his embarassment upon discovering that the four-a.m.-caller was none other than a prominent Supreme Court judge, in nightie and woolen cap who told the boys in no uncertain terms what he thought of technicians, engineers and the picture business in general.

"How can one expect a judge to shoulder the cares of the judicial robe if he is kept awake all night by a bunch of so-and-sos?" he asked.

The door closed, and the boys all gave three lusty cheers (a la Bronx) for the departed, uninvited visitor.

Fire Code Now Ready for Films

Culminating months of effort, committees representing the Hays organization, Board of Fire Underwriters, and N. Y. Bureau of Fire Prevention, final draft of a new code of fire prevention for studio, theatre and laboratory has been adopted. It gives method of procedure for safe handling of film from the time it enters a camera to its final resting place in "dead" storage vaults.

Sound the Chief Topic At Fall S. M. P. E. Meet

Highlighted by 13 discussions on various aspects of sound and sound equipment for theatre and studio, the Papers Committee of the S.M.P.E., in convention at New York, adopted a new plan whereby long-winded discussions and papers were ruled out. In May, delegates attending the Spring confab raised heavy squawks because of exceptionally long periods allotted to some, and, as a result, more than a dozen papers could not be heard.

In addition to the sound group, delegates at the New York meet heard five discussions on laboratory practice, four each on studio mechanics and theatre operation other than sound, three each on color and the international problems of pictures, several papers on the non-theatrical field and open discussions on methods of securing wide pictures on a wide screen without resorting to a complete changeover to 65mm or 70mm.

There were 43 subjects covered, as compared with 52 at the previous semi-annual meet.

German Preference Out

Paris—Preference for German films under the French quota is to be dropped, it is understood here, following protest of American distributors.

Canada Beats U. S. Sound

Canada and not the United States, as generally believed, has the greater number of sound installations, on a proportionate basis. Seventy per cent of all Canadian houses are wired, while the U. S. only boasts of 55 per cent. Great Britain is third with 47 per cent.

Dubbing Tabooed

The plan of dubbing foreign lines in pictures made with English-speaking actors is "no go" with foreign audiences, S. M. P. E. delegates were told. The plan is being discouraged, and is expected will soon be out completely.

Progress in Industry Mechanics Revealed

ing constructed in Hollywood during the summer and fall of 1930, will require 200 men and will have a capacity of 3 million feet of film per week. A school for color cameramen is being conducted.

200,000 Showing at Home

Irby estimates there are over 200,000 home motion picture sets in use. Interest during 1930 appeared to be centering in the development of sound motion picture devices for use in the home. To date these have all been of the type requiring disk turn tables, and range from simple models to very elaborate ones. Putting sound records on 16 mm. film beside the picture is a difficult problem because of the narrow space available and the delicate equipment required for recording the sound.

Visionola is a radio-phonograph and motion picture instrument in which any combination of the three units is attainable. The image from the projector may be reflected onto a 2 by 3 foot screen mounted at the top and back of the cabinet or it may be focused directly on a larger screen. Two loudspeakers are included; one static and one moving coil the former being mounted behind the smaller screen.

A compact mercury vapor lighting unit has been made available for amateur use, designed as a portable studio unit with a power rating of 450 watts. Dallmeyer has issued a new telephoto lens of f/2.9 aperture which is stated to give a linear magnification of three diameters. It is supplied only in 3 inches focal length. The f/0.99 lens made by this firm has been withdrawn from the market.

Amateur Scenarists Tabooed by Sound

About eighty per cent of the amateur scenarists have been eliminated because of their inability to write dialogue for sound motion pictures. According to an estimate made by Menefee, a million and a half dollars were expended in the production of industrial films during 1929 which indicated a great gain in the popularity of such films. One-third of the amount was devoted to the production of sound films.

Theatres in the province of Szechwan, China on the border of Thibet exhibit American as well as Chinese pictures. There are 27 theatres with a seating capacity of 115,000. As this is an average of more than 4,000 seats per theatre, some of the theatres compare favorably in size with several of New York's big cinema houses. The population of the province is 60 million, however, so that only a few can attend at one time. Only silent pictures are shown to date.

Average daily attendance at 18 of Broadway's leading theatres with a seating capacity of 37,000 has been estimated as 100,000.

German Version of "Big Trail"

Hollywood—Fox is preparing to make a German version of "The Big Trail." Lew Seiler will direct.

"Perambulator" Is Aid in Filming Of "Cimarron"

Hollywood—The "electric perambulator" has made its debut in practical use. It was devised by W. S. Johnson, head of RKO Radio Pictures' electrical department, who tested it and finally put it to use under practical conditions in the filming of "Cimarron." Its cost is reputed to be $3,000.

Old-fashioned perambulators or "dolleys" were cumbersome, hard to control, had to be dragged by an army of "grips" and were restricted to lateral motion. The use of ordinary motor power on dolleys was prohibited because of the silence required for sound work.

The perambulator used on "Cimarron" has an electric motor that is noiseless, and gives speeds of complete range from nothing to 20 miles per hour.

By means of a hydraulic lift, it will also elevate the cameras to a height of 33 feet. This elevation may be accomplished if desired, while the lift is in motion, thus securing simultaneous lateral and vertical motion.

It is provided with five platforms, giving sufficient space for microphones, cameras, lighting equipment and camera staff.

Simple Process of Color Photography Is Needed

Glenn Matthews, Eastman Kodak research laboratories, told S.M.P.E. members that a simple process of color photography yielding a print which faithfully reproduces the colors of nature is greatly needed.

The only practical processes enjoying any extensive commercial use, Matthews stated, are substractive processes in which the color is incorporated in the film.

Palmer Miller and P. D. Brewster, of Brewster-Color Film, Newark, followed Matthews with a discussion on color requirements in the camera, a comparison of advantages of using a single negative to record the three-color separations and the use of three separate negatives.

Honor Kaplan

A banquet and dance in honor of Sam Kaplan, president of M.P.M.O. Local 306, will be given by members of the Kaplan Projection Society, Inc., Nov. 1 at the Commodore Hotel. Larry Kent, head of Paramount's short subject department; Max Hayes, G. Edwin Stewart, head of the Paramount sound department; and J. S. Winick, chief projectionist at Paramount New York studios, will be among those present.

The Minute-Men

This new invention, the electric perambulator, was designed by W. S. Johnson, head of the RKO electrical department, and was first used in filming "Cimarron."

Drive for Kiddie Business in Wisconsin

Milwaukee—Warner houses in Wisconsin are making a strong bid for juvenile business with the formation of a Kiddie Club at the various houses in the state. To each child joining, a button is given and special Saturday matinee programs are offered.

Managers at the various houses are enlarging upon the plan. At Sheboygan, R. W. Bollenbeck has announced that each kiddie who is a member of the club, may upon his birthday bring his parents to the Sheboygan as guests of the theatre. In addition he posts each Saturday in the lobby of the theatre ten numbers and the owners of the buttons whose numbers appear in the lobby of the theatre, are entitled to the Saturday matinee free.

A special birthday party is also staged in connection with the Saturday matinee for members of the club by Gary Lassman, manager of the circuit's Egyptian, Milwaukee.

University Backs Little Film House at Seattle

Seattle—Under auspices of the University of Washington department of drama and English, this city is to have a season of "Little Theatre" film attractions. Arrangements have just been completed for the showing of several of these films at Fox's Egyptian. Performances will be given twice weekly.

Smallest Sound House

Toronto—L. C. Pearson of Northern Electric Co., distributing for Western Electric, has a contract for an installation in what is believed by the firm to be the smallest theatre in the world. The house is the Crescent at Temiskaming, Que., and seats 240. It is patronized almost entirely by employees of a pulp and paper company whose plant is located there.

Foreign Talker Bugaboo Still a Studio Headache

Hollywood—Silent foreign versions may be the general practice of the various studios, according to present indications. Pathe is one plant making all foreign talkers in silent form with a musical background. No dialogue is spoken.

The reason for this is said to be that foreign theatre patrons want to see the big stars and are not satisfied with the importations speaking the language correctly, but do not have the appeal which made the stars stars.

RKO still is experimenting with the dubbing process for foreign versions, but nothing definite about general adoption has been set. The plan is to shoot the sets here and super-impose the actors on the film after shooting the dialogue scenes in the foreign land. Cost of this system is said to be below normal for foreign talkers and, if satisfactory, will perhaps be adopted by other studios.

Double-Featuring Is Resumed in Germany

Washington—Double-featuring has been resumed by German exhibitors, according to report to the M. P. Section of the Department of Commerce. The practice went out of vogue with the advent of talkers, but is returning rapidly, it is stated.

S. M. P. E. to Collaborate With Academy on Coast

A close working arrangement will be effected between the S.M.P.E. and the technicians branch of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences. The step will eliminate much duplication of effort, according to its sponsors.

Chimps in Multi-Linguals

Hollywood—Tiffany will make multi-lingual versions of all its chimp comedies. The first two already have been done in Spanish and German.

Freed on "Blue" Charge

Brownwood, Tex.—J. C. Tunney was freed of a charge of operating his theatre on Sunday under the ancient Texas "blue laws." A jury in the County Court failed to agree.

Help Wanted: Engineers

In case picture engineers in the U. S. find tough sledding because of depression, bad times, or what have you. They will always find employment in Soviet Russia, where the government is willing to "talk turkey" to American technicians to further its expansion program.

All applicants must be well "red."

Board, Council Preparing Plans For Book Week

Combination Policy for Three More Fox Houses

Continuing the return of vaudeville to various houses of the circuit, Fox on Saturday opened a combination policy at the Fox Walker and Savoy in Brooklyn. Next Saturday, the Republic, also in Brooklyn, will adopt a combination policy.

finding difficulty in justifying some of the misleading copy being used.

The lack of child appeal in some pictures also is stressed in the nationwide checkup, the situation calling for a drastic change of production policies.

Following is the detailed report of the survey:

N. Y. Gets Good Business When Pictures Are Good

Optimism, coupled with a feeling of "Wake Up, Producers," characterizes the feeling of exhibitors in the New York territory. General business conditions are off considerably in the metropolitan territory, but box-offices are subnormal only when picture quality slumps.

One thing the present situation emphasizes is that the day of the mediocre and so-so picture is out. Time was when an exhibitor could hang out a "100 per cent talking" sign and be assured of S. R. O., but those days are gone forever. The public today is wise as to the entertainment value of pictures offered.

The encouraging sign is that showmen, large and small, know that duds are all washed up at the box-office, and are trying to gauge their programs accordingly. They feel, however, that producers are not coming through properly with pictures which will attract a discriminating public.

Broadway is leading the way in the present situation. Even on the Big Street, where forced runs and intensive exploitation heretofore could command big grosses, the crowds have thinned, except when meritorious pictures are offered. Long runs have lost their lustre unless the picture can deliver, and the echo of public interest carries right through to the fourth and fifth runs and shooting galleries, showing that the public absolutely refuses to be kidded, so far as its picture diet is concerned.

Misleading advertising and block booking, which compels an exhibitor, as one puts it, "to buy a lot of junk to get an outstanding attraction," are other factors blamed by exhibitors for lower grosses.

"Give us good pictures and we'll get the money," sums up the general attitude in the New York territory.

Big Films Making Dough In Texas, Checkup Shows

Dallas—Outstanding pictures are drawing practically as much money as they did a year ago under particularly prosperous conditions, but ordinary films are taking it on the chin, a checkup of this territory shows.

The three great standbys of this country have been under heavy pressure for the last four or five months. These are cotton, wheat and oil. The cotton crop, while slightly larger than last year, has been distributed over not as great an area as heretofore. This, with the low price of 9c, has, in itself, readjusted the purchasing power of the people of this State. In some sections the cotton crop was very large and what it lacked in price it made up in volume. Some sections, notably a large part of West Texas, went through a very severe drought and the production is practically nothing.

Wheat Price Drop Hurts

Wheat in Texas is largely raised in the panhandle and while the crop was not quite as large as last year the severe drop in price has affected that section of Texas quite materially in its buying power. Another serious set-back has been occasioned by the over-production of oil and the proration method of production adopted in this state. This has thrown out of work large numbers of men in the oil fields and refineries and in those sections where oil and refineries have predominated it has lowered the purchasing power of the people to quite a considerable extent.

So far this has not resulted in bank failures to any extent and all cities of any size show tremendous bank deposits, against a kind of frozen-in condition in the smaller places. This has made all bankers in this territory very cautious and in consequence the circulation of money over this time last year has been materially reduced.

Most of the theatres have installed a drastic reduction in their expenditures for advertising. This is a very serious matter because the history of the theatre business shows that it must have a certain amount of stimulation through advertising of all kinds. With the drop of business, starting last May, a great many managers who had been playing stage shows with pictures were of the opinion that this drop was largely due to the withdrawal of what is known as flesh and blood in entertainment, but the present results show that even where this has been returned to the theatre that after all it is the picture that is the big magnet at the box-office and not the so-called stage show.

A careful checkup over a period of time shows that the gap in between the presentation of big pictures has greatly reduced the former average of receipts over a period of time. It is safe to say that this drop represents approximately 25 per cent. A drop in commodities as severe as has taken place in Texas has reduced these articles to the lowest point in years and much below cost. This in itself is a very unhealthy condition and cannot continue.

It is believed by responsible and well informed theatre men that the state is beginning to dig out from under the ashes of deflation and is starting to build on another foundation which may be slow and may affect attendance at the theatres for a while. An upward swing is indicated as these articles have now reached the point where they are investments and these conditions are sure to be taken advantage of by people who are always looking for bargains.

The cotton crop is being marketed very slowly and there is more cotton in storage and being held on farms than ever before in the history of Texas. However, as this money will be spent in a more orderly manner this year than has been the case in the past it should also help, being released slowly over the balance of this year.

Producers' Worries

Paris—Protest against French censorship of American pictures has been voiced by representatives of Will H. Hays on account of a ban placed on "The Big House," "Son of the Gods" and "Sally," to which the Chinese minister objected because all of the dialogue was in English.

Six American films have been delayed several weeks by censors. "All Quiet on the Western Front" finally was passed upon presentation of evidence that the film contained no German propaganda.

Optimism in Exhibitor Ranks Is Prevalent in Almost Every Territory

Business Upswing Is Noted in Twin Cities

Minneapolis—Steady upswing of business in this territory is being noted, despite the steady pounding on prices of wheat which has forced that chief Northwest product to low levels during the current season.

Peculiarly, this territory was one of the first hit, and it now seems that it is to be among the first to come out of the slump which has affected business in all sections of the country.

First run business here has been immediately dependent upon the quality of pictures shown. Given a good picture, the theatres grab off the dough, but with a cluck they take the rap.

Throughout the territory things haven't been so hot, many of the small towns feeling the pinch caused by falling prices of farm products. The two Dakotas have been harder hit than Minnesota, due chiefly to the fact that they depend almost exclusively on the wheat output.

There is a shortage of cash among farmers of the Northwest, many of whom are wary of any spending in preparation for what may be a tough winter. However, they still go for the big pictures, and are picking them with a knowledge which is almost uncanny.

Business Off Somewhat But Showmen Kicking Only On Quality

In the Twin Cities business has been up and down all season. A few outstanding pictures have turned in good grosses, showing that the public will respond to the good ones.

The strike at suburban theatres of the two cities has had its effect on business. The independents have been having a tough time of it, due to protection and the strike, to a degree that exchanges here came to the aid of showmen by reducing their rentals during the period of the strike.

Protection is a big issue among independent exhibitors of the two cities, who have been bolstering attendance by country store nights and other forms of give-aways. Accordingly, they have been battling proposed zoning, fearing this form of attracting patronage would be denied them.

Good Films Get the Dough in K. C. Zone

Kansas City—First-run managers here have no complaints to make regarding business in Kansas City. With the possible exception of one downtown house, the de luxe theatres are finding business normal.

To sum up the situation, one theatre manager used this statement as a standard barometer: "When we have good pictures, business is good. When the pictures are bad, business is bad." And the declaration of this manager is the consensus of opinion of his local fellow-managers. The one theatre which has found it tough sledding lately is now beginning to pull heavier patronage and, although the manager of this house takes a somewhat pessimistic attitude toward business in general, he feels that the worst is over. In brief, first-run business is normal, if the managers are telling the truth.

In the territory patronage is normal in the larger towns. In the smaller towns the exhibitors are feeling a depression. But this depression in theatre patronage is not due to a lack of showmanship, according to an exchange employee who watches over the ad sales. The smaller theatres are using as much, if not more, advertising accessories as they did before this so-called business slump began. Checkers report that theatres are taking advantage of exploitation suggestions as they never did before.

Small Towns Feel Pinch

A fear of the immediate future and the prospects of a still lower economic level is blamed by an exchange executive, who said the average small town patron is looking ahead and saving his money to weather a crisis that may still be on the way. Crop conditions were not the best in this territory and yet already there seems to be an optimistic feeling regarding the crops for next year.

The depression in the small towns is a temporary one, one exchange manager says. But neither pictures nor lack of showmanship can be blamed, in his opinion. Business is quiet everywhere and the small town houses are feeling its effects, but people will spend money for amusements when they won't for other things, he declared, and good sound showmanship will win out.

A circuit district manager states the larger houses in the larger cities in this territory are doing business in proportion to the houses in Kansas City.

Texas Talks Up

Hard times in Texas? Maybe so, but the most recent figures concerning the state's agricultural record does not indicate slack conditions. For example, we find that the Lone Star State this year will offer to the world's market 88,128,000 bushels of corn, 27,674,000 bushels of sorghum, 8,200,000 bushels of rice, 6,780,000 bushels of sweet potatoes, 73,360,000 pounds of peanuts, 8,000,000 pounds of pecans, 149,000 bushels of apples, 325,000 bushels of peaches and 1100 tons of grapes as shown from crop reports up to October 1. And that's not including a tremendously large citrus crop coming up from the Rio Grande Valley.

And if you think that sounds like Texas is having hard times we'll have to question your judgment or your mental condition. Or if you persist in believing our state is in the doldrums just keep in mind that in addition to the list above we raised 4,275,000 bales of cotton, 715,000 tons of tame hay, 147,000 tons of alfalfa and 1300 tons of broom corn.

So the next time you hear some pessimist trying to include Texas in the list of states suffering during the general business depression just sing out and quote the figures given herewith.—*The Houston Press

Portland Off, but All Showmen Are Optimistic

Portland—While it is the consensus of opinion that theatre business in Portland at the present time is off from ten to 12 per cent, this reduction is slowly nearing an end.

Interviews with first-run managers show optimism to the nth degree universal. Real showmanship is being displayed, especially since the advent of Greater Talkie Season, and they have been backed up by producers in furnishing additional outstanding film attractions. These have been coupled with shorts, personal appearances of stars, strong Saturday morning attractions for kiddies, and several inaugurating midnight shows, which have helped to swell grosses.

Outstanding film successes in this territory during the past few months were "So This Is London" (Fox), shown at Fox Broadway to heavy gross; "Animal Crackers" (Paramount), at Portland Paramount; "Let Us Be Gay" (M-G-M), at Fox United Artists; "Half Shot at Sunrise" (RKO), shown at RKO Orpheum; "All Quiet on the Western Front" (Universal), shown at Hamrick's "Music Box."

Three Houses Dark

The closing of three downtown houses early in the spring, the Blue Mouse, Rivoli and Fox Alder, took some 2,500 seats off the market, which helped grosses at other houses.

The only criticism of features heard is that there have been several color features released that were found inferior.

Keen competition, which has resulted in more show for the money, has raised overhead to a point where it cuts considerably into profits.

Fox Washington Theatres, Inc., operating in the Grays Harbor district, in which Aberdeen and Hoquiam are the most important cities, discloses that one theatre in Hoquiam and one theatre in Aberdeen will close Friday. The reasons given are the continued business depression in these centers; lumber being practically the only business and mills being closed down for the past few months; and also because of labor disputes. The operators' union demands two men in the projecting room and the theatre firm maintains that only one is needed, and that business at the present time does not warrant the extra expense. No stage shows are used in either city.

Close of the show houses will leave but two operating in Aberdeen, one Fox house and Warners' Aberdeen, and none in Hoquiam.

See-Sawing of Intake Is Story Of Kind Of Show Offered

Optimism Is Keynote Of Philly Viewpoint

Philadelphia—If there is any depression in the picture field in Philadelphia, the local managers are not admitting it. William M. Goldman, manager for the Stanley-Warner interests, points with satisfaction to the cash bonus split among the members of his office about two months ago for rating the highest of any Warner Brothers division over the country, and stands pat on the consistently good grosses scored by the six first-run Warner houses in the downtown section.

David Idzal, manager of the local Fox office, made the statement that "business is just as usual, just as it has been last year, or the year before, when the product is 'right'." "A good picture will do just as much business today as a good picture ever did, and a poor film will gross correspondingly less."

Keith's, the new Paramount outlet, hasn't been in existence long enough to warrant any comparative figuring, but Al Boyd, Frank Buehler, Edgar Wolf and others of the Moon Amusement Co. are highly elated with the showing of their first three attractions.

The chain neighborhood theatres have been doing slightly better this year than last in most cases. With economy more or less the rule in all circles, they have been taking some of the patronage from the first-runs on account of lower price scales.

Lack of Product Blamed

The independents around town have been in a stew most of the year, but their problems were not so much those of a depressed period but because the leading film product was sewed up by their chain competitors. With Paramount in the field to join Fox in giving them films, most of their troubles have been ironed out.

So far as the box-office records go, the slump-off from last season is very slight. It was inevitable that some reaction in the face of general business depression would be felt, but the houses have been maintaining a good level of business and much higher than any other form of amusement except football.

The Mastbaum which considers $40,000 intake each week a good summer gross, has fallen below that mark only three times in the last 20 weeks. On several occasions, the gross has leaped considerably above this margin. The Fox is a consistent theatre, having a well-organized regular patronage. $27,000 is a good week's business, and seldom does the mark drop below $25,000. With a four week-run of "Common Clay" the house leaped to over $30,000 for three of the weeks.

The Boyd, another popular house, has been behaving erratically but in the main profitably. The house will do $25,000 or better for the first week of a two-week picture and drop to half that amount for the second. The indications are that the theatre would do well on a weekly change policy, but the Warners are using it to project some of their better regarded films. The Earle has been maintaining a pace of $18,000 or near that figure for many weeks, while the Stanton, considered for closing last year, has crashed into big profits with nine weeks of "The Big House" and now with five (so far) for "Scarlet Pages." These two pictures alone will put the house across for the season.

Dark Houses Reopened

The Arcadia, closed last year, has opened up this year as a profit making independent, with a Paramount tie-up. The Aldine, closed for 40 weeks, has opened profitably with "Lincoln." Keith's has been taken over from the legitimate ranks and has been a hit so far for Paramount. The only backslider was the Erlanger, which returned to the legits after a season with RKO, but the fact that RKO negotiated the sale of its product to Warners, made an outlet here for them unnecessary.

Another indication that there is some tightening of business was the failure of Fox to go through with its project of erecting a 5,000 seater at 17th and Market Sts., but it must be remembered that the idea was abandoned with the withdrawal of Fox from the company, indicating that a shake-up in the internal organization of the company is as much responsible for the abandonment of the plan as actual business conditions.

Other Fields Hit

Other amusement fields have been suffering, with, as noted above, the exception of football. The University of Pennsylvania averaged a 35,000 attendance for its first two "set-up" games, a new record for pre-season tilts, while Temple, playing two night football games so far, crowded its stadium (30,000) for both contests.

The legitimate theatres have gotten off to a bad start. In fact, the Shuberts announced that the Lyric and the Adelphi, two of their houses, held for the last 20 years or more, would be abandoned after October 31. Since they have already leased Keith's to the Moon Co. this year, this cuts down their houses from six to three. In addition, however, they have arranged the booking for the Walnut Street theatre. The Erlanger interests will maintain their three theatres here, bringing the total up to seven in the city. Business on the whole has been bad, though three musical shows, "Three's a Crowd," "Girl Crazy" and "Ripples," the Gould show, "Elizabeth the Queen," and the Professional Players show, "The Man in Possession," have made good profits.

The prize-fight and wrestling racket has "taken it on the chin" terribly during the last season, both indoor and out. Several big contests had to be called off because of poor attendance. Grosses of $2,500 and $3,000 have been common, as against the $10,000 grossed for the same kind of fights a year ago. Not only business conditions, but the black-eye received by the sports on account of the numerous "fouling" bouts enter into the situation.

Other enterprises have been getting by with profits. The out-door season of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Robin Hood Dell in Fairmont had a summer season attendance with a grand total of 250,000—real profit. The midget courses have been getting by in most sections where they are not competing with themselves too much and baseball—thanks to a championship team—has enjoyed a good year.

Conditions are, of course, spotty, but no manager can be pinned down to anything but optimistic statements. Which seems to be as good a way as any of combating any depression, either real or imagined.

Theatres in Indiana Free of Any Failures

Indianapolis—Perhaps one good way to calculate the effect of so-called business depression on local theatres and theatres in central Indiana is to look at the record of failures. There is no available record of any theatres in this section going into the hands of a receiver.

This cannot be said of any other business. The business mortality rate in this section has been rather high during the past year. Banks and businesses, retail, wholesale and industrial, of long standing have had financial difficulties aplenty.

Both first and second run houses still are doing business in this territory. Speaking strictly of first-run houses, a lot of credit must be given the managers for the business being done. All of them are giving more for the money than they ever have before. Many of them admit their houses are not making the net profit they did, but they are returning a profit, which in itself is a victory under present conditions.

Grosses Off 10 Per Cent

Gross receipts perhaps have fallen off an average of only ten per cent. In view of business conditions and other competition, this is remarkable. This year the miniature golf craze struck this city in full force for the first time. Most of these courses have been well patronized and doubtless money spent here lessened the amusement buying power of hundreds of persons. Yet the local managers say they have noticed no ill effects from this competition. They are expecting another year of such competition in 1931 and are not worried. Most of them believe the worst of this competition will be over next year.

A little example in just one theatre here may suffice to show just why the public continues to patronize the theatre in numbers just below averages for a ten year period. When the Indiana theatre here, the largest in the city, was completed, the city was at the peak of the prosperity era immediately following the war. The Indiana had silent pictures, a symphony orchestra and an organ.

Now the same theatre has an orchestra, organ, talking pictures, a widely known band, stage presentations and once every so often a personal appearance on the part of some picture star. Manager Sturdevant of the theatre stated following the appearance recently of Helen Kane that the house grossed $3,000 more than any week in the history of the theatre.

Better Shows Help

The condition prevailing at the Indiana is not isolated. Every first-run theatre in the city is giving better value for the money than it ever has before. Some of this is due to the better shows, according to managers. The talking picture and the rapid strides made toward better talking pictures have done much to keep up attendance.

Those theatres which abandoned their organs with the coming of the talking picture now have them back in use and it is entirely probable that those who had good orchestras that were given the air at the same time will have them back in the pits before long. Most of them now have. All these things account for the fact that the net is not so large as formerly, but also account for the continued patronage.

Business Off Only When Films Below Standard

Houston—There is a "depression period" in show business in Houston only when the week's show is mediocre. This is the sentiment of every operator of theatres in the city.

Joseph Plunkett, vice-president and general manager of RKO, was in Houston recently on his first visit to the Southern circuit since the acquisition of the Interstate Amusement Co. from Karl Hoblitzelle, Texas theatre magnate. Accompanied by N. J. Blumberg, Chicago, head of the western division, and Hoblitzelle, Plunkett visited all the Texas RKO theatres, including the Majestic here, and checked on business done.

"The actual figures for the year show that the Majestic business now is just the same as a year ago," he stated. "Last week, for instance, the figures were below average, because of a mediocre picture. This week the showing is far above average because of 'Half Shot at Sunrise.' The condition a year ago was exactly the same. That tells the story.

"When you have the show, the people come. But they shop for entertainment now just as they do for everything else, and they want their money's worth.

Public Harder to Please

"Pictures are much harder to make now than two years ago because of a more discriminating public, the proper balance of dialogue and action, and the necessity of using sound and dialogue with the 'second-act climax' and yet retain the very essential screen technique. It's a hard job. But the producers are all trying to do that, and are succeeding very well."

There is no lack of showmanship in Houston, according to E. E. Collins, city manager of Publix in Houston. Nor is there any real depression of show business in this city, in his opinion.

"Some weeks are up, some down, and the full responsibility falls on the picture. If it clicks, people come. If not, they go somewhere else. That's all there is to it. If we had pictures every week that stood up, our business would be correspondingly good. As it is, the box-office falls with the caliber of the picture. On the average, business is as good as this time last year."

The Metropolitan, de luxe Publix house, is inaugurating the first of the stage shows booked out of New York. These shows have been coming to New Orleans from the East and there recast. Now they will reach Dallas intact in cast, scenery, and stage and wardrobe managers, from the East, and reach Houston via San Antonio, and then to New Orleans, Collins said. Jimmy Ellard has gone to Dallas to join the "Moonbeam" unit, and will return to Houston when it plays here. Ted Cooke is substituting as m. c. at the Metropolitan for two weeks.

Loew's in Black

Manager W. V. Taylor of Loew's State summed the matter of percentages up tersely.

"Last year at times the home office sent us money. For eight months now we have kept the cash going the other way. There is no show business depression in Houston."

Taylor is emphatic in his declaration that good pictures brought good business and poor pictures poor business. "It was ever thus, and always will be," he said.

Will Horwitz, manager and owner of a subsequent run independent chain of theatres in Houston, who recently took to Federal Court his fight against the "protection" policy of producing chains and lost, voices the same sentiment:

"If you have the show, they come. Of course, you've got to let 'em know you have the show, and we are no pikers when it comes to that. There is no lack of showmanship in Houston."

Exhibitors are united in the opinion that the percentage now is none below that of this time last year, but "about the same." Business last fall was about 15 per cent below the average of the fall of 1928, one exhibitor said.

Florida Business Drops But State Optimistic For This Winter

Tampa, Fla.—Business in Tampa is 20 per cent below normal. This is not just a rough guess or estimate, but is the result of a careful and thorough survey conducted by Paul Short, managing director of the Tampa theatre, in the interest of the Publix circuit.

The year of 1928, considered a normal one, was used as a basis for comparison. The Chamber of Commerce assisted Short in his survey and leading merchants in all lines of business were interviewed and requested to dig down and make comparison of their business in this year and the past. The business of the five theatres operated by the Publix corporation here was included and when the facts and figures had all been compiled and an average struck, the totals showed a general decrease of 20 per cent.

There seems to be several reasons for this general decrease. There was some unemployment; salaries had been reduced in many lines; there had been bank failures, with a general unrest and tightening up of the public purse.

To counteract this decrease in receipts Publix closed one house, the Strand, and established lower admission prices in two others.

Others Report Bigger Slump

Other theatres here report a still greater decrease in receipts. For instance, the Maceo Amusement Co., operating two theatres catering to negro patronage exclusively, has been hard hit. Its patrons, being of the laboring class generally, have suffered from unemployment and reduction in wages, with the result that they have had but little money to spend for amusement, so one of the houses was closed. Then the two other colored theatres also closed, leaving the company in control of the field with the one house, the Central, and still, according to Charles A. Sappal, president of the company, this house has been operating in the red most of the year. He figures the attendance for the house at least 25 per cent below normal.

Poor pictures seem to get general blame for a part of the decrease in business. Most all of the houses find that when real good pictures are presented the public find some way to dig up the money and there is a good increase in attendance.

The public seems to have an uncanny way of picking the good ones. Of course there are fans who have to see them all. If there were not it would be just "too bad" for show business, but with good pictures, Short says it would be possible to simply advertise the picture and the dates and be sure of good crowds. So poor pictures are responsible for a portion of the 20 per cent decrease at this de luxe house, at least.

Everything seems brighter now, for winter time is the big time in Florida. The citrus crop is moving. Canning factories are going up all over the state, and will absorb most of the off-size fruit. The vegetable crop will start moving soon, and the tourists are coming, so the showmen of Florida are preparing for the "Happy Days" which are bound to come again.

Pictures Escaping Depression

Richmond — Reported depression in various lines of business has had little effect on picture business here. Neither has the drought, which caused heavy losses to Virginia farmers.

If there has been decreased attendance in some instances, it has been so slight it is hardly noticeable. Then, too, with some good pictures on the way, an even better report should be in prospect. Legitimate attractions haven't exerted any noticeable drain on picture houses.

Business Off Only 5 Per Cent at Syracuse

Syracuse—Increased competition, changes in policy and revision of box-office scales are three reasons why it is both difficult and hazardous to compare Syracuse theatre patronage today with that of one year ago.

In the matter of competition, the past year saw the Rialto invaded by Paramount, taking over the old Temple (vaudefilm and later, burlesque), and the return of the Empire to the picture column from dramatic stock.

In the matter of policy, Loew's State has substituted straight films for vaudefilm, while vaudefilm is the current rule at both the Syracuse and the Empire.

In the matter of box-office scale changes, there is scarcely a house (major) that has not altered its tariffs in some fashion, if but to attract juvenile trade.

Making fair allowance for all of these, it is a conservative opinion that the average business today in the local first-runs is not more than five per cent below last year's level.

All Film Policy Hits

There are several houses where this average does not apply, of course. Poor pictures may be set down as the reason why their grosses went down below the five per cent drop.

Loew's, without "flesh," is doing much better, proportionally, than it was doing a year ago.

Keith's business today is about on par with that of a year ago. William J. Tubbert, manager, suggests intact vaude shows have played their part in keeping up grosses when films were weak.

The Paramount, since its opening in December, has had few if any tough weeks; the house has a low overhead, comparatively speaking, and this has helped.

Warners Strand and the Fox Eckel felt the effect of poor product; better pictures recently have boosted the draws in both houses.

Night attendance in all first runs is satisfactory if the picture is good; matinees recently have been off, regardless of the quality of the film. Exhibitors so far have found no answer.

Tom Thumb golf is not on the wane here; rather it seems to be gaining in popularity, and this may cut into patronage during the winter.

Industrial situation here is none too good; this has been a factor in the slight decline of business. So has the excellent out-of-doors weather, which has persisted into mid-October.

Exhibitors, none too pleased with talker product during the summer, believe better films are in sight; they do not find any sizeable dissatisfaction with dialogue films; Syracuse may be set down as a talker town.

Neighborhood and subsequent run exhibitors appear to feel the loss of business more deeply. Where dimes count, there is an indication of "shopping." Poor films, spotted via the reviews when playing the first-runs, are ignored in the repeats. Good films, however, draw well, perhaps even better than a year ago.

Milwaukee Blames Poor Pictures and Conditions

Milwaukee—There are no bones made by local exhibitors in stating that the show business is off. It isn't what it was at this time last year and the reason for it is about evenly divided between poor pictures and the depression. Some name one, some the other, and still other exhibitors say that it is a combination of both.

"Good pictures are few and far between," said one independent exhibitor. "There are some that have been good box-office attractions, although as far as ranking high as good photoplays they have been flops."

Others seem to think that the product has been fair enough but that business is harder to get because of the depression. None of those interviewed was anxious to give figures concerning the amount of decrease and several admitted after prolonged discussion that it really wasn't "so terribly much off over last year."

There are those who say the business is there, but it takes more work to pull it in. Operators of these houses have not felt the depression so badly. They have kept after the public with heavy exploitation and advertising and for the most part are clicking.

One exhibitor states that bad weather has had more of a tendency to keep down business than before. As a result, this, coupled with several bad pictures, sets the old box-office in a hole from which it takes plenty of good nights to pull out of. Last year one didn't have so many bad nights, he observed.

Conditions Are Spotty

In the state conditions are spotty. The smaller industrial cities including Racine and Kenosha are particularly slow. Several large concerns whose plants employ considerable of the labor in these and similar towns in Wisconsin are operating at small capacity and short hours. Theatres in towns located in agricultural and dairying districts are not so badly off. Crops in the state were for the most part fairly good and business in these towns is a bit stronger.

"I know of a chap who was working in a plant in one of the smaller cities in the state, who made as much as $100 a week," one exhibitor stated. "Now he's driving a truck at $25 a week. When such conditions exist people aren't going to spend money quite so fast for the theatres."

In Milwaukee with its diversified industries, conditions are a bit firmer. However, even here a decline in the box-office receipts is noticeable. There are not the long lines waiting before the box-office windows to purchase tickets that there were last year and one does not have to wait in the lobby to obtain choice seats.

For the smaller neighborhood theatres which have been operating on slim receipts during the summer months in hope that the fall and winter season would bring increased business, there is bound to be disappointments, in the estimation of various exhibitors. Many are inclined to believe the bankers' predictions which do not promise any great improvement for another year.

Opinions Vary on Conditions at Buffalo

Albany—There is a decided difference of opinion here in regard to business being done by the picture theatres of the city at the present time. The owner of three theatres, one of which, however, is closed, is frank in declaring that business is ahead of the same period last year. On the other hand, a person who is particularly well acquainted with the business being done by another group of houses, and who was formerly general manager of the circuit, is equally frank in admitting that business is approximately 20 per cent under what it was a year ago.

There is no question but that the Albany area is suffering from what might be termed a general depression in business and that this is reflected not only in the entertainment business, but in stores and in a thousand and one other ways. When a company lays off anywhere from 500 to 1,000 men, it cannot help but bring its effects to the doors of theatres, business houses and elsewhere.

The situation in Albany is rather inter-

Protection Keynote of Conditions

Protection looms large in theatre business conditions throughout the nation. First run houses, playing films right out of the can, are reaping the benefits, while subsequents seem to be taking it on the chin.

Strong effort is being exerted to pull patrons downtown and away from the subsequents, and the effort is producing results. Plenty of small houses throughout the nation are running in the red, due to these advantages of the first runs.

esting from the standpoint of the exhibitor. C. H. Buckley owns and operates Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, a 2,200 seat house somewhat removed from the actual business center of the city and also the Leland, which has a seating capacity of about 1,400 and is in the center of the business section. He also has a lease on the Clinton Square theatre, which is closed at the present time, although located downtown, but too close to the RKO house and the Strand to become a competitor in the full sense of the word. The Clinton Square theatre is small and was formerly a church.

Showmanship Boosts Business

Buckley is basing his comparisons for the period from Labor Day up to the present as compared to the corresponding period last year. The Hall, which charges a 50 cent admission, was at one time regarded as a white elephant. When Buckley took it over, he spent a large sum of money, with the result that today it is generally regarded as the most attractive theatre in the city. On account of its location there were many who predicted that the theatre would never be a success, basing their assertion on the ground that the residential theatres would attract those in their neighborhoods and that others who were inclined to go downtown, would continue right on without stopping at any halfway theatre. But Buckley figured otherwise and started off with a campaign of heavy newspaper advertising and furnishing at the same time a bill of entertainment that cost him plenty, but which left the patrons well satisfied with their entertainment and with a feeling that they were getting their money's worth. The parking situation was also in favor of Buckley.

Then Buckley had the advantage of an extremely large lobby, which he has made attractive at all seasons. If it isn't banked with flowers from the Buckley garden, it is attractive, as at the present time, with a fountain and a pool of gold fish. Last Eastertime, his lobby attracted much attention with its pond filled with live baby ducks. He informed the NEWS representative this past week that he is spending $300 a month for flowers for the stage and lobby and figured that it is money well spent.

Stresses Shorts' Value

Since last Labor Day Buckley has been showing pictures including "Song o' My Heart," "Our Blushing Brides," "Common Clay," "Let Us Be Gay," "Madam Satan" and "Romance," and on every one of these the house has made money. And, going a bit further, it has made more money than during the corresponding period last year. One thing more, Buckley believes in plenty of advertising space as a means of telling the people what he has in the way of entertainment. His short subjects are just as important as his feature, he says, and he never lets down on the short end of his program.

"You know, it is an easy thing," said Buckley, "to slip in a cheap short subject that will go far in destroying the enjoyment of an entire program. I would rather exercise greater care in selection and pay more for my short subjects to balance my bill, feeling that it is money and time well spent to send a patron away from the theatre with a feeling of satisfaction covering the program from start to finish. Buying cheap and uninteresting subjects is a dear one in the long run."

The Leland is also running ahead of a year ago in the way of business. Buckley admits that in a general way there is a business depression, but contends that people are counteracting this with an evening or two each week of good entertainment instead of sitting around the house and bemoaning one's fate simply because the market is a matter of 30 or more points off from where a person bought some stock a year ago.

Business is probably 20 per cent off from a year ago this time, in various upstate houses. In Troy, perhaps it may run a trifle more because the collar shops are down to a considerable extent, and when these slump, there is an almost immediate drawing in of spending power in the collar city. The same thing holds true with Schenectady, which is an industrial town.

According to one chain operator, a theatre that was perhaps bringing in $20,000 a week a year ago, is finding it pretty hard these days to make the $15,000 mark. He contends that sound is no longer a novelty and that a year ago people were flocking to the theatre regardless of the picture, simply for the purpose of enjoying the novelty of sound.

It might further be said that there is no great amount of exploitation in the Albany territory. Theatre managers do not seem to take kindly to this idea. They are attracting patronage by straight newspaper advertising and by little of the spectacular. Owners of all first-run houses declare that the pictures this fall are above the average in the way of entertainment and say that they have absolutely no kick along that line.

Higher Overhead Cutting Down Net, But Gross Drop Small

Far Northwest Optimistic Though Grosses Under Par

Seattle—Theatre business in the Pacific Northwest territory for the first half of 1930 was noticeably below normal averages, but improved business this fall will bring the year's totals almost up to previous standards, it is shown by a check-up among exhibitors of this territory.

Salient facts brought out in interviews with first-run and suburban exhibitors are:

1. Poor business at theatres is generally conceded by all showmen to be a result of the national economic depression. Pictures have been well up to standard and many examples of good showmanship have been employed in the presentation and exploitation of those pictures.

2. Neighborhood and suburban theatres have suffered the most from the depression. While a few leading suburban houses have shown strong business tendencies, a majority of them have suffered decided slumps in revenue, and it is reported that more small houses were closed during the last summer season in this territory than in several years past.

3. The public no longer patronizes a show merely because it has talkers. Instead, theatregoers demand more stage presentations, musical specialties, novelties, etc. The newness of talkers has worn off, and the theatre must sell its entire program to the public as they did before the talker era.

West Coast's Grosses Off 10%

Fox West Coast Theatres, operating a large string of first-run and suburban theatres throughout the entire territory, are about ten per cent below 1929 in revenue, according to Earl L. Crabb, Pacific Northwest division manager. Crabb reports business on the upgrade at the present time. The key houses are showing steady gains in patronage, and the suburban theatres have been building business by offering stronger programs that combine worthy features with the best novelty shorts that can be obtained.

Publix houses in Seattle and Portland are showing a volume of business on a par with 1929, according to Robert Blair, Northwest division chief. Up to August, grosses were lower than in previous seasons, but the last few months have proved that conditions are more nearly normal than at any time since the "crash," and even better than in 1928. Publix stage shows brought back to Northwest theatres, are aiding business to a noticeable extent, it was reported.

Representing the independents, John

Public Will Pay For Good Films, Says Showman

Hamrick reports business volume below 1929 in his Blue Mouse and Music Box theatres in Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, but is optimistic regarding prospects for the balance of the year. To meet competition, Hamrick houses are introducing stronger supporting programs of shorts, and are contemplating the introduction of musical specialties again. A drop of about 12 to 15 per cent from the "big" seasons of 1928 and 1929 was said to be approximately the figure that would apply to this circuit's business, but fall has started off in good style and bids fair to bring the year's volume up to nearly normal.

RKO Ahead of Last Year

Independents in the suburban field are Jensen & Von Herberg, who report business in excess of previous seasons. This, according to Leroy V. Johnson, general manager, is a result of changes in policy whereby the J & V houses offer the best feature attractions as soon as possible after first-run bookings, plus strong programs of shorts and novelties.

Radio - Keith - Orpheum, with first - run houses in Seattle, Tacoma, Spokane, Portland, Vancouver, etc., shows a gain in business over 1929, also due to presentation of strong feature pictures and additional short specialties, with less emphasis on the vaudeville. Slight downward revision of price scales has also aided in building volume of patronage.

Lone Operators Feel Pinch

Among the suburban and neighborhood exhibitors, it seems that business goes to the houses owned and operated by definite groups or chains, at the expense of lone individuals who cannot keep one house moving at the clip which larger operators attain. The Fox junior circuit, John Danz's Seattle downtown second run chain, and similar groups of houses are all doing business equal to that of 1929, but the one-man shows are running from ten to 25 per cent below average, according to general indications.

As a summary, it seems apparent that business for the entire year of 1930 will practically equal that of 1929 in this territory, as far as volume is concerned, among the "larger" operators, with the individual operators of single houses suffering the loss. To attain this volume, houses are under greater expense than heretofore, however.

Everything possible is being done to promote better business by the larger houses, including booking of best features obtainable, regardless of distributor; presentation of "flesh" acts; booking of stronger supporting programs of shorts; added advertising; more time and effort spent on exploitation; use of musical organizations; installation of wide screens, best sound apparatus, redecorating and equipping of theatres, etc.

A worthy factor is the point that, with one or two remote exceptions, houses have not reduced admission prices as a result of decreased business. Instead, they deem it best to give more for the same money, rather than less for less money.

Baltimore's 21,330 Seats Belie Depression Talk

Baltimore—With 11 first-run and about 60 residential houses going full tilt and the majority of them doing well, it does not appear possible that conditions in Baltimore can be at a very low ebb although many persons in the city are reported to be out of work and conditions are generally supposed to be depressed here.

Looking over the picture situation in other large cities of the United States, Baltimore compares favorably with those of the same population and even with those containing a greater number of residents. This city carries along in operation 11 first-run houses for its population of 805,753, representing a combined seating capacity of 21,330.

Taking the week beginning October 6, as an example of the business being done in those 11 houses, reports show that approximately $92,500 was taken in during that week and this amount does not include the enormous gross at the tills of the neighborhood theatres.

Comparing this with the same week in 1929, statistics show there were nine first-run houses in operation in Baltimore then and that the gross receipts for the week was about $94,150.

Both weeks were exceptional because for that week in 1930 "Whoopee," starring Eddie Cantor, pulled in a gross at Loew's Stanley of $24,500, while during the same week in 1929, the record at that time for the same theatre was done with "The Hollywood Revue" pulling into the box-office $33,350.

Public Discriminating

This seems to prove conclusively the statement of Morris A. Mechanic, proprietor of the New theatre, who says that people expect more for their money now than ever before and will purchase only good picture entertainment and that the public will fork over money only to see those pictures which they know to be good.

"The depression is hurting the ordinary run of productions," Mechanic said, "but where the big super specials of known merit are concerned, people will pay their money to see them."

Frank Price, Jr., manager of the Rivoli, has an opinion somewhat similar to that. He said that matinees may be hurt somewhat by the race track operation in Maryland, but if the pictures are good, business will be good any time regardless of race tracks.

Herman A. Blum, who has been president of the M.P.T.O. of Maryland, Inc., twice, and is now managing the Embassy, says that the theatre business is the same as any other and that the depression is here but the 100 per cent man has a better chance to survive than the 60 per cent man, which applies to all human endeavor.

Another thing affecting picture business in Baltimore is that people are shopping more for their films than ever before. They seem to have become aware that talking pictures must be presented as well in the residential houses as in the big downtown palaces of the cinema and they are flocking to the former houses for pictures they want to see.

The automobile is playing a good part in the film business for people watch the advertisements in newspapers and if they see a picture advertised at a neighborhood house they want to see they all pile into the machine and go over to that house to see it.

Where a playhouse such as the Hippodrome, Palace or residential State have tabloid stage dramas, musicals or stage presentation acts, in addition to the talking picture program, a following may be built up who will come each week regardless of what the pictures may be, if advertised properly, but it is generally conceded that where straight film houses are concerned, pictures must be good in order to draw the trade.

Weather Blamed For Decline in Chicago Grosses

Chicago Blames Weather For Slight Business Drop

Chicago — Decline in Loop first run grosses from the figures for the preceding year is admitted by officials of both major circuits here. Actual figures are withheld out of deference to the home office of each, but the circuit officials state that the decrease was "not alarming." A comparison of weekly grosses during corresponding periods of both years, they say, substantiate the description.

Abnormal weather conditions account for the decreases more than any other single factor, representatives of both Publix-Balaban & Katz and RKO theatres opined. It is their belief that the national economic depression has had little or no effect on local theatre grosses; that productions of the current year compare favorably both as to quality and drawing power with those of last year, and that showmanship, or sales methods, likewise, have been as meritorious and effective as in other years.

Waning of interest in talking pictures purely as a novel entertainment medium, it is believed, also accounts in some measure for the lower grosses of the current year. The real alibi, however, is the weather. They have detailed reports of government meteorologists for this section to bear out their statements.

The current year, the government reports reveal, has been marked here by unusual weather extremes. Unseasonable cold, unseasonable heat, extremes of precipitation and drought, have been the rule rather than the exception. The Chicago area has had 695 degrees of heat in excess of the normal average for the section from Jan. 1 to Oct. 1, which would indicate an unnatural prolongation of vacation weather and its attendant forms of entertainment, any and all of which may be regarded as theatre competition.

Competition as between theatres in the Loop remain essentially the same this year as last. With the exception of the Punch & Judy, which was opened too recently to affect the present survey, no new theatres were opened in the Loop this year. RKO, however, put pictures into the Palace, a former straight vaudeville house, June 1. Circuits did not add to their Loop holdings by purchase or lease during the current year; and legitimate theatres operated temporarily as picture houses were not of enough significance to affect the decrease in grosses.

Long Runs Decrease

Length of engagements in extended run houses was uniformly less this year than last. The average run to date has been seventeen days, as compared with twenty the preceding year. This would appear to indicate a weakened drawing power in this year's pictures. However, the more rapid turnover of product thus effected kept grosses on a favorable basis through the stimulation of new-picture openings. At the same time, it reduced the theatre net through increased film rentals brought about by the greater number of pictures played.

Balaban & Katz estimate that the decrease in box-office grosses at five Loop theatres may amount to six per cent less than last year's grosses. RKO, operating two (Woods to be relinquished next Monday, and Palace using pictures only since June) estimate a five per cent decrease may be shown this year. The profit line of neither circuit is endangered by the decreases, and, in fact, net earnings for the year may compare favorably with those of the year before through various economies in operation which have been in effect here since early summer.

Buffalo Public Smells Bad Ones in Advance

Buffalo—There is no doubt that there is some depression in general lines of business, but it is not very difficult to place the finger on the pulse as it affects the motion picture theatre. As one exhibitor here contends, and his contention is borne out every week, the depression rears up its head at the motion picture box-offices only when the pictures are not "up to snuff." Any good picture gets its normal share of the business. The bad pictures will not draw good business regardless of how much they are ballyhooed or what is given away with them in order to get the people in.

It looks as though Mr. and Mrs. General Public know more about which are the good pictures and which are the bad ones than many of the theatre operators do, because they just won't come to the bad ones. The whole scheme of things has resolved itself down to the point where the general public is shopping, and if there is any doubt about this, stand on Main Street any Saturday night or Sunday night, or any other night, for that matter, and see them parade from one theatre to another to pick the show they want to see and which suits their fancy most. They know the good ones and they go to the good ones. It is true that the minority with whom the motion picture is a fetish will go to more than the average number of pictures per week, but as stated above, these are in the minority.

Reverse English

Milwaukee—Usual plaint of subsequents that all the business is being pulled downtown is reversed here, where indications point to the fact that many people are waiting for pictures to come to neighborhood theatres and then see them at lower prices. This trend is particularly noticeable at the better class neighborhood theatres, which for the most part have been doing a fair business in Milwaukee.

And don't forget this: the star system is just as strong as ever and the popular stars in weak pictures outdraw the average pictures without a star. This does not mean that stars can continue to make weak pictures and get by with them.

Therefore, the depression which actually exists is considerably more evidenced in those theatres on poor pictures, whereas it is not evident at all on good pictures. I cite the outstanding business which has been done on such pictures as "Common Clay," "Last of the Duanes," "Animal Crackers," "All Quiet," "Anybody's Woman," etc., and in this there is nothing new this season as compared to any other. The percentage of business increase or decrease at this time depends entirely on how good or bad the pictures are. A survey indicates there is hardly a difference of 10% from a year ago.

The public is not tiring of talking pictures and the reaction to the good ones indicates that they are more in favor of good talking pictures than they ever were of good silent pictures.

Industrial conditions undoubtedly are off. Many industries have laid off employes ranging from 10 to 40 per cent with very little prospect of their resuming in the immediate future. The general feeling as to any improvement between now and the first of the year is a pessimistic one. However, it seems that this has not as yet affected the picture theatres, particularly the first-runs, to anywhere near the extent it has affected merchants. It seems that people who are not working can still find a few nickels or dimes with which to go to pictures to help them to forget their troubles.

Subsequent runs appear to be more affected than the big first-runs, particularly in Buffalo. This, of course, is due to the fact that the downtown theatres with the low admission prices at matinees offer so much more for the money than the subsequent runs can afford, with the result that the subsequent runs can only hope for good business on their outstanding pictures. Unfortunately the supply of such pictures is insufficient to cause them to cheer.

Quality Petering Out

The usual has happened in that the season started off with a great splurge by all producers who released jointly six or eight outstanding pictures the latter part of August and the early part of September and the most recent crop of first-runs has petered out considerably. Too little regard is being paid to the type of pictures which seem to draw and the attempt to put the talkers on a higher plane has been too sudden. I refer to such productions as "Liliom," "Outward Bound," etc., which appeal to the vast minority of movie-goers, but which the young folks do not care about, one local exhibitor declares.

It is sad but true that picture audiences to a very great extent want their entertainment given to them in such a way that they can understand it. After all, it is the entertainment for the masses and when it is produced on a plane beyond their understanding, or calling for thought, they will not go for it. Picture audiences do not go to the theatre to think or to have problems thrust at them, but to spend an hour or two where they can relax without taxing their minds. There has been no change in the lack of response to problem plays, satire or subtleties which the average office or factory worker cannot appreciate. That is why such pictures as "Common Clay," "Animal Crackers," etc., succeed.

And what is true of big cities also applies to the small towns. It is nothing new to say that the picture that is a hit in the big town 99 times out of 100 is also a hit in the small town. Frequently you can get by with an inferior picture in the small towns because of the shorter run, which will not get by in the bigger cities where it will not hold up for a week or longer.

In other words, the extra ballyhoo or advertising make no difference, so, to revert to an old but true phrase, "They can smell them!"

Cleveland Subsequent Runs Up Against It; Circuits Are Optimistic

First Runs O. K., But Subsequents Squawking

Cleveland — While Cleveland has been among the cities of the country most keenly affected by the national business depression, managers of the leading first runs are unanimous in agreeing that their business during the past year has not experienced any disastrous set-back.

The former general business averages at the downtown first-run motion picture theatres have been maintained, according to Fred Desberg, general manager of the Loew circuit, and J. E. Firnkoess, district manager of the RKO circuit.

"Our houses are holding their own," Firnkoess stated, "and in these days of unemployment we consider that a distinct advantage over other businesses."

"The Loew theatres," said Desberg, "reflect the times to a certain minor extent, but our average has been steadily maintained in our first-run houses."

Subsequent-run theatre owners tell a different story. They report that their business is off all the way from 30 to 40 per cent. Unemployment, insecurity of jobs, lack of confidence in the future and poor pictures all contribute to this condition, according to a leading circuit owner. Thousands are out of work. Those who are employed feel no security in their jobs. And the pictures so far available for subsequent run exhibition, according to this circuit owner, who operates a chain of ten houses, are not to the public taste. Of the new product available, only one picture, "Common Clay," he states, has drawn consistent business.

Theatres in Detroit Socked Plenty By Auto Slump; City Hardest Hit in State

175,000 Unemployed Cause of Box-Office Sickness; Public Apathetic

The large discrepancies between the good weeks and the poor weeks is largely responsible for the low average of subsequent run business for this year over last year, states another circuit manager. The good weeks go as high as ever they did, but they are few and far between, while the poor weeks drop way below previous low records. This exhibitor explains it by saying that the public is shopping closer for its amusement than ever before. Discrimination and low funds cause this.

Downtown theatres have maintained their averages due to the fact that they get whatever amusement money the public has to spend while a picture is now and is talked about. But a check-up reveals that Cleveland fans have cut down on their theatre attendance. They have curtailed the number of shows they see a week. Neither are they attending in family groups as formerly. Only some members of a family attend.

The backbone of the depression is broken, according to Col. Leonard P. Ayres, vice-president of the Cleveland Trust Co. and noted business prognosticator in his monthly review and prophecy of business. Business activity has increased during the past month, Ayres states, and there is no slowing down of activity.

In Cleveland 2,000 men went to work this week at the Fisher Body plant. Another 1,000 have been employed by the city to clean up the parks. The Akron rubber plants of Goodyear and Goodrich have adopted a six-day a week schedule so as to keep all of their employees on the payroll. In Toledo, the Chevrolet factory is working full time, and now employes several thousand additional men.

These announcements are gradually restoring public confidence. With increased employment, and restored confidence, the amusements will be among the first to feel a reaction, it is confidently hoped by local theatre owners.

Bloody Murder Is Yell From Detroit Territory

Detroit—This city is about the hardest hit of any large city in the country. Dependent as it is upon the automobile business, Detroit is one of the best show towns of the state—when the automobile business here is good. A glance at sales as well as manufacturing records of the past year will give some conception of the Michigan situation.

Detroit's normal unemployed number from 10,000 to 15,000. The city is now registering all the unemployed in Detroit and the total will run close to 175,000. With a population of 1,250,000 one can get some conception of the percentage of unemployed.

Publix in Red

Unofficial reports have it that Publix hopes to save $1,000,000 in the operation of the Detroit and Chicago houses this year. The same source places the Publix loss at from $25,000 to $50,000 per week. One of the second-run downtown theatres, normally a gold mine, is doing today just 50 per cent of the gross of a year ago.

In the neighborhoods the situation is worse. Dependent on working men, it is a mystery how they have hung on as long as they have. Many have closed, some 100 in the state and city.

The Adams is closed, the State is said to have operated at a big loss all summer, and the Fox dropped to 25 and 50 and is breaking even, which is a big improvement for them.

Outstanding pictures like "The Big House" do a big business and then nothing the rest of the week. Musical pictures are as dead as a doornail. New stars are not clicking. The public doesn't seem to have the appetite to absorb as many talking pictures as silents. Sound installations are generally good, so it isn't that.

"Picture prices have something to do with so many going broke," says one exhibitor. "Producers made more last year when exhibitors were taking their worst licking, and now, with the situation no better, they are asking telephone numbers again. Boy, I don't know how they do it, and then they holler about the exhibitor being unfair. How is an exhibitor going to make up the losses if he starts taking losses already on the new product?

"We have been hit hard. From what I hear, actually the hardest in the country. When we come back it is going to be a little slower than usual."

Old-Time Business Is Cheer to Canada Houses

Ottawa—Canada, generally, is not worried much about economic conditions and, for various reasons, most people are looking to the winter with more confidence than they had only one month ago. The new Conservative government called a special session of Parliament in September when an array of higher tariffs for industries and the farmers was put into effect and an appropriation of $20,000,000 was made for public works to relieve unemployment during the winter.

Manufacturers were warned that the new duties were not to be passed on to the consumers in the form of higher prices, and when the glass companies made price advances in defiance of the government a special order-in-council was passed cancelling the new duties on imported window glass. The farmers are feeling much better since the duty on New Zealand butter was raised from one to eight cents per pound.

There have been various announcements in recent weeks regarding the reopening of factories and the hiring of more workers at others, some plants going on day and night shifts in order to catch up with new orders.

Prosperity Campaign Aids

The Prosperity Week campaign of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Oct. 11 to 18, has been most timely and its effect will be widespread because there are Famous Players theatres in every city from Coast to Coast. The Canadian government, through the department of trade and commerce, has also launched a business promotion drive in more than 100 newspapers across the country, while the Ontario government is putting across a campaign to boost Ontario products.

The fall season has opened up nicely for theatres in many Canadian cities. "Whoopee" is now completing its fourth week at the Princess theatre, Montreal, and is breaking records. Various other productions have been held over at other houses, thus indicating strong business. "The Singer of Seville" broke the house record at Keith's, Ottawa, in September, and "Raffles" did likewise at the Centre theatre, Ottawa. The Ottawa Regent scarcely could do any better than it has for the past two months.

At Toronto, the Imperial broke all records on the introduction of its new stage show policy, while Loew's, Toronto, had lines a block long for "Our Blushing Brides" during the week of Oct. 4, this being the start of a new all-screen policy there. Another indication that the people have money was seen when "Abraham Lincoln" played the Royal Alexandra, Toronto, as a road show at $1.50 top. Old-time crowds have been in evidence at leading theatres in Hamilton, London and other cities of eastern Canada.

Western Canada Hit

Western Canada has been hit by the low price of wheat and the cutting off of foreign markets, but the situation is regarded as a blessing in disguise because the prairie provinces are being forced to turn to mixed farming and, in the future, will probably not have all its eggs in one basket. The present economic correction is painful, but the patient expects to enjoy better health after the operation. In the meantime, the theatres of the Canadian West are not turning in big profits as a consequence, but the western spirit of optimism is but little diminished.

The stock market situation is a depressing feature and many small speculators have been cured—until the next bull market catches them again. Editorial writers are saying that more attention is being paid to every-day business than to the ticker and.

Weeding Out of Inferior Houses Not Slump Sign

therefore, the country will be better off. There have been practically no big commercial failures and the worst has been the passing of a few dividends by a number of companies. The talk is that there is as much cold cash in the country as before and huge natural resources are still intact. They say the bears will die in their caves this winter and next spring will open up better and stronger than ever.

Oklahoma Prepares for Return of Normalcy

Oklahoma City—This territory blames poor pictures, business conditions and a lack of money in circulation for the 20 per cent drop suffered last summer. Tulsa and other large cities of the state report a similar falling off in attendance.

The smaller towns throughout the state suffered a loss of 30 to 40 per cent due to poor crops, business depression, shortage of money and poor pictures.

However, with cooler weather and good rains recently over the entire state, all lines of business, including theatrical, are showing an improvement. This is particularly noticeable in Oklahoma City, Tulsa and the larger cities and towns, and with the marketing of cotton and other farm products and the increasing volume of oil development in nearly every section of the state, the theatrical situation as a whole is expected soon to become normal again.

Business Up in Iowa Tho Weeding Continues

Des Moines—Competition of the larger houses is still making things tough for the smaller theatres in Iowa and in many of the outlying towns business is 50 per cent off of last year, due also to the fact that the farmers in that district are getting half their usual amount of corn crop. In the theatres that have been meeting with competition from large houses since the paving has made it possible for the larger houses to draw from a wide territory, business is 25 per cent off. The week-ends have shown a tremendous business in the towns of good size, while the week between has been rocky. The larger theatres are doing a splendid business, in some cases ten to 20 per cent above the business of last year, and all are doing at least average business.

The general opinion, expressed by Des Moines film men, is that the audiences may be found where the sound is best. Big pictures with good equipment will draw from a long distance, now that it is possible to drive on paving.

General business conditions are good and Miss Margaret McGrevey, secretary of the Des Moines Film Board, rates the situation here as 100 per cent. "There is no slump here," she asserts.

Theatres Prospering

Bob Gary, manager of the Des Moines, Des Moines, finds business consistently maintaining a 20 per cent increase over last year. A diagnosis finds big pictures, showmanship and the normal response of the average man to the call of picture amusement all responsible for this increase. Manager Moore of the Paramount in Des Moines has been putting over splendid stage shows which have been a big factor in the steady run of good business at this house. The reactions brought on by weather changes and other temporary effects on buying power have followed almost exactly the same scale as in the year previous. The Strand has shown this fall a ten per cent gain over the last year's business and conditions look auspicious for a maintenance of this rate.

Jess Day, manager of the Orpheum, Des Moines, says that the buying power in Iowa, which has always been steadily conservative, has maintained its same even tenor. With bigger pictures the theatre has continued at the same average of that of last year, the same profit to show as that of a year ago.

New construction in Iowa has shown a steady gain. Locations in the good size towns are being selected for new theatres.

Public Picture Wise at San Antonio; Business Off

San Antonio, Tex.—Optimism is the keynote of the managers of San Antonio's picture houses. Business is off, it's true, but it is gradually getting better and, with better pictures, business should eventually rise to normal.

While business depression, pee wee golf and night baseball have cut into receipts, local managers are agreed that good, entertaining pictures will bring the crowds into the theatres.

One manager who operates a de luxe theatre, but who does not care to have his name in print, voiced the opinion of all managers when he said: "Give me a good, first-class picture—one that appeals to all classes—and I'll do the business I did in the peak times of a year ago. Inferior pictures are what have caused the drop in receipts and not business depression.

"The public today is picture wise. It can tell a good from a poor picture without seeing it. The theatre fan used to go into a picture house to see a show. Today he shops for his pictures just as he shops in a department store. If a picture appeals to him, he will see it. Otherwise, he will not. It is my experience that my weekly grosses with outstanding pictures are as great today as during the peak times of a year ago. But let me get hold of a poor picture—and down go my receipts."

A survey of local conditions developed that theatre receipts today are about 15 per cent less than a year ago. When it is considered that during the spring months receipts had dropped to 20 per cent below a year ago, box-office receipts are showing a healthy increase. Local managers look for normal times eventually—not in a month or two—but perhaps by next spring.

Good Business Enjoyed In Canadian Northwest

Vancouver—Theatre business remains steady and encouraging, says J. R. Muir, district manager here for Famous Players Canadian Corp., speaking for Vancouver, Victoria and Nanaimo on Vancouver Island, Prince Rupert in northern British Columbia, Chilliwack and smaller towns scattered through the Fraser Valley.

For Vancouver, Muir speaks for business

Canadian Coast Finds Business Holding Steady

in the first-run houses, the Capitol, New Orpheum and Dominion, and a chain of nine suburban houses linked up with the Famous Players.

"I can say that business generally in the houses in my territory is good," said Muir. "Of course, it is off in some places and better in others. Prince Rupert, in the north, is particularly flourishing; in fact, we have big business up there. It must be remembered that a year ago sound was coming in, and now that novelty has worn off, business is really down to a normal steady status. At the first onslaught of the miniature golf course we noticed some difference and there is no doubt that craze bit into us a little. That has now subsided, even though many of them have retired indoors. Every one wants to try something once, and when that is over they settle down to the more solid enjoyment of a good picture.

"I can say that all our house managers are good showmen. They are able to tie up with anything which makes for good legitimate business, know how to present their shows, apart from merely showing a picture, and are men who keep in touch, as much as is humanly possible, with their patrons.

"As for the type of picture we are getting," he concluded, "I can say they are fully equal to any we got last year, and many of them better."

Chains Prospering but Indies in Cincy Suffer

Cincinnati—Business in this city, which, on account of being the gateway to the South, has more or less of a transient population, is decidedly not off. Contrarily, it is on the up and up. In addition to the "floating element" there is a big suburban territory from which to draw. This includes not only the sizeable towns in the immediately contiguous environs in Ohio, but also several reasonably large cities in Kentucky, separated from Cincinnati only by the Ohio river, and having a combined population of approximately 300,000.

The economic depression, instead of exerting a demoralizing influence on the film houses, apepars to have had the opposite effect.

There is no gainsaying the fact that a large amount of unemployment exists here, but, according to recent surveys, this is appreciably less than obtains in other cities of similar size. The slant taken by the exhibitors is that food and amusements are two elements which people will invariably buy regardless of conditions, and irrespective of the urgency of their other essential requirements. It seems to be an established fact, too, that a bigger percentage of the unemployed patronize the films now than they did before they joined the ranks of the idle. This is a logical and natural reaction. The line of reasoning is basically and psychologically sound. Ordinarily, the factory operative whose hours necessitated very early rising had little, if any, time or inclination to attend an evening showing during the week. His enforced domesticity was a means of diverting him as a potential patron during the week-end which usually was used to replenish his personal requirements, or to seek outdoor diversion or social contact.

Unemployment Helping Grosses

Now, however, with an abundance of time at his disposal, the erstwhile working man looks to pictures as a haven of refuge to which he may repair and forget his status of inactivity, at least for the moment.

With very few exceptions first-run houses have been and are exceeding their established quotas. In fact, the RKO Albee, a vaude-film house, under management of George Sommers, has more than doubled its gross within the last four months. The RKO Strand, managed by E. D. Yarborough, broke its single week attendance record with a second-run within the past fortnight, the receipts in percentages hitting within a couple of points of the 200 mark. Other houses in the downtown district are enjoying proportionate business.

This enviable position among local houses is the result of specialized and co-operative effort on the part of John L. McCurdy, divisional manager, and Bill E. Danziger, chief of the advertising and publicity division of RKO.

Reversing the customary formula at present employed by so many executives in other lines, that of curtailing, if not entirely eliminating their advertising and retrenching in their operating expenses by reducing their employee personnel, McCurdy and Danziger are not overlooking a single opportunity of thoroughly selling their houses and product to the public through liberal use of newspaper advertising space, and making two effective tie-ups grow where only one grew before. The constant jingling of coins in the box-office coffers is the answer.

RKO officials and managers here are not depression-minded. They have no reason to be—at least, not yet. Optimistically, they are planning and executing extensive improvements in their local houses, some of which are to be considerably enlarged to provide greater seating capacity, and while the pessimistic rank and file among the purveyers of various commodities are bewailing the present economic depression with its heavy inroads in their returns, the theatres, through aggressive tactics, are reaping a financial reward, largely because the powers that be are looking through the glass at the proper angle. Their vision is not distorted. They see the doughnut and not the hole, as it were.

Subsequent Runs Hit

Extensive inquiry among suburban exhibitors as well as those in smaller towns within a reasonable radius of Cincinnati reveals a less healthy commercial condition. Here business has definitely slumped, the decrease ranging anywhere from 25 to 60 per cent as compared with similar calendar periods of last year. This falling off is not due to lack of showing meritorious pictures, or those which have a distinct box-office appeal, but rather to conditions in general. The business simply isn't there.

Some of the smaller exhibitors whom the writer interviewed are continuously in the red, and having a difficult time to keep their heads above water. Not having unlimited resources at their command, they must needs conserve their finances rather than employ them in ways and means to bolster up the vanishing business. Conversely, the chain houses, where ample financial backing is available, can effectively continue extensive exploitation with telling results.

As one small independent exhibitor aptly expressed it, "I simply cannot afford to throw good money after bad. I'm operating on a hand to mouth basis. The big fellow is sitting pretty. He can go out after business. He has the money. I haven't. This proves the old saying, 'Them that's got, gits'."

Among the smaller exhibitors it seems to be the survival of the fittest, and while there have not been an unusually large number of the smaller houses closing, a wholesale closing, either temporarily or permanently, looms as a possibiilty in view of the present state of affairs, which has implanted a fear psychosis in the minds of the little fellow in the exhibition end of the industry.

California Hit by Pee Wees and Inferior Films

San Diego—Theatres here have been walloped by economic conditions, midget golf and inferior pictures. In spite of this, when an outstanding attraction comes along the patrons turn out.

Following is a summary of the local situation:

Dwight L. Hill, general manager of Pacific National Theatres, operating the Superba, Plaza and Mission: "Our current business is running about ten or 15 per cent under normal, which is directly due to the business depression throughout the nation. This has been one of the worst summers in years in the motion picture business. Our business up to Sept. 1 was about 50 per cent below normal, due partly to the operation of the miniature golf courses, which drew heavily from the theatres.

"About Sept. 1, due to a run of better pictures, our business went up nearly to normal. Showmanship doesn't seem to draw out the crowds because they simply haven't the money to spend. We tried intensive advertising on one of our houses, but it failed to bring out the extra business.

"We kept the Plaza dark for ten weeks this summer because we felt it was cheaper to pay the rent on a vacant theatre. I predict the return to normal conditions in our business this winter because a number of really excellent pictures are in prospect."

Jack Edwards, manager of the Spreckels: "Our business is between 40 and 60 per cent below normal, due, I believe, entirely to the economic depression throughout the nation. The public is shopping for pictures now and picking them carefully. The people nowadays are going to a single picture a week instead of to three or four weekly, as was the case during boom times.

"Then, too, I blame the midget golf courses, night football and the county fair, partially, for the slow business. The fact that a picture is all talk means nothing to the movie public any more. It has got to be out of the ordinary. For example, when we showed "Little Accident" and "The Bad Man" they packed the house, but the ordinary run of picture doesn't attract.

"Showmanship doesn't make any impression because the public hasn't got the money to spend. The studios, I believe, are making an earnest effort to improve the quality of their pictures. The future depends entirely on business conditions because our business is the first to feel an economic depression and the last to recover from the effects of one."

L. Fountain, manager, San Diego, Calif, division of West Coast Fox: "Our business is doing very well in view of general conditions. I believe that the element of humor should be stressed as much as possible in pictures. The public wants the very best pictures and won't go to see the mediocre ones."

Poor Films, Pee Wee Golf Blamed For Cal. Slump

Good Shows Get the Big Money, Say Exhibitors

Providence—Good pictures produce good business, is the way leading Providence exhibitors sum up this depression bugaboo which, they seem to feel, is largely in the imagination.

While admitting that there is a serious business depression in other lines, they cite the fact that the public always seems to scare up the necessary half dollar or what it takes when a good film is in town.

Harry Storin, general manager of the RKO Albee and Victory, phrases it this way: "If exhibitors have the shows the people have the money—when exhibitors don't have the shows they don't get the money." Both John P. McCarthy of Loew's State and Ed Reed of the Paramount feel that business has been about normal ordinarily with figures jumping high when a film of exceptional merit is shown.

The Albee, for instance, broke all records for week-end business with "Half Shot at Sunrise," even exceeding the big gross of "All Quiet." Loew's with Eddie Cantor in "Whoopee" clicked a bit over $25,000. The Paramount since its opening a few months ago has kept on very even keel, averaging between $11,000 and $12,000. Their best bets, of the stamp of "The Dawn Patrol," hit around $15,000.

Exhibitors seem to feel that their showing is all the more remarkable because of the fact that the textile industry in Rhode Island is hard hit. Also every hamlet in the state has its own film house, most of which are flourishing. This stresses the fact that patrons of the Providence theatres come mostly from the city itself as Pawtucket and Woonsocket are well supplied with cinema houses.

The public today is too wise to be fooled by a bad picture and it takes considerable showmanship and ingenuity to lure the patrons in to see a film that is only so-so, managers say. This is amply demonstrated at the box-office of the house that has a program picture when the other big fellows are showing hot ones.

During the past year records at the Majestic, Loew's, RKO Victory, RKO Albee and figures compiled since the opening of the Paramount indicate that ratings have fluctuated between 85 and 110%.

Business About Normal At Coast 1st Runs; Others Hit

Los Angeles—Local first-run theatres are grossing about normal, in the opinion of Frank Whitbeck, director of advertising and publicity for Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., who thinks that business is about normal, but when compared to last year's figures from the box-office shows a marked decrease due to the fact that business at that time was considerably above the usual standard.

Talking pictures were then a novelty and their appeal was more to their unusualness rather than to the quality of the pictures. At the present time the picture is what brings the patron to the box office and business is in accordance with the merit of the pictures shown.

In the neighborhood houses the managers find that the child patronage is slowly coming back after almost a year of very little attention from the youngsters. The producers have found that the kid audience is greatly desirable and that the first talkers were not at all appealing to the juveniles. More westerns and the outdoor stuff have been scheduled and made, and the kids are once again wending their way to the box office.

Smaller Houses Suffer

The business in the smaller houses is from ten to 20 per cent below normal, according to local theatre men. The downtown houses have brought on stage shows and a better run of pictures and for them business has been much better. Certainly a great increase over the early part of the year and during the summer when grosses were at a low mark. At the present time the offering are of a better quality and the business has improved greatly, managers say. What the public wants is a good show and lots of it, and if they are offered that, theatre business will hold up.

Business conditions in other lines are not at all promising and the outlook for a pick-up is not at all bright.

Gross and Net at High Mark in Boston

Boston—Not for a number of years has this city's box offices, both gross and net, been so good as during the past nine months.

This is the opinion expressed by theatre managers on all sides, being especially true of the two or three managers who have been in charge of Boston first-run theatres over a period of several years.

While talk of business depression has been under way on all sides, it has not been reflected in Boston's theatres, which are well on the road to making 1930 the banner year of motion picture history.

In a number of cases changes in managers have been made with more or less frequency, hence only reference to actual records of the houses could be used for purposes of comparison. In a few instances the same manager is in charge who was there three, four and even five years ago. These men speak from personal knowledge.

One reason for the year's marked increase in Boston is doubtless due to the fact that there has been no increase in the number of first run theatres over a period of years. The Keith Memorial theatre merely took the place of the old B. F. Keith theatre among first-run houses. The Publix Uptown was one of the Keith houses before Publix acquired it. The seating capacity of first-run houses is practically the same today as it was five years ago.

Flesh Not Missed

When the Keith Memorial eliminated vaudeville it was believed that there would be a drop in gross. This has not materialized. Receipts have increased, while costs have decreased so that the Keith Memorial has not only shown an increased gross for the first nine months this year, but it has shown a very decided increase in the net receipts.

Keith Albee now shows vaudeville formerly presented at the Keith Memorial. It has resulted in a very marked increase in gross for the house and a slight increase in net, despite the very much larger expenses of the house.

The net gain of the vaudeville shift for the two theatres is estimated at better than 15 per cent.

Publix Business Up

The Metropolitan, the key theatre for the Publix chain in New England, has shown a steady increase in its gross the entire year. Compared with figures of a year ago, it shows a very marked gain. Other Publix theatres showing a gain are the Scollay Square, the Olympia, the Uptown, with minor gains in outlying second-run houses. It is estimated by a Publix official that the net gain over last season is better than 12½ per cent for the Boston houses.

Loew's two theatres, the State and the Orpheum, show a steady increase with patronage becoming more and more of the permanent, rather than transient type. It is estimated that at least ten per cent gain in net, and probably even larger, will be shown with the close of the current year.

Outside of Boston the gain is even more marked. There are fewer theatres in operation than a year ago at this time, for in almost every city of 35,000 or 40,000 population or over, at least one theatre has been closed, turned into an indoor miniature golf course or used for some other purpose. Construction of new theatres has slowed down materially so that the number of theatres now in operation are not only being well patronized, but are actually giving much more to their patrons in return, than ever before.

Small Town Gains Reported

Even in the mill cities, with the possible exception of New Bedford, the theatre business shows a marked gain for the first nine months of this year, compared with the same period of time for several years past. While totals for all these cities are not available, estimates gathered from the managers of the leading theatres have been as follows:

Cambridge, Mass., gain of 12 per cent over last year.

Malden, Mass., gain of five per cent over last year.

Medford, Mass., gain of eight per cent over last year.

Somerville, Mass., gain of five per cent.

Haverhill, Mass., gain of ten per cent.

Lowell, Mass., gain of 12 per cent.

Lawrence, Mass., gain of seven per cent.

Fall River, Mass., neither a gain nor loss.

Worcester, Mass., gain of six per cent.

Springfield, Mass., gain of ten per cent.

Manchester, N. H., gain of nine per cent.

Portland, Me., gain of 15 per cent.

New Bedford, Mass., loss; percentage not estimated.

Boston Grosses Running Plenty In the Black

Business on Up-Grade In Omaha Territory

Omaha—Despite national depression propaganda, business in this territory has been on the up grade all season, according to leading exhibitors here, who base their opinions on piled high percentages.

While the industrial centers have been hit hard, Iowa and Nebraska have depended on the farms to maintain their equilibrium. Crops have been consistently good and prices favorable in relation to quantity harvested. Depression in some centers may be the real thing, but talk of poor farmers apparently is all hot air. They like talkies and they come often.

"This territory has the best theatre business of any center in the United States," one chain executive said.

One chain house here has been leading most of the company's string from coast to coast in grosses based on its seating capacity. All downtown houses report an increase this season over the same period last year. Suburban and out-state theatres report grosses, in nearly all cases, on a par with last year.

Here's Idea if Theatre Business Continues Bad

Hollywood—A downtown theatre, operating a play-by-play scoreboard on the world series, uncovered a clever little plot among the square gamblers in the balcony.

Ushers first noticed several boys hurrying to and fro between the mezzanine phone booths and the balcony. Then something went wrong with the phone service. When they went to investigate, they discovered a boy with a buzzer set hooked on to wires in a booth.

These liaison operators were transmitting the result of a play 40 seconds before it was flashed on the board, and the balcony gamblers were cleaning up at so much a play.

Good Color

Mack Sennett's color process, termed Sennett Color, is unusual in the realistic effects obtained. The coloring, as shown in the first Sennett Brevities, "The Bluffer" and "Take Your Medicine," is natural and has beautiful tints. In addition, Sennett has wisely chosen two good single reel comedies to introduce the process, "The Bluffer" being particularly good and "Take Your Medicine" a fairly good subject, but both offering exceptional opportunity to use color to advantage.

Production and Theatre Building Spurt in England

Great Britain is off on a theatre-building jaunt. Houses of the de luxe type are being built or planned throughout the island empire, but principally in suburban centers.

Charles Wilcox, executive of the British and Dominions Film Corporation, Ltd., now in New York from London, is the authority for the statement. He sees in construction of this type of house serious times ahead for the smaller and out-of-date theatres, but an opportunity for producers and distributors to increase their profits because of an increased number of first run and big money outlets.

Wilcox also declares that production in England is jogging along at a rate unprecedented since talkers hit the tight little island. As against an approximate total of 25 pictures made from June, 1929, to June, 1930, he estimates 60 will be turned out between June of this year and the corresponding month of 1931. His own company has swelled its plans from three last year to 12 this.

"On Approval," "Canaries Sometimes Sing," "Plunder" and "Tons of Money" are finished. In work or on schedule are "The Blue Lagoon," "A Cuckoo in the Nest," "Carnival," "A Night Like This," "Thark," "Love Lies," "The Love Race" and "One Embarrassing Night."

"Saner Blue Law" Aimed To Stop N.J. Sunday Shows

Atlantic City—New Jersey's legislature will be called upon to enact a "saner blue law" which will have the sponsorship of the state's Lord's Day Alliance. The bill will eliminate asserted absurd provisions of the 125-year-old law. This will aim to prohibit Sunday shows, without prohibiting certain other forms of activity on the Sabbath.

Protective Club Formed

Hollywood—Protection of the character and promotion of the theatrical profession in the United States is the purpose of the Dominos, recently formed. Among the directors are: Mrs. Morgan Wallace, Constance De Mille, Claire Whitney Keane, Louise Dresser Gardner, Dorothy Bernard Van Buren and Margaret McKinney McAllister.

Louis Simon to Make Eighteen Pathe Comedies

Simple Simon Comedies, Inc., will produce a series of 18 comedies starring Louis Simon this season for Pathe release. Production will be at the Audio Cinema Studios, New York. Max Stark, former head of the musical sales department of Paramount Publix, is organizer, treasurer and general manager of the company. Ben Bloomfield is production manager and Frank Zukor camera chief.

Louis Simon

Sylvester J. Simon is president of the firm and Bert Westerman, secretary. Louis Simon appeared in several of the comedies made by the late George Le Maire for Pathe.

Answer Is Filed in De Forest-RKO Suit

Wilmington—Alleging that the patentee were not the first and sole inventors of certain apparatus in sound recording and reproducing methods, an answer was filed before Judge John P. Nield in Federal Court by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., defendents in the suit brought by the General Talking Pictures Corp. and De Forest Phonofilms, Inc.

According to the answer of the defendents, the patents described do not constitute patentable matter and asked for dismissal of the bill. The defendent company also denies that it has a regular established place of business in this city.

Chicago—Cases brought against 26 Chicago theatres by the city fire prevention bureau were continued to Nov. 12, when called in Municipal Court here Wednesday. The charges involve alleged violations of fire prevention ordinances in the use of acoustical materials not approved by the fire commissioner's office.

Record Business at N. Y. Cameo with Africa Speaks

"Africa Speaks" is continuing its box office records with a fourth week at the Cameo, New York, where it has chalked up the biggest grosses of the theatre's season.

"If all of them were placed back to back," he asks, "wouldn't it be a great idea?"

Return of the Musical

The 10 per cent. salary cut at United Artists went into effect late last week.

Shortly after the checks were handed out a company executive walked through the office humming "Happy Days Are Here Again."

One of the stenogs immediately behind him stood it as long as she could, then turned and said:

"My goodness, what a man!"

They're thinking of forming The Ten Percenters, a new social organization at U. A. headquarters.

Asks $1,800,000 Of Seven Firms In 'Blacklisting'

Indianapolis—Damages of $1,800,000 are asked of six producers and distributors and a talking picture equipment company in a suit filed in Federal court by Harry Muller, theatre operator of Anderson, Ind. Defendants are Fox, Universal, United Artists, Pathe, RKO, Tiffany and Electrical Research Products.

The suit alleges that a co-operative setup of motion picture distributors exists, whereby Muller was blacklisted and that service by distributors, except perhaps one, was refused to him in a conspiracy to put him out of business.

The suit alleges he contracted with some of the firm defendants for talking picture films and talking disc records, but that after he had placed the necessary equipment for sound on film type, the equipment company then announced it was unable to place the sound-film attachment, leaving Muller with no use for the sound film.

Catholics to Boycott Films Deemed Unfit

San Francisco—Knights of Columbus are concerned over what they feel are obscene and improper films and they are forming the Catholic Screen Commission to deal with the matter. The commission is being formed with the sanction of Patrick Cardinal Hayes of New York. Appointees are to be nationally known screen, dramatic and art critics and the organization will advocate boycott rather than censorship of undesirable films.

Howard and Fox Close to New Deal; Not Signed Yet

Hollywood—They're still at it, the "it" being the terms of William K. Howard's new contract with Fox. The deal is practically set and calls for a series of eight pictures at a salary which will return to the director four handsome figures a week.

Warners Add Two More

Danbury, Conn.—Warners have taken over the two local theatres of the Danbury Amusement Corp.

Fraser in New York

William R. Fraser, general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, is in New York for the premiere of "Feet First."

Michigan Unit Adopts Pledge Of Cooperation

Grand Rapids—Michigan theatre owners have adopted a membership pledge which it is believed will make the already powerful state organization a vastly stronger and more influential unit.

The pledge offers new financial aid to the Michigan organization and subjects every member in good standing to render personal and other services for the organization whenever called upon to do so.

Following is the text of the pledge:

In order to secure the maximum benefits to be derived from a membership in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, Inc., I hereby pledge:

1. To pay my dues monthly in advance.
2. To fully and completely carry out every policy determined by a majority of the Board of Directors, after receiving due notice of the same, in order that the composite strength of the organization may be maintained.
3. To voice any criticism of the Association, its policies or activities, only to the Association Headquarters or to the Board of Directors at their regular meeting, either in writing or in person, that the organization may not be handicapped by internal conflict.
4. To promptly respond when the organization asks me to render personal service, if physically able, or unless prevented by causes beyond my control, either on membership, legislative activities or necessary organization activities as determined by the Directors.
5. To attend the state convention unless prevented by causes beyond my control and as many of the other meetings as feasible for me to attend.
6. To, if I run any advertising other than my own advance trailers, show the advertisement of one advertiser per week (not political) be it slide, trailer or industrial reel, the proceeds of same in addition to my dues to go to the benefit of the Association.

In signing this pledge I understand that non-payment of dues or failure to keep any of the specific pledges shall make me liable for expulsion from membership. That non-payment of dues shall be direct notice both from me and from the Board of Directors that the headquarters cannot render to me or to any other theatre owner so defaulting any service whatsoever.

I also understand that under the constitution and by-laws of the Association any member defaulting, expelled or withdrawing for any reason except legitimate retirement from business cannot be reinstated without the payment of a reinstatement fee of $100.00, unless by the unanimous consent of the Board of Directors or a majority consent of the membership at any meeting.

I make these pledges realizing that without complete co-ordination of effort I cannot derive the maximum benefits from this organization.

Fox in Honolulu?

Los Angeles—Although nothing definite has been announced, it is understood that Fox West Coast officials headed by Oscar Oldknow are strongly considering the building of a picture theatre in Honolulu. As yet no specific plans have been offered but it is supposed that a de luxe type house will be built as soon as a site can be obtained. Fox West Coast operates no theatres in Honolulu at present.

Seeks Opera Deal

Earle W. Hammons

24 Chicago Opera Films Sought by E. W. Hammons

Chicago—Educational will make a series of one-reel pictures in connection with the Chicago Civic Opera Company this winter, if negotiations now under way between E. W. Hammons and Samuel Insull, president of the opera company, are concluded satisfactorily. The shorts will be made from highlights of popular operas to be produced here, and are included in Education's new program calling for the production of educational and kindred pictures.

The regular stars and casts of the Chicago Civic Opera Company will be used for the productions.

Hammons opened the negotiations with Insull here during a recent visit in the city. An agreement was not reached at that time, but the deal is expected to be concluded very shortly, possibly during the ensuing week in New York, where Insull is at present. Similar productions were made last year by Fox, working with the Chicago Civic Opera Company, but it is understood Fox will not renew the deal this year.

Decline of the Musical Ends Murray on Fox Lot

Hollywood—J. Harold Murray, Broadway warbler, has been forced off the Fox lot because of a studio decision to lay off musicals, said decision being prompted by the public reaction against that type of talker.

The unexpired portion of Murray's contract has been bought up.

Gets $150,000 And Share of "Ingagi" Profits

Agreement to share profits on "Ingagi," plus payment of $150,000 to Byron P. Mackenzie, has ended litigation over "Ingagi" brought by Mackenzie against Congo Pictures. As a result, the injunction against distribution and showing has been dissolved, and the picture will resume playing. Louis Nizer represented Mackenzie in the litigation.

"Ingagi," African jungle picture, was released about six months ago and was branded a fake by various scientists and explorers, who enlisted the National Better Business Bureau in a campaign to denounce alleged false claims of authenticity made for the film. The Hays organization also is said to have interested itself in the charges of fake and turned thumbs down on the film. Mackenzie claimed that scenes obtained by his mother were being used without his permission.

Chamberlain Receivership Is Further Complicated

Sunbury, Pa. — Following agreement among 18 lawyers representing various interests related to the ownership and operation of Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises, which controls a number of theatres in the hard coal mining regions of Pennsylvania, to recommend to the Northumberland County Court that the present temporary receivership be made permanent, Louis Berman, of Philadelphia, filed a petition objecting to the plan.

Berman, who has on record a lease of the properties of the corporation, but who does not have possession of the theatres, contends that by virtue of the lease he had right of possession to all property and theatres of the corporation at the time, recently, when the temporary receivership was created by the court. He holds that the receivership constituted an illegal ouster. He contends, moreover, that the court is without jurisdiction to issue a permanent receivership order and that the properties should be turned over to him as lessee.

It was intimated by General C. M. Clement, counsel for Berman, that his client will take his fight for possession of the theatres to the State Supreme Court if the local court fails to act in his favor. The local court set Nov. 10 as the date for the hearing of the case. The affairs of the corporation have been subjected to a long period of complicated litigation.

Geography Note

Universal shows previews regularly in New Rochelle.

Bob and Phil Cochrane, Nate Manheim, Charlie Paine, Phil Reisman and others of the Laemmle family also live in New Rochelle.

Now there's a move on to change the name of the town to Universal City.

Broadway Gold Flows to "Half Shot at Sunrise"

Broadway last week was backing up for a fresh start, it would indicate with the rush of business which has characterized the current week, the Roxy grabbing off heavy dough with "Scotland Yard" in its first three days, indicating another big Fox winner. The Paramount is looking up this week, after diving last week.

The public didn't seem to go for Realife in its bow at the Capitol, but maybe the picture had more to do with it than the wide screen process, "Billy, the Kid" not being accepted as anything big in the way of entertainment. There is speculation as to whether it has taken the edge off "The Big Trail" opening Friday with Grandeur.

Wednesday night marked closing of "The Big House" after four months, being replaced Thursday with "War Nurse." Closing of "Outward Bound" is scheduled next week and there is report that one of the "Hell's Angels" showings may be pulled. "Lincoln" is doing just so-so- at the Central and soon will fold. The Radio Pictures' hit, "Half Shot at Sunrise," which came in quietly, grabbed off $28,000, smash business for the Globe.

Estimated takings:

"THE BIG HOUSE" (M-G-M)

ASTOR—(1,120) 50c-75c-$1-$1.50-$2, 7 days, 17th week. Other attractions: "College Hounds" (dog comedy), news. Gross: $14,252. Tapered off and coming out.

"THOSE THREE FRENCH GIRLS" (M-G-M)

CAPITOL—(4,700) 35c-50c-75c-$1.50, 7 days. Other attractions: "Below Zero," news, Capitol presentation. Gross: $68,364, not so good.

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN" (U.A.)

CENTRAL—(1,490) $1-$2, 7 days, 8th week. Other attractions: "Dollar Dizzy," "The Zampa." Gross: $16,318. Just fair; due to fold.

"ATLANTIC" (B.I.P.)

GEO. M. COHAN—(1,500) 35c-50c-75c, 7 days, 2nd week. Other attractions: "Gay Paree." Gross: Around $5,000. Fair take.

"HELL'S ANGELS" (Caddo-U.A.)

(Playing simultaneously at the Criterion and Gaiety)
CRITERION—(850) $1-$2-$2.50, 7 days, 9th week. Other attractions: None. Gross: $18,162. Good business for this day and date attraction.

EMBASSY—ALL NEWSREEL

EMBASSY—(598) 25c, 7 days. Straight newsreel. Gross: $9,348. House holding to steady average.

"HELL'S ANGELS" (Caddo-U.A.)

GAIETY—(808) $1-$1.50-$2-$2.50, 7 days, 9th week. Other attractions: None. Gross: $14,993. Off considerably; looks like run near end.

"HALF SHOT AT SUNRISE" (RKO)

GLOBE—(1,050 35c-50c-75c, 7 days. Other attractions: Shorts, "The Hidden Ball," "Monkey Melodies," "Voice of Hollywood," news. Gross: $28,000. A box-office smash at this RKO stand.

"OUTWARD BOUND" (Warners)

HOLLYWOOD—(1,600) 60c-75c-$1-$1.50, 4th week. Other attractions: "Looney Tunes," "Helen Broderick," "Martinelli." Gross: $19,361. Good gross for this attraction, which critics found hard to peg.

"HEADS UP" (Para.)

PARAMOUNT—(3,700) 40c-50c-65c-85c-$1, 7 days. Other attractions: Shorts, "Pining Pioneers," "Birds of a Feather," news. Gross: $58,200. Wheo this house goes under 60 grand, it's B-A-D.

"WHAT A WIDOW" (U.A.)

RIALTO—(1,904) 65c-85c, 7 days, 2nd week. Other attractions: "You're in the Army Now," "Grand Uproar." Gross: $36,600. This picture's days are numbered at this figure.

STRAND—(3,000) 35c-50c-65c-85c, 7 days. Other attractions: "Seeing-Off Service," "Satan's Fury," "French Fried." Gross: $31,649. Fairly profitable week, though not hot.

"OLD ENGLISH" (Warners)

WARNERS—(1,490) $1-$1.50, 7 days, 8th week. Other attractions: "The Legacy," "Believe It or Not." Gross: $13,754. Slipping steadily and due to fold soon.

"OFFICE WIFE " (F.N.)

WINTER GARDEN — (1,493) 35c-50c-65c-$1, 3rd week, 7 days. Other attractions: "Eddie Foy," "Mark Hellinger," "Walter Winchell," news. Gross: $32,390. Good business for third stanza at this stand.

Something New

From out of the West, Harry Rathner, veteran producer and exchangeman, has brought something brand new in the way of entertainment. The Radio Robots, the new subjects are called, and the first one demonstrates clearly that Harry has something new and revolutionary in the way of entertainment. In the intial release, the robots do some singing and dancing stuff which is sensational. A broad vista of possibilities is opened up by the new series, for the plastic figures speak with a lip movement precision that is almost uncanny. This series offers opportunities which are sensational.

Prosperity Week Proves Anything But in Seattle

Seattle—"Prosperity Week" was rather a misnomer in this city. Paramount Publix's sponsorship of this nation-wide movement didn't click very strongly in this city, nor did the "Prosperity Week" attractions at the local theatres.

As a feature of the celebration, Publix set "Follow Through" in its Paramount theatre, but the film didn't seem to have much pull here, where the stage show wasn't known, and a gross of about $13,500 was all that the house could pull, for a rating of about 97%. At the Fox Fifth Avenue, "Three French Girls" wasn't much of a draw, taking about $12,500 for a rating of 95%. And DeMille's "Madam Satan" at the Fox had tough sledding to get about $12,000, for 110% rating.

John Hamrick's Music Box had a very successful week with "Whoopee" (second week), but the Blue Mouse flopped with "Last of the Lone Wolf" and the picture was pulled after four days of the run had earned only about $4,000.

Estimated takings:

"THE SEA WOLF" (Fox)

Extended Run

COLISEUM—(1,650) 25c-35c-50c, 7 days. Other attractions: Educational comedy, news. Gross: $3,000. Rating: 98%.

"LAST OF THE LONE WOLF" (Col.)

BLUE MOUSE — (950) 25c-35c-50c-75c, 4 days. Other attractions: Vitaphone Varieties, Sportlight, news. Gross: $4,000. Rating: 70%.

Fox Films Cop On Coast; Three Hit Big Dough

Los Angeles—It was Fox Week at Los Angeles and Hollywood first runs, with "The Big Trail," "Just Imagine" and "Up the River" all getting big dough.

While "Just Imagine" pulled a higher rating, "The Big Trail's" take was the more surprising in view of the fact that it grabbed $22,000 in its third week, indicating that the Grandeur film is due for a stay of several more weeks at Grauman's Chinese.

With fair weather, business took an upward trend, the run houses holding up well and downtown houses chalking up fine grosses. Enlarged publicity campaigns hoomed the Criterion, Chinese and Circle, while "Whoopee" continued well in its second week. "The Spoilers" proved a big draw at the Pantages, Hollywood.

Estimated takings:

Los Angeles

"JUST IMAGINE" (Fox)

FOX CARTHAY CIRCLE—(1,650) 75c-$1.50, 7 days, 2nd week, twice daily. Other attractions: Abe Lyman and band, news. Gross: $20,000. Rating: 160%.

"Hell's Angels" Going To Film Houses Nov. 15

Because of the reported threat of "The Dawn Patrol" to the success of "Hell's Angels," the latter will be released generally to picture houses Nov. 15. Soon after the picture opened in New York, when road-show runs were being discussed, MOTION PICTURE NEWS stated exclusively that the picture soon would go out to film houses, due to fear that the First National air picture would take the edge off Howard Hughes' costly drama.

"Her Man" Gets $14,300; High In Providence

Providence—Sensational business at the RKO Albee, where "Her Man" clicked for $14,300, featured the week's high grosses. This business equals the record set by "Half Shot at Sunrise" two weeks ago. At the other RKO house, the Victory, biz also was good with "The Sea God," $11,000 pouring in.

A double-feature bill, "The Squealer" and "Sweethearts on Parade," did close to $11,500 at the Majestic, which is fair. At the Paramount "Monte Carlo" checked in for $12,500, sound enough. Loew's State was off a bit with "Those Three French Girls," hitting $17,500.

"MONTE CARLO" (Par.)
PARAMOUNT—(2,300), 10c-50c, 7 days. Other attractions: Organlogue, news. Gross: $12,500. Rating: 95%.

Talker to Aid "Buy Now" Philly Campaign

Philadelphia—Advantage of the talking picture as an exploitation medium has been seized upon by the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, which will sponsor a series of talking shorts and trailers, featuring speeches by prominent Philadelphia business, professional and social leaders to stimulate a "Buy Now" campaign.

The campaign starts this week, but the films will not be released until next week. The cooperation of the Stanley-Warner Co., the Fox company and the various independent interests in Philadelphia and vicinity has been secured, and all exhibitors will give the shorts a play in their theatres.

Baltimore Continuing Daylight Saving Fight

Baltimore—About 200 attended the meeting at Keith's under auspices of the Association Opposed to Daylight Saving. Henry F. Broening, president of the Baltimore Federation of Labor, urged that daylight saving be voted down by an overwhelming majority when the question comes up on the ballots in Baltimore at the general election Nov. 4, and said organized labor is opposed to daylight saving.

Frank W. Lawson, executive secretary of the Standard Time League and several others also spoke against daylight time.

Maynard to Tiffany

Hollywood—Tiffany has signed Ken Maynard, former First National star, for a series of westerns.

Portland, Ore.—Display ad which appeared in the "Portland News," advertising a serial booking at the Music Box. This is the first time a serial has been advertised locally by a first run in years.

'Spoilers' $9,000 "Lady" $6,972 to Lead D.M. Parade

Des Moines—Business was good for all playhouses this week and would have been better but for the fact that cold weather swooped down on Iowa and diverted some funds to coal and clothes that later will swell the coffers of picture houses. "The Spoilers" at the Des Moines for seven days and the picture at the Orpheum for the last half of the week, "A Lady Surrenders," were given high ratings with 150%. "Love in the Rough" and "Play Boy of Paris," dividing the week at the Paramount, stacked up good with 120%. "Love in the Rough" is a good audience picture and Chevalier in the latter film is popular.

"The Storm" drew 100% business, although Lupe Velez has not been doing so well at the larger houses. The Rockne sport series went over big. "One Night at Susie's" was above average, and "Animal Crackers" on return engagement also did 125%.

Estimated takings:

Baltimore Showmen in Midget Golf Business

Baltimore—F. H. Durkee Enterprises, operating about 20 theatres in Baltimore, and Walter Pacy, associated with that company, have entered the midget golf business. In a room across from the bowling alleys established in the old Arcade Theatre building, Hamilton, operated by the Durkee interests, a golf course has been built. During the day until 6 P. M. admission is 15 cents to all while after that time children are 15 cents and adults 25 cents. On Saturdays, Sundays and holidays night prices prevail. The basement of Pacy's Garden theatre, residential house in South Baltimore, has been arranged for a midget golf course.

Band First Flesh Attraction in Years

Seattle—Yielding to the pressure of competition, John Hamrick, this week introduces a "live" band in his local Blue Mouse theatre—the first "flesh" presentation in the house since it became the first talker theatre in the Pacific Northwest territory several years ago. Since that time, the house has offered nothing but sound reels in support of the feature attractions.

"Half Shot" and All Film Policy Shoot Up Gross

Chicago—Sensation of the week here was the performance of the State-Lake which, with vaudeville out for the first time since the house was opened, more than doubled its normal weekly gross under the old vaude-film policy and equalled the take for the week of the Chicago. Publix rival house across the street, with 1,000 more seats than the RKO house. "Half Shot at Sunrise" (Radio) inaugurated the new policy at the State-Lake, and, getting $45,360 (107%), was good for a second week. Other RKO houses were big money-getters during the same week. Palace, inaugurating a twelve-weeks' schedule of big name acts, with Ruth Etting leading off, went to a new house record for its vaude-film policy with $25,200 (105%). Etting was booked for a return engagement as a result. "The Pay-Off" (Radio) was the feature. The Woods, with a second and final week of "A Lady Surrenders" (U.), hit $14,950 (130%). "East Is West" (U.) replaced, and will remain until the 27th, when RKO relinquishes this house.

McVickers went to $34,700 (124%) with "Madam Satan" (M-G-M), first week. "Whoopee" (U. A.), after starting a slide at the opening of its second week, began to build again, and finished the week with $23,800 (108%), only two grand under the first week. Indifferent reviews were responsible for slowing this one up, but word-of-mouth advertising rescued it. The Oriental, after four weeks of scarlet tallies, came to life again with $41,100 (98%), with four Cubs' ball and bat men as a stage draw. "Top Speed" (F. N.) was the picture. The Punch & Judy got a new high mark with "Abraham Lincoln" (U. A.) after a second price cut and a switch to continuous policy.

Estimated takings:

"EXTRAVAGANCE" (Tiffany)
CASTLE—(300) 60c, first 3 days. Other attractions: News. Picture playing to adults only; went in at mid-week with adverse reviews and good business. Short running time of this one is giving house 12 shows daily. Gross: $3,100. Rating (3-day basis): 201%.

"GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST" (F. N.)
CHICAGO—(3,940) 35c-85c, 7 days. Other attractions: Stage show, orchestra, news, comedy, novelty short. Gross: $45,600. Rating: 95%.

"THE PAY-OFF" (Radio)
PALACE—(2,509) 35c-75c, 7 days. Other attractions: Four acts RKO vaudeville headed by Ruth Etting, news, comedy, musical short, orchestra. New high for this house with vaude-film policy. Etting gets a return engagement later in the season. Big name acts booked for 12 successive weeks. Gross: $25,200. Rating: 105%.

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN" (U. A.)
PUNCH & JUDY—(390) 75c-$2, fourth week. Other attractions: Chimp comedy (Tiffany). House switched from three-a-day to grind policy from 1 to 11—getting five shows daily. Second price cut makes general admission six bits and one buck. Reserved seats in smoking loge only at $2. New high money mark for house. Gross: $9,840. Rating (new basis): 120%.

"THE SEA WOLF" (Fox)
ROOSEVELT—(1,591) 35c-85c, final 7 of 11-day engagement. Other attractions: News, musical short, comedy. Picture couldn't get going. Replaced after 11 days by "Liliom" (Fox). Gross: $16,800. Rating: 82%.

"HALF SHOT AT SUNRISE" (Radio)
STATE-LAKE—(2,776) 35c-75c, first week. Other attractions: Cartoon (Radio), news. First week as run house, straight picture policy, more than doubled usual gross for vaude-film here formerly. Picture good for one more week then "Check and Double Check" (Radio) replaces. House averages eight shows daily, and can do 50 grand a week. Gross: $45,360. Rating: 107%.

"WHOOPEE" (U. A.)
UNITED ARTISTS—(1,700) 35c-85c, second week. Other attractions: News, travelogue. After starting to slip, word-of-mouth advertising picked this one up. Good for a third week. "DuBarry, Woman of Passion" (U. A.) set to replace. Gross: $23,800. Rating: 108%.

"A LADY SURRENDERS" (Universal)
WOODS—(1,166) 35c-75c, second and final week. Other attractions: News, Terrytoon (Radio), musical short, "East Is West" replaced, and will run till the 27th, when RKO gives up this spot. Gross: $14,950. Rating: 130%.

Teamed by "U" Again

Hollywood—Two of the leads of "A Lady Surrenders" will be teamed again in "Half Gods" at Universal City. Conrad Nagel and Genevieve Tobin have been assigned the roles, with Monroe Owsley in the third featured role.

"Susie" Shoves K. C. Pan in Front; $12,500

Kansas City — The Pantages and the Newman exchanged places as to ratings last week. The Newman for several weeks has been enjoying ace business while the Pan has been feeling a slump. "Three Faces East" at the Newman nosed down to 85%, or an intake of $10,600 while the Pan climbed up to a rating of 125%, or $12,500. Recently these ratings have been reversed. "One Night at Susie's" was the feature attraction at the Pantages.

"Monte Carlo" gave the Royal $5,000, which means a rating of 110%. The Mainstreet also rated 110% with "Her Man" ringing up $16,500 at the box-office. "Those Three French Girls" was a poor magnet for the Midland, which took in only $11,600, or a rating of 80%. Average for this house is $14,500. "The Storm" brought $5,100 to the Uptown. This means a rating of 85%.

With the exception of the Pantages, Kansas City first runs showed a decided slump in business.

"Wedding Night's" $18,050 Big for 'Cincy' Theatre

Cincinnati — Coincidentally, there were three plus and three minus signs in this week's box-office checkup. However, the total gross for all houses showed a slight gain over last week. Business at the RKO Capitol, with "A Lady Surrenders," was somewhat better from a standpoint of gross, but was off 16% when reckoned in percentages. This was the only house that did not hit the 100% mark or better.

"Hell's Angels," originally set in for a four-weeks' roadshow run at the Shubert, had a big first week, but thereafter business began to hit the toboggan, and the picture folded after the third week. The fact that "Journey's End" at the same house this season was likewise pulled after three weeks of a four-weeks' hooking would seem to indicate that local fans are fed up on pictures of this nature, especially at fancy prices.

RKO Strand showed "Matrimonial Kiss," which in reality is Warners' "Matrimonial Bed," but the Ohio censors didn't quite like the title and changed it. They did not otherwise tamper with the original, but the fact they had a finger in the pie undoubtedly had an unfavorable reaction on business at this house, which did not duplicate some of its past performances.

Grombacher Deal Off; Fox Slated to Build

Spokane, Wash.—Difference of $50,000 kept Fox West Coast from gaining virtual control of the local situation, it is reported. The circuit was that far apart in its projected deal with Ray Grombacher for his houses, Grombacher holding out for $550,000, with $500,000 offered.

Now Fox West Coast is planning to build a house which will cost $650,000 and Grombacher's competition still exists. In addition, RKO is reported seeking a site, so a three-cornered situation is threatened.

He Means a Miracle

Two of the trade-paper gentry were in the midst of a hot discussion over what type of material represented news value in the picture business, when the younger of the duo, a "greenhorn," asked the old reporter for his definition of that much-abused word, news.

"Waal, I'll tell you," replied the old-timer, "if Fox Film buys Big 4 Productions, that ain't nothin'. But if Big 4 buys Fox, brother, that's news"

Ottawa Goes for "Romance" $3,400 Worth at Centre

Ottawa—Famous Players' Prosperity Week campaign was an effective community feature for the week of Oct. 11, but warm weather kept many people away from the theatres. Moreover, "Romance" at the Centre, an independent house, was the pick of the attractions, grabbing off a gross of $3,400 for 110%. "Follow Through" was the Prosperity Week feature at the Regent and rated 100% with $5,500. "Dawn Patrol" shot over par at the Avalon for three days with a rating of 110%. The rest of the pictures were just so-so—in fact, "Danger Lights" at Keith's was a near-wreck at 80%.

Estimated takings:

"ROMANCE" (M-G-M)

CENTRE—(1,200) 15c-50c, 6 days. Other attractions: "Voice of Hollywood" (Tiffany), "The Blimp Mystery" (Tiffany comedy). Gross: $3,400. Rating: 110%.

Sunday Shows Balked By Order of Mayor

Martinsburg, W. V.—H. A. Doman, manager of the Apollo, gave up his plans to inaugurate shows on Sunday at his playhouse and those in the crowd that gathered outside were disappointed, whether they came to see the theatre proprietor arrested or the performance inside the playhouse, for neither took place. Mayor C. H. Dailey considers exhibition a violation of the city ordinance forbidding work in gainful occupations on the Sabbath, except where necessary. A sign on the playhouse announced the mayor had ordered the house closed. He was backed up by the Ministerial Association of the city, and commended for his action.

"Love in Rough," Flesh to $18,500 Montreal's Leader

Montreal—Famous Players Canadian Corp. decorated the main stem of Montreal with flags, bunting and signs for its Prosperity Week drive and the campaign aroused plenty of interest. But the weather was so warm during the first half of the week that the people sought the outdoors rather than the theatres. Patronage was largely made up starting Wednesday, when cold, clouds and rain blew in. The first week of stage shows at the Capitol proved a wow with a draw of $18,500, or 120%, the screen attraction being "Love in the Rough." At the Princess, "Whoopee" continued a wonder for its fourth week, again registering $12,000, or 100%. Several nights the crowds were standing 15 deep when the nine o'clock show started. The Palace lost ground with "Let Us Be Gay" when word got around that the Norma Shearer vehicle had been trimmed by the censors. Two British features, "The Hate Ship" at the Imperial and "Greek Street" at the Roxy, were only steady.

Estimated takings:

"LOVE IN THE ROUGH" (M-G-M)

CAPITOL—(2,670) 25c-85c, 7 days. Other attractions: News; Jack Arthur stage show, "Hello, Montreal"; "Flip the Frog" (cartoon). Gross: $18,500. Rating: 120%.

Raoul Walsh Slated To Direct in Europe

Hollywood—Raoul Walsh, Fox director, will go to Europe this spring and will perhaps direct a picture over there. Final plans for the trip to France have not been set nor has any announcement been made regarding what picture he will direct. A story recently assigned to Alexander Korda—and refused—is thought to be the one.

Durkee Opens Another

Baltimore—The Edgewood, residential playhouse designed along Colonial lines by Architect John J. Zink, with a seating capacity of 1,250, has been opened by the Lynnhurst Corp. This house is another link in the F. H. Durkee Enterprises controlling about nineteen houses in Baltimore.

D-d-do T-t-tell?

They tell this one about Joe Frisco, who has a couple of Vitaphone shorts to his credit:

In a Chicago hotel the comic called for a messenger boy.

"Did you c-c-c call for me, Sir?" asked the messenger.

"Y-y-yes, I d-d-did, but y-y-you g-g-go right b-b-back to the office and t-t-tell them I w-w-want a straight man," replied Frisco.

"Raffles" Minus Flesh to $20,500 Leading Toronto

Toronto—Lillian Roth in person at the Imperial was the real center of attraction during the week, and with "Rain or Shine" on the screen and a stage show, the house drew $20,000 for a rating of 115%. This was topped by "Raffles" at Loew's, with an all-screen bill, with returns of $20,500 for 125%. It was quite a week all around and Famous Players' Prosperity Week campaign looked good. The Tivoli, under the new management of James Lynch, continues to hold up, earning $12,000, or 90%, with "The Office Wife." With vaudeville out of Loew's, many are turning to Shea's Hippodrome for vaudeville and pictures, but the battle of the town is between Loew's and the Imperial. The week started out like summer, but turned cold.

Estimated takings:

"RAIN OR SHINE" (Columbia)

IMPERIAL—(3,600), 25c-75c, 6 days. Other attractions: News, Lillian Roth in person, Jack Arthur stage show, concert orchestra. Gross: $20,000. Rating: 115%.

Pee Wee Course Planned In Wilmington House

Wilmington—The Parkway will be transformed into a miniature golf course, which is now the craze in this city and which is also causing the attendance of local theatres to lag. The permit for the "teeny" course calls for the alteration of the building at a cost of $3,000.

With the rapid construction of courses patrons spend their time playing this game and theatre men here fear that there will be no let-up until cold weather comes and prevents the golf bugs from playing.

Snow Halts Production

Hollywood — "The Great Meadow" company, which planned to leave for Sonora the first of the week, will be delayed for some time due to a heavy snowfall there. John Mack Brown and Eleanor Boardman head the cast for M-G-M.

Weather Socks Minneapolis B. O., 75% Is Top Mark

Minneapolis—Minnesota weather staged a free-for-all during the week to give theatre managers a rich choice of alibis.

The weatherman's show included everything in his bag of tricks from uncomfortable heat to the first hard freeze of the season, half a dozen light rains, at least one downpour with thunder and lightning, two swift flurries of snow and several bright, cool days.

A sudden swing from hot to very cold gave trouble to some managers on account of frozen automobile radiators that put the family car out of business and kept the folks from sallying forth. As soon as this trouble was adjusted, however, bright cold weather brought them out in force to take up the slack and put the box-offices back on their feet.

Motor touring, which at this season of the year cuts strongly into afternoon business if not into the early evening shows, became unpopular as soon as the mercury hit bottom. Outlying residents huddled over newly made furnace fires during the gloomy periods but apartment house dwellers sought refuge from the gloom in downtown theatres so that the general effect of the weather was a shifting of the audience from one group to another rather than any appreciable loss at the box-office.

Minnesota's football game against Indiana did not cut heavily into the Saturday afternoon business because of the cold weather and the relative unimportance of the game. The radio broadcast of the game was probably a larger factor, many persons preferring to stay beside the hearthfires and listen to the game by radio.

The arrival of Gladys George to become the new leading woman of the Shubert stock players gave that theatre a little more pulling power than usual in opposition to the films, but the percentages indicate that box-offices held their own against sport, rival attractions and the weatherman's free show.

"Big House" Big Smash Getting 30 Grand at Stillman

Cleveland—Two outstanding first-runs and three fair runs is the local report for the week. "The Big House" went over big with an approximate weekly total of $30,000 and the State played to full benches with Helen Kane as the drawing card de luxe dividing honors with the picture, "Love in the Rough." The week-end weather was too beautiful to entice theatre patronage, and this hurt business both downtown and at the neighborhood houses.

"The Big House" has received plenty of publicity due to the ban first placed on it by censors.

"Her Man" Hits High in Omaha With $17,600

Omaha—With a continuance of ideal fall weather, the Orpheum romped away from the other houses with a 110 per cent week playing "Her Man." Nothing big on the stage either. Incidentally, this house hasn't dropped below the par mark for many weeks. Total for the week was $17,600.

At the Paramount, "The Spoilers" slipped to 90 per cent, despite a vigorous advance campaign, getting by with $7,650. Lacking drawing power, the World also dropped with "The Sea God." Picture did $10,450 on the house's combination policy, which is 95 per cent.

At the State, "Love in the Rough," last four days, hit 110 per cent for $2,750. First half, "Czar of Broadway," flopped. $2,112 is only 85 per cent.

Estimated takings:

"Whoopee" Clicks $23,000 (125%) In Philadelphia

Philadelphia — With one or two exceptions, grosses in Philly held to the same level they experienced the previous week. "Whoopee" clicked a splendid $23,000 for a second week, though it was moved out of the Boyd to make room for "Old English," whose playing date has been overdue in this territory. "Whoopee" was moved into the Karlton, where it started off big on Friday.

Switching "Manslaughter" early in the week after fair business, Keith's pushed in "Anybody's Woman" on Wednesday, which clicked off a little better than $14,000 for four days. With five days of "A Lady Surrenders," on a second run, the Karlton grossed $6,200, a good figure.

Otherwise, the grosses were just fair. For the second straight week the Mastbaum dropped to $35,000, or $5,000 under normal for "Madam Satan." The Fox scraped a little under with $26,000 with "Heads Up" while the Stanley grossed $17,000, a poor first week for "Good News."

Settlement of the strike will bring stage shows back to Philadelphia on Friday, with the Roxy chorus on the stage at the Fox and the Duncan sisters at the Masthaum. The Mastbaum this week is offering Moran and Mack in person, without an orchestra.

"Scotland Yard's" $11,500 (115%) Baltimore's Top

Baltimore — Business at the big houses went along fairly well here during the week, with the weather fair and warm during the first four days and then cool for Friday and Saturday with showers Friday afternoon and evening.

While business was good at Loew's Stanley with "Those Three French Girls" as the attraction, backed up by a big slice of national advertising campaign in the Hearst Baltimore papers, it was not anything like what would be expected. The gross was figured around $15,550, while the rating was 90 per cent. This picture did not prove a big hit with the public although they took it fairly well.

Ramon Novarro's "Call of the Flesh," went over all right at Loew's Century with a gross estimated at $16,000, which can be considered the new 100 per cent rating for that house.

So much for the large grosses.

Next in line came the reported gross of the New theatre of $11,500, with Edmund Lowe in "Scotland Yard," which is an estimated rating of 115 per cent. This house started off well, being backed up with extra advertising space, taken by the theatre in newspaper and by word-of-mouth praise began to pull the high class trade and one night, during the latter part of the week. the audience looked like a Who's Who of Baltimore in person.

"Hunting Tigers in India," proved a good drawing card at the Little Theatre with its seating capacity of 267, and the box office showed a gross of about $1,000, making a 100 per cent week.

Receipts were a little off at the Hippodrome with the tabloid stage show policy with acts; chorus and orchestra and "Czar of Broadway." But a substantial week was enjoyed with a gross of $8,500, rating 85%.

"Liliom," Football Put Fox House in Lead at Portland

Portland—The football teams of the University of Washington and the University of Oregon occupied the front pages and brought in an additional 20,000 fans from all sections of Oregon and Washington and Portland's first-run managers again employed showmanship in tying in, the Portland Paramount holding a midnight football night prior to the season's big game and the Fox Broadway the following night. Both, in consequence, stimulated their box-offices very materially. Ideal fall weather greeted the big events and was also a factor in bringing out the crowds. Manager Maxwell of Fox West Coast Theatres also held a special Saturday Mickey Mouse Club serial, and now gives the youngsters who wish it free dancing lessons, free parking for the night patrons and altogether the most the patrons ever received for their money. "Liliom" and Fanchon & Marco's "Southern Idea" grosses again topped with $14,800, rating 142%.

"Wedding Night," '3 French Girls' Highs at Boston

Boston—With the general public again able to get into Boston and the theatres following the congestion of the week during the American Legion convention, all theatres did another big week's business. The holiday falling on Sunday brought midnight shows at the Metropolitan and Scollay Square theatres to help boost receipts.

"Her Wedding Night" at the Metropolitan, with a gross of $46,000 for a rating of 150%, and "Those Three French Girls" at Loew's State, with a gross of $30,000 and a rating of 150%, were the high spots for the week. "Whoopee" at Loew's Orpheum went across for $24,000 for 125% rating.

"Hell's Angels," now in its eighth week, grossed $11,000 for 100%. "Bright Lights" and "Her Man" at the two Keith houses grossed $20,000 and $25,500, respectively, for ratings of 110% and 115%.

Critic Joins Universal

Kansas City—Jack Moffitt, film editor of The Kansas City Star, has been given a six months' leave of absence to go to the scenario department of Universal studios.

Carl Laemmle is said to have read several of Moffit's reviews of pictures and requested the loan of The Star's critic for a period of six months.

Craft's New Contract

Hollywood—William James Craft's work in directing "Little Accident" and "See America Thirst" has won for him a five-year contract from Universal.

Goetz in New York

Ben Goetz, Consolidated Film Industries head man on the Coast, is in New York on a visit.

Plans Butte Branch

Butte, Mont.—Tiffany is preparing to open a sub-branch here. It will be under supervision of the Salt Lake City exchange.

The United Artists economy wave continues. They've sent bulletins to all newspaper editors asking them to file the U. A. stills in the morgues, instead of the waste baskets. . . . When Harry Green, Mitzi Green's father, inquired what advance plug was being used to herald the coming of little Mitzi to the Paramount in person, he was told that a "trailer" called "The Santa Fe Trail" was being run all week.

A Real Start

If "Today" is a sample of what Majestic Pictures will turn out this season, this new independent company, headed by Harry Sherman and Jack Trop, is going to make a real dent in the market. The picture has action and punch and is good entertainment, albeit a little daring in spots. This one stands up well with a lot of pictures being made by the old line companies and is geared for first runs.

THE Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

LET us analyze the transformer in a somewhat more thorough manner, but without entering upon the mathematical treatment.

Consider the simple transformer shown in Figure 69, repeated again in this lesson. It has two windings, A, the primary and B, the secondary. The usual designations for such windings are P and S respectively and they will be referred to in that manner in further discussion.

We assumed in Lesson 21, that the position of the secondary winding with respect to the primary was such that all of the flux produced by current flow through the primary coil cut all of the turns of the secondary coil. The medium through which the flux lines had to pass was air. Now, all transformers employed for the transformation of alternating emf and current, with the exception of one type, namely that which operates with an input frequency of hundreds of thousands, if not millions of cycles per second and which is of no interest to us, make use of a magnetic core so that the flux lines have a much easier path and more readily link the primary and the secondary circuits.

Thus, all power transformers employ a magnetic core. The exact material depends to a large measure upon the requirements and the quality of the product. The most popular core material used for power transformers is silicon steel. As a general statement relative to power transformers employed in connection with sound systems and audio transformers employed in sound system, let it be understood that there are definite differences between these two types of devices, although the basic principles are the same.

In all respects other than the basic principles, the two should be divorced until both have been fully considered. In this manner shall we avoid the possibility of miscomprehension. We now are considering the power transformer and have no concern as yet with the audio frequency transformer.

Transformers designed to transfer electrical energy, referred to as power, from the primary to the secondary circuit are of two general types. When the magnetic path takes the form of a single ring upon which are mounted the primary and secondary windings, be they one or more in number, the transformer is of the core type and of the formation shown in Figure 73. The primary winding is mounted upon one leg of the core and the secondary winding is mounted upon the opposite leg. The core is of square cross section as shown in Figure 73A. The space within the core is known as the "window." When a number of secondary windings are used, they may be distributed as in Figure 73B.

Another type of transformer construction is the shell, illustrated in Figure 74. In this arrangement the secondary is wound atop the primary. There are basic differences between these two forms of construction relating to the length of the magnetic path and the length of the winding, but such differences are of no interest at this time. Let it suffice to say that the core type of transformer is most popular in the sizes employed in talking picture systems.

As to the operation of the transformer, the flux generated by the current flowing through the primary threads its way through the core and thereby links with the secondary turns. Naturally, every effort is made to link most of the secondary turns with the flux generated by the primary current. Thus, if we consider the transformer shown in Figure 75, the flux passes through the core in the direction shown by the small arrows. This direction is occasioned by the direction of the current flowing through the primary winding. However, all of the flux generated by the primary current does not flow through the core and cut the secondary turns.

Some of it leaks across the window as in Figure 75A. Thus, there is introduced a condition which will tend to prevent 100 per cent efficiency in the transformer. Supplementary to this we must recognize the action taking place when the flux traverses the core material. When current is passed through the primary winding, and flux flows through the core, the core material is in a state of magnetization.

The direction of the current flow through the primary winding is constant for but a short time, one half cycle, after which period the current reverses and the direction of the magnetizing force likewise reverses. Based upon the assumption that the electromagnetism is due to molecular activity within the core material, this continual agitation of the molecules produces a certain amount of energy dissipation, manifest as heat.

This energy is supplied by the primary current, hence there is another factor representing loss and limiting the possibility of 100 per cent electrical efficiency within the transformer. This loss related to the magnetizing action upon the core by an increasing current and rapidly reversing current is referred to as the hysteresis loss. A third form of loss is associated with conductors which may be acted upon by a varying flux, known as eddy-current loss.

Wherever a conductor may be acted upon by a varying flux, electric currents are induced in the conductor. Such a conductor is the magnetic core itself and since it has resistance, energy will be dissipated in the form of heat at a rate equal to $i^2r$. Hence, we have the third factor which prevents 100 per cent electrical efficiency. What has been said so far is sufficient to show that absolute perfection is not possible in a transformer.

Present day design is such, that fairly high percentages are possible, the efficiency increasing with the size of the transformer. The average degree of efficiency in a small transformer is between 85 per cent and 95 per cent whereas large transformers have been designed with efficiency factors as high as 98 per cent or 99 per cent.

Action of Flux Within Transformer.—The flow of current through the primary winding causes the generation of flux which passes through the core in a certain direction and cuts the secondary turns. A voltage is induced across the secondary winding and, if a resistance is connected across the secondary winding, current will flow through the winding and the resistance. Now, the presence of a current through the secondary will naturally create flux around the secondary winding and, because the direction of the current flow through the secondary is the reverse of that through the primary, the direction of this flux will be opposite to that due to the primary current. The secondary current flux will naturally flow through the core and we have the condition that the secondary current flux bucks the primary current flux. This condition produces a definite effect. Let us see what and how.

If we refer to Figure 75 and assume that R is absent, the amount of current required in the primary circuit when the transformer is connected to a source of voltage is that permitted by the impedance of the primary winding and represents the flux required to magnetize the core. This magnetizing current is comparatively small. These flux lines unhindered by any action due to the presence of the secondary because there is no current through the secondary, will cut the terms of the secondary winding and induce across these turns, a voltage, representing the "no-load" voltage.

If we now connect the resistance R (Figure 75), a load has been applied to the transformer and current flows through the winding. As has been stated this secondary current causes a flux in the opposite direction through the core and the number of flux lines due to the primary which now cut the core are reduced, some being forced out of the core by the secondary current flux and some being neutralized by the secondary current flux. As a consequence the voltage induced across the secondary winding decreases and the "load" voltage is less than the "no-load" voltage. Such is always the case.

Accompanying the above action is another. At the "no-load" condition, the current required to magnetize the core is very small. This current represents the magnetizing current and the component which supplies the energy to overcome the losses in the core. We can neglect the latter.

Now the limitation of the primary current without a load upon the secondary is a function of the counter emf developed across the primary winding by virtue of the presence of the primary winding around a core which is magnetized. The flow of current in the secondary circuit and the resulting counter flux tends to reduce the flux which threads the primary turns and, therefore, to reduce the counter emf developed across the primary.

This means the reduction of the impedance of the primary. The result is that the primary current increases in such direction as to assist the production of the primary flux. The greater the secondary current, the greater becomes the primary current. It is for this reason a short circuit upon the secondary winding of a transformer will blow the line fuse or burn out the transformer primary winding.

Load and No Load Voltages.—It is not sufficient to merely state that the "load" voltage is less than the "no-load" voltage. Such is the case, but allied with it is another important consideration. Each secondary winding bears a definite specification, wattage and voltage. In other words, each transformer secondary winding will supply a certain amount of current at a prescribed value of output voltage. This voltage is the "full load" voltage. Suppose that a filament winding is rated at 10 volts and 60 watts. This means that it will supply 10 volts at a maximum current flow of 6 amperes. The winding will function at lower or higher values of current. As has been shown, the less the current load upon the secondary winding the higher the output voltage. However, this voltage cannot be determined by means of the regular wattage relation because the number of turns in the winding are definitely limited and, while the no load voltage is higher than the load voltage, the increase is not very great. The better the efficiency of the transformer, the less is the change in voltage. The secondary voltage will gradually increase as the secondary current decreases until it finally reaches its no load value.

If the situation is reversed and the current is increased beyond the rating as expressed by the voltage and wattage values, the output voltage decrease very rapidly. This decrease is due to several factors other than just the flux reaction previously mentioned, such as the increase in resistance of the conductors used for the secondary winding and the increased voltage drop within these windings. In this respect, the drop increases the reduction of the output voltage when the secondary is loaded. Hence, it must be added to the factors which create the difference between the load and no load voltage. The internal drop is, however, very small and represents but a small percent of the total voltage. A voltage regulation curve is shown in Figure 76.

Voltage and Current Ratio.—Both the voltage and the current ratio depend upon the turns in the primary winding. If $N_p$ is the primary winding and $N_s$ is the secondary winding where N may consist of any number of turns, the voltage ratio is expressed as

Actually, the above relation is not true in practice because of the leakage of flux, the eddy current loss, the hysteresis loss, the internal voltage drop across the windings, etc.

Thus, if the primary voltage is 100 volts and the primary turns are 50 and the secondary voltage is 200 volts, the secondary turns number 100 or

$$\frac{200}{100} = 2 \text{ and } \frac{100}{50} = 2$$

from which the secondary voltage

$$E_s = E_p \times \frac{N_s}{N_p}$$

and if we substitute the previous quantities

$$E_s = 100 \times \frac{100}{50} = 200$$

If, however, the secondary consist of 5 turns, the secondary voltage

$$E_s = 100 \times \frac{5}{50} = 10 \text{ volts}$$

As is evident the voltage of the secondary varies directly as the turns in the secondary. The current in the secondary varies inversely as the turns or

Thus, if the number of turns in the secondary winding are less than in the primary the current in the secondary will be greater than the current in the primary. This condition should not be confused with the previous statement that the increase in current flow in the secondary under load is equalized by the increase in primary current. Equality is reached with the action of the turn ratio.

Transformers with More Than One Secondary Winding.—Power transformers employed to supply voltage to rectifier tubes in eliminator systems are usually equipped with several secondary windings. Each of these windings bears its own wattage rating and the sum of these ratings is the total wattage rating of the transformer.

These transformers are designed for full load operation of all the secondary windings, hence the voltages available from the individual windings depend upon the total load. If the full load condition is maintained, the rated voltages will be available from each winding. However, if one winding is overloaded, the voltage output of the other windings will likewise decrease. Conversely if one winding remains unloaded, the voltages available from the other windings will be increased.

The extent of the increase in voltage output depends upon the magnitude of load applied to the transformer. The greater the wattage output and the less the load, the greater will be the increase in voltage. What damage may result is again dependent upon the conditions under which the transformer is being operated and the device connected to the transformer. If for example, the load is one vacuum tube filament, when the normal load should be 5 or 6 tubes, the increase in voltage may be sufficient to greatly shorten the life of the tube. In this respect poor design of the transformer is also of importance because the increase in voltage may be sufficient to injure the filament or heater of the tube.

Thus, the actual operation of the transformer has much to do with its performance.

A defect is one of several secondary windings when of such nature that it shorts the winding and causes excessive current flow will naturally heat the transformer and reduce the voltages available at the various taps. Hence, such a defect is the equivalent of an excessive load or overload. Such cases of overload need not be located in the transformer proper, but may be external of the transformer in the circuit connected to the winding.

We made the statement that excessive current load is apt to blow a line fuse or injure the primary winding. While this statement is absolutely true, it is necessary to also bear in mind that the current carrying capacity of the conductors employed in the secondary windings is definitely limited and, if the overload is sufficient to cause the flow of current much greater than that which can be carried by the secondary winding, that winding will burn out. Whether the primary or the secondary winding will burn out is a matter of transformer design and the currents in the respective circuits.

Defects in Primary Circuit and Their Effects Upon Secondary Voltages.—Bearing in mind that the turn ratio governs the voltage developed across the secondary windings when the voltage impressed across the primary is constant at any one effective value, any change in the primary winding will naturally influence the secondary voltage. This is so, even when the primary voltage remains constant. The reason for such action is self-evident. Any change in the number of turns in the primary winding is a change in the ratio of the primary and secondary turns. If we assume a transformer with three secondary windings, N1, N2 and N3 of such numbers of turns as 1,000, 100 and 10 and the normal primary winding consists of 100 turns and the primary voltage is 100, the secondary voltages will be under normal conditions 1,000 volts, 100 volts and 10 volts respectively. Let us now assume a defect in the primary winding so that 10 turns are short circuit. What is the action?

First and foremost the respective turn ratios have been changed. The voltage impressed across the primary remains at 100 volts, but the ratio

no longer equals 10. It now is 11.1 and the voltage out of the secondary winding N1 will be

$$100 \times 11.1 = 1{,}110 \text{ volts}$$

The voltage out of winding N2 will be 110 volts and the voltage out of N3 will be 11.1 volts. Thus, decreasing the number of turns in the primary winding will increase the voltages out of the secondary windings, no matter what their turn ratio. At the same time it is significant to note that output voltages increase by the ratio between the normal number of turns and the number of turns in use when the defect is present.

Power Transformers with Tapped Primaries.—Quite a large number of power transformers employed in rectifiers used in talkie systems are

Supplies Money, Advice and Love; Angel Is Rubed

Chicago—Suit for $50,000 will be started either here or in New York within the next few weeks by the "angel" who, after putting up what it takes to make an independent production in Hollywood, found that the fleet-minded, and as fleet-footed, producer whom he had backed, had beaten him to the sale of distribution rights on the picture; said sales having been understood to belong to the "angel" as partial remuneration for his investment.

The series of misunderstandings between the "angel" and the producer originated in Hollywood, while the production was in work. The first strain on the otherwise beautiful friendship which existed between the two was remarked when the "angel" persisted in living on the set and volunteering plenty of advice and suggestions concerning production. When this deplorable behavior was eventually corrected by the producer, the "angel" transferred his attentions to certain female members of the cast, occasionally inducing one or another of the more comely of these to play "hookey" and accompany him on a Tia Juana, Ensenada or Del Monte excursion.

On one such occasion, when production was suspended for 11 days due to the absence of the leading lady, the producer, undoubtedly an obtuse old meanie whose own youth had been long forgotten, became vexed and threatened to chuck the works into three fathoms of Santa Monica Bay. Whereupon the "angel" affixed his signature to a final check and departed eastward to look after his own long-neglected business affairs.

The Woodpile African

Now it seems the production moved to a swift conclusion thereafter; in fact, the celluloid record was in the cans several weeks before the "angel" in the East was even aware the picture had been completed. He first suspected its status when, after three weeks had gone by without a new request for "more cash" being received from Hollywood, he became distrustful and filed the following wire addressed to the studio:

"Advise at once the status of production and when picture will be ready for distribution. I have my sales organization established and waiting to start. Several contracts ready to be signed. Want first available print for screenings here. Regards to Myrtle and Ethlynne."

To this business-like message—and to a volley of less complacent ones which followed it—no reply was ever received. Then Ethlynne came East and, with autumn in the air, was reminded that that last season's ermine of hers was beginning to show signs of wear across the shoulders. It would be just the thing, now, for the kid sister in Kalamazoo. Thus it was that the "angel" first learned "his picture" was already in the cans.

Nervous and excited, he grabbed up his blank contracts and hit the road. His uneasiness was justified. Everywhere he went, he learned, the producer had been there before him. Distribution rights, in every situation, had either been disposed of already, or there was no possible market for the picture in that particular territory. Sorrowfully he returned home to think things over.

Papers had been drawn, he found, creating an impregnable partnership between himself and the producer. What the one signed was binding on the other. The distribution contracts obtained by the producer were valid and unassailable. The "angel's" principal cut-in had vanished in thin air.

"But he will pay," shouted the disillusioned angel to a Motion Picture News reporter. "Mark my words. He shall pay dearly for his cunning. I shall start suit for $50,000—my share of the distribution profits, and shall ask for a strict accounting of every dollar expended and every penny collected. I'm no chump."

Publix "Flying Stage" Creates Seattle Furore

Seattle—Coincident with the presentation of the first of the "new era" Publix stage units now being produced in their entirety in Hollywood, the Seattle Paramount introduced its "flying stages" to the local theatregoing public.

Much to the surprise of local audiences, Milt Franklyn and his Band, seated on the stage, were seen to rise above the stage level on a giant hydraulic lift, while a second stage filled with performers came forward toward the footlights from the rear of the stage underneath the band. The stunt occasioned enthusiastic applause.

The theatre's hydraulic stage was installed at the time the house was built about two years ago, was later removed without ever having been used, and is now installed again for weekly use. Although rising pits and organ consoles are well known in this territory, the Paramount's rising stage is the first seen west of Chicago.

Whitbeck, Back At Job Peps 'Big Trail' Campaign

Hollywood—Frank Whitbeck was called back to work at Fox West Coast before his vacation was over, and as a result several new forms of advertising in newspapers and on billboards have appeared in the past few days on "The Big Trail" and "Just Imagine." These talkers are showing for long runs at Grauman's Chinese and Carthay Circle theatres.

West Coast has decided to spend about $5,000 extra weekly for advertising on "The Big Trail." The picture is said to have been sold on the wrong angle at the start of the campaign.

Another new offering at the Chinese is the stage show which started this week. Girls from the Fox studio line-up were brought in and are offering, under the direction of Franchon and Marco, dances staged by Seymour Felix, Fox studio dance instructor.

The theatre has also been dickering for the services of either George Olsen and his band or Earl Burtnett and his orchestra, to support the stage show. However, the contracts held by the symphony orchestra now appearing at the Chinese calls for its appearance for the length of the run and unless the theatre can straighten this matter out with the musicians' union a dance band will not go in.

Lane to Make Quota Film

Lupino Lane, English musical comedy star, well known in America for his appearances in the Ziegfeld Follies and in Educational two-reel comedies, has been signed by P. D. C. of London to produce a special feature. This picture, titled "Dying to Live," will be made at the Elstree Studios of British International near London. Production on this, the first of a series of quota pictures, is scheduled to start on Oct. 27.

Managers Switched

Vancouver—Recent changes here in the personnel of Famous Players Canadian Corp. have sent Lloyd Dearth, formerly manager of the Capitol, to manage the Capitol in Winnipeg; Maynard Joiner, manager of the New Orpheum, has been transferred to the Capitol as manager, and Claude Smith, assistant under Joiner, is now in charge of the New Orpheum.

Leach Opens Another

Hartford, Wis.—The Arcade theatre, formerly the Opera House, has been opened here after being dark for many months. The theatre has been renovated and De-Forest Phonofilm equipment installed. Ralph Leach, operator of the State, also is manager of the Arcade.

631 Revisions in Month

Toronto—Six hundred and thirty-one revisions were made by Ontario censors during August, according to a report just published. Five features were banned outright.

Opinions on Pictures

Illicit

(Warners)

Fine Box-Office

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

WHATEVER way you look at it, "Illicit" is a box-office natural for any house. Falling under the general classification of "problem drama," it is, of course, adult fare and will appeal nearly equally to men and women patrons.

It is an intelligently interesting question with which "Illicit" deals—whether a couple very much in love can live more happily out of wedlock than they can if married. The fact that the question remains unanswered does not lessen its interest. Few problem plays can stand retrospective analysis of plot motivation. Fewer audiences attempt to analyze what they accept as entertainment.

Barbara Stanwyck and James Rennie are in love and genuinely happy in each other's company. Rennie is a frequent visitor at Barbara's apartment, for her morals are as modern as her ideas concerning marriage. Barbara has seen too much of the unhappiness marital ties bring—her own father and mother being an example. Rennie, however, believes in the institution, though he allows Barbara her way.

They are seen on a week-end trip by a member of their set and scandalous gossip starts. Rennie's father, Claude Gillingwater, joins his son in urging marriage. Under their combined arguments, Barbara finally assents.

A matter of several years pass and we find Rennie has become the typical bored husband. The romance of his association with Barbara has vanished and he seeks instead the company of the dashing Natalie Moorhead. His wife is hurt by his lack of attention and when he stays out until 4 A. M., capping the act by lying about it, she insists on leaving him to go back to her own apartment.

There Rennie calls upon her, becoming again the romantic lover. The glamour of their so-called "illicit" relationship returns. Their happiness is interrupted by Rennie's jealous behavior when he encounters Ricardo Cortez in Barbara's apartment. He tells her he will never call again.

The following day Natalie Moorhead drops in to warn Barbara she is going to lose her husband. Natalie believes it a sporting proposition to issue such warning and thereby let the wife hold her man if she can. When Natalie departs after a stormy scene Barbara phones Rennie and is told he has already left for the boat to Bermuda.

For all her modern ideas, Barbara is indulging in a good old-fashioned cry when Cortez phones a few moments later. She assumes indifference at the news of her husband's elopement and between sobs is bantering with Cortez as Rennie walks in. At the sight of him, Barbara is in his arms and Rennie explains his change of heart on the eve of sailing. We fadeout on the telephone receiver lying on the floor as the voice of Cortez is heard shouting "Hello—hello."

The performances of the principals are uniformly excellent. Barbara Stanwyck heightens the fine impression she made in "Ladies of Leisure." In "Illicit" she has several splendid opportunities to prove her worth as a dramatic actress and admirably rises to them all. Particularly good is her final emotional scene at the telephone.

Natalie Moorhead likewise adds considerably to her screen reputation. She is fast becoming our most charming charmer. James Rennie contributes his smoothest work in talkers, obviously being more at home in a drawing room than he is as a western hero. Ricardo Cortez makes the most of his limited role as the other man.

The comedy is in the capable hands of Charles Butterworth playing a drunk. He wanders in and out of the action, garnering laughs whenever things get a bit heavy. Claude Gillingwater drops his usual grouch portrayal and does excellently the sympathetic father assignment.

"Illicit," from all angles, stands as one of the best talkers of its type ever made by Warners.

Report had it that the studio was going to forego previewing the picture, so sure was it of the quality of the product. And it's there as the jingle of coins at the box-office should prove.

The Lady of the Lake

(James A. FitzPatrick—Synchronized)

Hard to Peg

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

IT'S difficult to dope this one from the box-office slant. It's a well done and sincere portrayal of Sir Walter Scott's classical poem, enacted by a fine cast. Just how well it succeeds at the box-office depends on how willing the public is to go for a fine document of this kind.

It may be that it's selling angle is to class audiences, with strong shorts surrounding it to put it over. On the other hand, it may require another feature, the difficulty in pegging it being due to the fact that nothing like it ever has been done before.

The picture has no dialogue, lines from the poem being used for the subtitles. It would have been almost sacrilegious to have tried to have spoken Scott's lines, for spoken they would have produced a flowery effect, which would have amounted almost to burlesque. As subtitles, however, they register well.

The lack of dialogue in this is a welcome relief. Talkers to date have been so gabby that drastic reductions in dialogue are to be made. The changing cycle which is to result in less dialogue may help this picture.

Lovers of literature and children will find this to their liking. Its direct and simple treatment enhances the charm of the idyllic story, and this simplicity makes it very easy for children to understand. Exceptionally fine photography characterizes the production.

Benita Hume, in the title role, dominates the production. She is a beautiful heroine of real ability. Percy Marmont is the only name, so far as American draw is concerned, and he gives a fine performance. The others in the cast are adequate, but not exceptional.

A lost nobleman accepts the hospitality of Ellen Douglas, the lady of the lake, who takes her to the island fastness where her father is hiding with other exiles in a colony headed by the powerful outlaw, Rhoderick Dhu. When Dhu's men take the knight prisoner, the girl rescues him, and he in turn presents her with a ring, which he says the king will recognize to grant her any wish in return for her service.

The outlaw leader tries to force the girl's father to consent to their wedding, and her fiance objects, only to be banished from the colony. When the fiance is captured by the king's men, the girl's father offers to give himself up if the youth is released, but the king's men decide to execute both. The girl then goes to the palace to claim the favor of the ring, and when it develops that the knight she befriended is the king, her fiance and her father are released.

This is characterized by good direction by FitzPatrick, and although the tempo is slow, it is in keeping with the story. It was produced in Scotland, the locale of the poem.

Queen of Scandal

(United Artists)

Good Musical Show

(Reviewed by Dick Crenshaw)

WITH music and romance as the keynote of this production, "Queen of Scandal," is scheduled for success through its notable cast, if for nothing else. Evelyn Laye, recruited from the musical comedy stage, brings a rich and beautiful voice to the screen, while John Boles will attract through his former successes. It should do good business, provided musicals still draw with your gang.

The production got a big hand at its first showing. It is light in theme, but has enough romance to make it a good story. Leon Errol, as the comedian, proved a hit and kept the audience laughing during his scenes.

The locale is Continental, although the exact setting is not identified. Unusual costuming and old-world scenery give a romantic air to the film, which is rather far-fetched in some of the plot unravelings.

The story deals with a poor girl and her desire to have the things that are showered on her idol, a musical comedy star notorious for her wild escapades. Through an incident with the police the stage beauty is requested to leave the city for a country villa. She gives her admiring friend a chance to take her place as the pampered exile.

Miss Laye goes to the country and meets John Boles, a neighboring count, who has been placed in charge of the stage beauty. The count treats her as he would expect a frivolous woman of the world would want to be treated. Complications follow.

Most of the love scenes are carried by music, the words of Boles and Miss Laye proving to be well adapted for the parts. When the real actress is found out and brought under police escort to the village, Miss Laye is sent back to the city and Boles follows to tell of his love.

Lightnin'

(Fox)

Great

THERE'S plenty of box-office value to "Lightnin'," a talker version of the well known stage play. Will Rogers in the title spot and giving a top-notch performance does the best work of his film career.

Rates attention in the two-dollar class houses, and will hold up strong in the better pop price places and subsequent bookings. The picture has lots of quality and will stand plenty of exploitation. Old and young will find it amusing and worth while.

Rogers takes a new role in this story, that of the shiftless, kind-hearted and liquor-loving Lightnin', and he fills it to perfection. He is slow in his motions, obvious in his lying, and a perfect scream in his comedy. He has added much to the character portrayed in the original play, with many of his own lines and his own inimitable style of acting. He is himself throughout the play, being at his best during the earlier scenes when his comedy is permitted full sway.

The story deals with practices of modern society, depicting Nevada's divorce business and the ease with which the marital knot may be untied in that state. The scenes are laid at a hotel located on the California-Nevada line, where prospective divorcees may establish their residences in Nevada, and live in California. Shots of Lake Tahoe and adjacent mountain scenery add much to the production.

The story tells of Lightnin's efforts to keep his family from selling this hotel, when they are approached by unscrupulous land sharks. When he refuses to sign over the deed, his wife, led on by flattery and promises of wealth, sues for divorce. Complications arise in the person of John Marvin (Joel McCrea), a suitor for the hand of Lightnin's daughter, who is wanted on the Nevada side for a deal in which he is innocently involved. He always manages to reach the California side just ahead of the sheriff. The final scene is laid in the court-room at Reno, where Lightnin' attempts to halt the unexpected divorce proceedings. His cross-examination of his wife's attorney proved a riot. Everything turns out satisfactorily when the crooks are shown in their true light and the couple is reconciled.

As Lightnin's wife, Louise Dresser does a splendid piece of work. Joel McCrea and Helen Cohan carry the juvenile love interest in this talker, and both are ably cast. Jason Robards, Frank Campeau, Sharon Lynn, Goodee Montgomery, Joyce Compton and Luke Cosgrave are well fitted for their roles.

Henry King has given the picture expert attention from a directorial standpoint. He has worked out the comedy situations in a manner that gets plenty of laughs—and natural ones.

Life of the Party

(Warners)

Swell Comedy

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

GREAT comedy performances by Winnie Lightner, Charles Butterworth and Charles Judels make this talker most entertaining. The story is nothing more than a frame on which to hang a bunch of laughable situations—but who cares?

This will hold up in the week runs spots and is good for the split-week places. Where Lightner has a following this will meet with great success, as she has the top role and plays it great.

The story, such as it is, concerns the escapades of two song pluggers who work in a music store and aspire to do bigger and better things. (Only one song is used in the picture and it is of a comedy nature that fits in well.) The girls get fired when Charles Judels appears and wrecks the music joint, a habit he has when angered. The girls, out of a job, go to work for him and when he offers them fine clothes to wear at a party he is giving they take the offer—and the clothes—and go to Havana.

Here Winnie tries to get Del Roy engaged to some rich young man who will assist them in driving the wolf from the door. They hear that a certain Mr. Smith, inventor of a drink called "Rush," is stopping at their hotel and they decide to name him the victim. They see a "Mr. Smith," John Davidson, and think he is their game. When the wedding date is set and all is ready for the union, Irene finds that Jack Whiting, whom she has met and fallen for, is the real Mr. Smith. Judels makes his appearance at this time and the whole affair is exposed. The girls are about to be jailed when Whiting steps in, pays the bills, wins Del Roy, and all ends well.

The most laughable scenes occur in the furniture wrecking episodes played by Judels and Winnie's ride as a jockey in the big race, with the horse she bet on and is riding, running the wrong way. Charles Butterworth dispenses a brand of dry, subtle humor that is delightful and his comedy is in splendid contrast to that of Judels and Lightner, who go in for the slap-bang stuff.

The love interest is carried by Irene Del Roy and Whiting and they are both well cast. John Davidson and Arthur Hoyt give good performances.

Roy Del Ruth did a good job of directing and keeps the piece moving at a rapid pace, never once letting the action slow up. Laugh follows laugh and the dialogue supplied by Arthur Caesar is decidedly refreshing. The talker has been filmed in Technicolor, which adds considerably to the settings.

Passion Flower

(M-G-M)

Same Old Triangle

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

HERE'S a picture with excellent exploitation angles. When the cutters are through with it and a few retakes are spotted, exhibitors will be able to put it across for fair box-office business. At best, however, it will have to remain in a program classification. With proper handling it will carry through on week runs, but on the average will do better on split-week bookings.

Kay Johnson and Charlie Bickford are back together again. This is good for those who like them. Kay Francis offers more glamor and class in this than in anything she has ever done. Lewis Stone is seen all too briefly in a quite worth while role.

But hand the laughs to Zazu Pitts. This solemn girl drags the giggles out every time she walks into the scene—and she does plenty.

The story is by Kathleen Norris. That should be good for attracting the large numbers of nice old ladies and others who follow her stuff. The plot concerns two girl cousins. Kay Francis is married to a stupendously rich old Spanish don and has everything money can buy. The other girl, played by Miss Johnson, is the daughter of an aristocratic old chap. She falls in love with the family chauffeur, played by Bickford. When the father finds out about it he orders both from the house and they are married at the Don's home, Lewis Stone playing the role of the patient, but wise, husband of Miss Francis.

Bickford, following the ceremony, refuses to accept a wedding present of a 320-acre farm from the other pair—he prefers to make his own way. His new wife forsakes everything and honors him for his ambition. They find an attic apartment where Zazu Pitts is the landlady. Bickford fails to get far as a stevedore during the coming five years. Two children are born to them. Miss Johnson drudges on as the ever faithful and loving wife. Bickford still refuses to down his pride.

Finally he does accede to the ever-recurring desires of the rich cousin to accept the ranch. They move, taking Zazu along, ostensibly as the children's nurse, but more for her comedy to hold up the remainder of the film. The rest is the same old story. Bickford falls for Francis. The rich old Don dies. The two leave the still faithful and adoring wife and go to Paris. Bickford still loves his wife and kids.

Then pangs of conscience strike him and just about the time everything is all set for him to divorce the wife and marry Francis he finds out just how much he loves his family. It ends in a clinch.

Bickford fills the role of the befuddled husband in a capable manner. Nobody, however, could blame him for falling when Miss Francis appears in some of the gowns she wears. Miss Johnson, as usual, turns in an excellent performance as the wife.

William C. deMille directed it and during the early portions displays some clever touches. After the first half it flattens out and becomes just another one of those draggy affairs with no mystery surrounding the ultimate wedding. The setting is laid near San Francisco and some of the scenic shots are fine.

Support it with a lively comedy or cartoons.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Directed by William de Mille. Story by Kathleen Norris. Screen story and dialogue by Martin Flavin. Additional dialogue by Lawrence Johnson and Edith Fitzgerald. ## New Moon

Tibbett Scores Again

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

DESPITE the fact that filmusicals are on the wane, the enthralling voice and engaging personality of Lawrence Tibbett enables him to make "New Moon" great entertainment. This song treat surpasses "The Rogue Song" with its beautiful numbers convincingly rendered by the voices of Tibbett and Grace Moore.

This talker is worthy of consideration in the long-run houses and great for the better week-run houses. If musicals are any draw where this talker plays it should do smashing business.

The story is nothing out of the ordinary and serves merely as a background for the singing of Tibbett and Miss Moore. The first scenes are aboard a ship bound for Russia. Aboard it are Grace Moore, a princess, and a burly, blustering lieutenant, Tibbett. They both manage to fall in love with each other and all goes well until the boat reaches port, where Adolphe Menjou, a nobleman to whom Miss Moore is betrothed, makes his appearance. The fickle princess departs, assuming, evidently, that the ship romance was a passing fancy. Tibbett, however, thinks otherwise and plans for revenge.

At Menjou's ball for his bride-to-be, Tibbett appears and in a song brings down his scorn for the princess. Menjou then orders him to command a desert military post, as assignment from which no man has returned alive.

Tibbett assumes the post. One day the princess appears and, meeting Tibbett in his office, flays him with a horsewhip across the face—announcing that this is her avenging of his insult at the ball. As she starts to leave a messenger arrives, announcing that the Riffs are attacking the outpost. The princess—forced to remain—breaks down and confesses her love for Tibbett. They go through a hasty marriage and the new husband, spurred on by love, leads his men to victory over the enemy in a night attack on their camp.

When the survivors of the battle return they find Menjou has arrived with aid, but they are too late—and so is he. Tibbett has won Miss Moore for his bride, and the picture closes with another song.

The singing of Miss Moore and Tibbett is almost unsurpassable, and the songs, while plentiful, are always pleasing. Adolphe Menjou as the suave nobleman does admirably in an unsympathetic role. Roland Young is well spotted in a comedy role. Others who give fine performances are Gus Shy and Emily Fitzroy.

Jack Conway has directed this talker in an able manner, carefully inserting the song numbers where they will do the most good.

Maybe It's Love

(Warner's)

Raw! Raw!

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

THEY sure messed up the possibilities in this one. Take Joe E. Brown, a football story and the whole All-American team of 1929 thrown in and you'd expect a ripsnorting comedy. Good old Upton wins the crucial game in the last moment, as per formula, but Joe doesn't get into the game. His role is such a small one that the audience forgets he's in the picture and is not set to laugh when he does appear. And then they release a picture containing all of last year's football stars after the opening of the new season, when the public's forgotten them and is engrossed in the feats of the present crop of footballers.

Maybe it's love, but it looks as if it may be a case of poor judgment all around.

But there are compensations, and they're all packed into Joan Bennett. Whenever she is on the screen it's mighty easy to forget the feeble yarn and its unprecedented triteness. She and James Hall as the leads carry most of the burden, and it appears as if Joe's part was written in at the last moment to inject some sadly needed comedy. Laura Lee, who had a fat role with Joe in "Hold Everything," appears for only a few feet. Maybe that isn't a boner of some kind!

Joan, the daughter of the president of Upton, learns that he will lose his job unless the team licks the hated rival, Parsons. The author went the limit in exercising his writer's license and had Hall, the greatest football player of them all, and the eleven immortals of 1929 walk past the campus in a casual way, fall in love with Joan and decide to die for dear old Upton on the gridiron. Of course, she pretends that she has palpitation of the heart for each. They discover her treachery before the big game, but, being loyal sons of their Alma Mater, pitch in and win the fray. Hall gets the love touchdown. That's no way to treat All-American players.

The theme song, "Maybe It's Love," is tuneful and heard often. The direction is haphazard, but the settings are truly collegiate. Bill Banker of Tulane ought to be signed up if for no other reason than his Southern accent. It's the warmest we've ever heard and it evoked a chuckle whenever he spoke.

It does not seem possible to write a football story without resorting to the stereotyped formula, and Warners, on seeing the script for this, should have pitched it out of the window and provided Brown with a slapdash burlesque of the gridiron.

Men of the North

(M-G-M)

Not Unusual

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

THIS is a fairly good program picture that has nothing outstanding or novel about it, yet will probably meet with approval from kids and those who like the outdoor stuff.

Is okay for the split-week spots and other short runs. For neighborhood and small-town houses should meet with fair success.

There is nothing startling or unusual in the story, which deals with a happy-go-lucky French-Canadian who is accused of stealing gold from a Canadian mine. He falls in love with the daughter of the mine owner, rescues both the girl and her father from a snowslide, saves the life of the Canadian mounted policeman who is pursuing him for the theft, and is finally vindicated. Rather a trite story, but fairly well acted and directed.

The snow scenes are beautiful, and the blizzard is realistic. The snow slide miniatures are not so good, and in photographing these scenes the audience first sees a peaceful snow shot with the sun shining, then rather faky storm scenes in the mountain country, then back to the original meadow shots. In other words, the miniatures do not match the long shots in lighting or terrain, making it quite apparent even to the layman that it is fake stuff in the snow slide scenes.

Gilbert Roland does very well in the leading role. Robert Elliott dominates the picture with his "mountie" characterization. The rest of the cast is ordinary.

Today

(Majestic Pictures)

Looks Like a Bet

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

THERE is plenty of action and punch in this, the first offering of Majestic Pictures, and it should click generally. The climax packs a real wallop, presenting an unusual situation which will put this over and send them out talking.

The theme has delicate moments, but these are offset by the dream ending, showing that all the action was part of the wife's nightmare. Majestic has made this with two endings, one straight and the other the dream slant. While the former is stronger dramatically, the latter is preferable because it will forestall criticism of the picture's more daring moments.

Conrad Nagel is pretty much the picture, turning in an exceptional performance, probably his best to date. He is called upon for plenty, and he puts it over in splendid fashion. Catherine Dale Owen is a pretty and pleasing heroine, Sarah Padden and John Maurice Sullivan are effective as Nagel's parents, and Judith Vosseli is good as the villainous friend, who leads the young wife into the trap. Others in the well-balanced cast are Julia Swayne Gordon, William Bailey, Edna Marion, Robert Thornby and Drew Demarest. William Nigh has turned in a good job of direction, building up to a smash climax.

Soup to Nuts

(Fox)

Dubious

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

BUILT along the nonsensical lines of the Marx Brothers vehicles, "Soup to Nuts" misses fire in many respects. The general reaction will be that Ted Healy and his Racketeers were turned loose with merely the instructions to be funny. Seemingly they try too hard.

The story, as a story, is somewhat flabby. Charles Winninger, owner of a costume shop, is thrown into the hands of a receiver. Stanley Smith, appointed to receivership, falls in love with Lucile Browne, daughter of Winninger. He makes a deal with his attorney to buy unneeded costumes so that the old man can pay the creditors. Meanwhile Winninger goes to work as a waiter in the cafe of his old friend, George Bickel. The fireman's ball is being held in the cafe when fire breaks out in the costume shop. The building insurance Winninger carries gives him enough money to re-establish himself in business.

Healy's part in the proceedings is that of clerk in the shop and volunteer fireman. Whenever the truck manned by his Racketeers goes anywhere he rides along for company. Healy used most of his stage material in the dialogue and serving as master of ceremonies at the fireman's ball gives him an excuse for doing his vaudeville act.

The fine Italian hand of Rube Goldberg, credited with story and dialogue, is apparent in the goofy inventions and appliances introduced in the picture. These gadgets for which Goldberg is justly famous really supply the funniest moments.

Winninger contributes a legitimate performance as the old German costume maker. His is the best work in the production. The others are more or less acceptable.

Patrons will either regard "Soup to Nuts" as the worst picture of the year or most amusing. The prediction, based on audience reaction when caught, is that those holding the latter view will be greatly in the majority.

Loose Ends

(British International Pictures)

Too Gabby

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

ALTHOUGH it shows the steady improvement being made in British production, this is a glaring example of the use of excessive dialogue at the expense of action. As a consequence, its American appeal is going to be limited and it will need another feature or strong help from some peppy shorts to get it over.

The cast features Adrienne Allen, who is attractive and capable and has a pleasant voice. She walks away with honors over Edna Best. Others are fair, their acting being somewhat stilted.

The story concerns an actress, married to an ex-convict who has done 15 years for shooting his sister's betrayer. The wife is a member of a fast-stepping set, into which the husband an ex-jail bird doesn't fit. When the story of his past is exposed the wife prepares for a divorce, but finally decides to stick by her husband.

Not a very complicated plot and certainly not worthy of the heavy acting given it. It greatly needs humor and some dramatic punch. Direction is not very good, judged by American standards.

Columbia is to release this film in America, it is said, but it is doubtful if it can measure up to that company's standards.

Widow from Chicago

(First National)

Poor White Vehicle

JUST another gangster picture lacking even the usual suspense. Alice White is not called upon to do anything she hasn't done before. Which makes this just another White picture any way you look at it. Where Alice has a following it will do moderate business on the star's name draw. But word of mouth will not be hot.

Alice's brother is bumped off by the mob led by Edward G. Robinson. Impersonating the wife of Neil Hamilton, whom she supposes to be dead, Alice joins the gang. Hamilton turns up alive and agrees to help Alice by continuing the deception.

Pretending that she has killed an officer, Alice works her way into the confidence of Robinson and finally extracts a confession from him that he is the murderer of her brother. As is to be expected, it turns out that she is secretly connected with the police department.

Comedy is at a minimum with Frank McHugh shouldering the burden of carrying most of the laughs. The dialogue goes in for heavy dramatics of the ten-twent-thirt school. Much weeping and wailing and all too little action.

An Alice White performance usually defies criticism and her "Widow from Chicago" is not an exception. The acting honors, such as they are, fall to Neil Hamilton and Ed Robinson. Hamilton, always a believable juvenile, adds the most realistic note to the picture.

This release marks Alice White's last under the First National banner. It will hardly stand up in the full week run spots but is acceptable for double bills and split week stands.

Zwei Herzen im ¾ Takt

(Two Hearts in Waltz Time)

(Associated Cinemas of America)

For German Audiences

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

IF you draw from a considerable German population it would be a fine gesture to book this production, even if only for one performance. It will make friends for your house.

Produced in Germany, the picture has the lilt and swing of a Viennese opera and its swiftly-paced tempo, light-hearted treatment and melodious songs make it an outstanding offering. And it is packed with laughs. Although this reviewer could not understand them, the wisecracks from the screen kept the audience in a continuous chuckle.

The picture is out for the average American theatre, of course, but in a New York theatre the audience was by no means preponderantly Teutonic. The management had supplied a lengthy synopsis of the story, and thus enabled those not familiar with the German language to acquaint themselves with the plot and thus follow the story trend, aided by the excellent pantomime. Such a course could be followed by an American exhibitor wishing to stage a novelty program.

There was nothing stodgy or phlegmatic about the cast. In fact, with the exception of character bits, the players might have been lifted out of Hollywood. Walter Janssen gave a splendid performance as a composer; Oscar Karlweiss and Willy Forst, while rather too acrobatic, garnered many laughs; Gretl Theimer, as pretty and vivacious as they make them, clicked big and Irene Eisinger was equally successful as a singer. The entire cast was expert.

The story, centering about a waltz tune which the composer had written under the inspiration of a pretty girl and forgotten when she disappears, only to have the girl show up suddenly at the premiere and score a hit, is lightweight stuff, but interest is kept pepped up throughout by its appeal. The music is exceptionally good.

Stupid

ANOTHER piece of Soviet propaganda made in the mould of many preceding it and utterly unfit for American audiences. It glorifies the Russian peasant, praises the Soviet scheme of things and villifies religion. Of course, there is a small class of radicals in the large cities who revel in such pictures—during one performance members of a New York audience hissed the appearance of President Hoover and applauded a Soviet character—but this production is dynamite to houses with American clientele.

Class struggle is the theme of the film, with the peasant represented as the noblest work of God and anybody with a few dollars being an enemy to society. The Soviet is an Utopian form of government and it will solve all the ills of the world. Particularly vicious are the attacks on religion and for that reason alone even an "arty" theatre should hesitate before showing such films in this country.

Produced by WUFKU. Distributed by Amkino. Author, director and adaptor, Alexander Dovzhenko. Photographed by Danil Demutzki. Starring S. Svashenko. Length, 5,600 feet. Running time, 62 minutes. Release date, Oct. 17.

Fox Eager to Sign Leads Opposite Male Stars

Hollywood—Fox is eagerly casting about for leading women for talkers. Elissa Landi of the English stage has been signed to play opposite Charles Farrell in "Squadrons." Most women in Fox pictures at present are those borrowed from other studios.

Publix Eastern Units to Go to Los Angeles, Frisco

Hollywood—Starting next week, eastern Publix stage shows will be routed to San Francisco and then to Los Angeles. Northern coast theatres are to drop stage acts.

Service for Zuro

Hollywood—Josiah Zuro, musical chief at the Pathe studio, was buried Tuesday, following his death from injuries received in an automobile accident. He was 42 years old.

Ballantyne Named Pathe Division Sales Manager

R. S. Ballantyne, veteran manager of the Omaha exchange, has been appointed midwestern division sales manager of Pathe, by E. J. O'Leary, general sales manager. Ballantyne succeeds Harry Lorch, who has held the post for several years.

R. S. Ballentyne

The midwestern division embraces the largest number of exchanges in the Pathe group. Only recently O'Leary eliminated the central division and transferred all the exchanges with the exception of Buffalo to the midwestern group. The Pathe exchanges and their managers under Ballantyne are: Chicago, J. J. Clarke; Cincinnati, S. C. Jacques; Cleveland, J. B. Reilly; Des Moines, N. Sandler; Detroit, H. Silverberg; Indianapolis, G. L. Levy; Kansas City, Ray Nolan; Milwaukee, Lou Elman; Minneapolis, M. E. Montgomery; Omaha, E. A. Haines; Pittsburgh, S. Lefko; St. Louis, C. R. Lundgren.

Ballantyne has been in the business for more than 20 years, having started as a theatre manager at Norfolk, Neb.

In 1910 he joined the Progressive Film Co., of Omaha, subsequently joining Mutual. The following year he was promoted to manager of the Mutual Film Co., at Omaha. In 1918 he became managing director of theatres for the World Realty Co., and in 1923 Pathe manager at Des Moines, later becoming southern district manager for Pathe in 1925 and western division manager in 1926. About the time of the Pathe-P. D. C. merger, Ballantyne returned to his home in Omaha and later took over the management of the Pathe exchange there.

B. & K. Yanks Out Stage Shows in 2nd House

Chicago—Publix-B. & K. withdraws stage shows from its second de Luxe house here this week. Beginning Friday a straight all-talking picture policy goes into effect at the Marbro. Stage shows were withdrawn from the Granada several months ago. Benny Meroff, Marbro m. c., gets the Oriental assignment this week, replacing Charlie Crafts, former Federal Theatres m. c.

Short Subjects

The Happy Hottentot

(Vitaphone Varieties 4393)

Nifty

DETAILING the adventures of a ham brother act booked in a small-time house. The gag is that the song and dance men are to be ready to go on any time they are called. They do so many shows they lose count after fifteen. Finally told they can go home, they drop exhausted into bed and a fire alarm in the boarding house fails to arouse them. When the rescued are checked, they are discovered missing and a fireman bawls out their name. Hearing the call they jump out of bed, grab hats and canes and, still asleep, start going through their routine.

It's a dandy gag and so built that the lay public gets the full significance. Joe Frisco featured and Bryan Foy directed. Authorship credited to Herman Ruby. Running time, 9 minutes.

Good on any bill.

Two Minutes to Go

(Pathe)

Good

IN this, the fifth of his series, Knute Rockne puts his Notre Dame squad through a series of clever plays conceived purposely for their scoring possibilities when a score is badly needed. It's packed with interest from start to finish and includes scenes from a Southern Methodist-Notre Dame game. Rockne's running comments are enlightening and should spread the knowledge of how to play the game throughout the nation. Running time, 10 minutes.

A dandy addition to any program.

Stepping Out

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1068)

Only Fair

A WEAK sister on the-country-boy-comes-to-the-city-to-see-the-sights theme. Jealous wife of the city cousin allows her husband to act as guide. Boys pick up a couple of girls and actually go on a sight-seeing trip. Arriving home late to dinner, wife refuses to believe they have been to Grant's Tomb and the Aquarium. She crowns husband with dinner plate for lying. Joe Penner, featured, doesn't get over so well with rural comedy character. Ten minutes.

Will do to break up a couple of funny short comedies.

The Lucky Break

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1035)

Has Few Laughs

HARRY FOX is featured in this short, which has but few laughs, although it is different from the usual run of shorts. He is the inventor of a breakless mirror, trying to sell the invention to furniture manufacturers. All goes well until the wrong dresser is brought in for the demonstration. Harry gets a lot of cuts and the air. Returning home, he finds he has been dispossessed, his wife seemingly enjoying things with the furniture nicely arranged on the sidewalk. Glenda Farrell plays opposite and Arthur Hurley directed. Running time, 21 minutes.

Where comedy is needed.

The Bluffer

(Sennett—Educational)

Very Good

THIS is the first subject of the Sennett Brevities and introduces Sennett Color, the producer's new process. The coloring is beautiful and effective, but more important is the fact that this is a very good comedy, with Andy Clyde pretty much the whole show. He always can be depended upon for laughs, and in this he comes through nicely, aided by the pretty Patsy O'Leary, Gaylord Pendleton and Lincoln Stedman. Clyde had offered a big job in South America and his daughter's hand to the braver of two suitors. Stedman appears loaded down with medals and gets the assignment. But Pendleton and Patsy upset things when Clyde and Stedman are out fishing. Some very good gags in this. Running time, 11 minutes.

Fine anywhere.

My Mistake

Mildly Amusing

THE idea behind this might have been sold to better effect. It is not especially new, but there is a laugh or two left in the gag. A professional killer enters a man's apartment and takes a pot shot at him. The gunman has been hired to bump him off and they get into an argument as to how it shall be done. The man is an undertaker and knows something about killings. By chance it is discovered the gunman is in the wrong apartment and the undertaker makes a deal with him to leave business cards whenever he kills anyone. Neither Donald Brian or Pat O'Brien get much out of their material. Running time, 10 minutes.

Okay for opening when you need several shorts.

The Hoosegow

(M-G-M)

Dandy

IT WAS a bad day for everybody up to the governor when Messrs. Laurel and Hardy were sent to jail for some reason or other. When they had finished with their pranks it didn't resemble a jail at all. This is gorgeous slapstick all the way through and the customers roared without a stop. After a series of side-splitting episodes in the place the governor appears for an inspection. A practical joker tells Laurel to put a lot of rice in the radiator of the governor's car, with the result that a mountain of gooey goo emanates. At length the governor, his staff, the warden, some swell dames and the prisoners indulge in throwing the stuff at each other. Mack Sennett and his custard pies never made a mess like this. Running time, 20 minutes.

Surefire in any spot.

Our Nagging Wives

(Gayety-Educational)

Not So Good

FORD STERLING is capable of better stuff than this. It's a comedy with the laughs few and far between, and doesn't shape up so well. Ford is a lingerie salesman, who always is getting into jams with his wife. She gives him one more chance, and when he tries to help the fiancee of a friend, he rides into another mess. Better comedies are expected from Al Christie. Arvid E. Gillstrom directed. Running time, 19 minutes.

With a feature comedy.

Grandma's Girl

(Sennett—Educational)

So-So

AN odd one from Sennett. If it were not for a couple of tossed pies, you could hardly believe the barking dog trademark.

Andy Clyde is an old-fogey father refusing to allow his daughter, Baby Kane, to know the modern youths of the town. Her only approved boy friend is Lincoln Stedman, a nice steady bank clerk. Then grandma arrives. She is modern from the word go and, when Andy departs on a trip, she throws a real party. The girl meets Nick Stuart and forgets Stedman. Father returns and grandma frames him into permitting the kids to marry.

Not many laughs. Florence Roberts outstanding as grandma. Others merely average. One song by Baby Kane means little. Running time, 21 minutes.

Probably will fit with a strong comedy feature.

Short Subjects

Take Your Medicine

(Sennett-Educational)

Fairly Good

AS a vehicle to exploit Sennett Color this is a good novelty, but it is only fairly good as a comedy, and falls quite a bit below "The Bluffer," first of this new Brevity series. As usual, Andy Clyde carries the picture. He is a hypochondriac, intent upon keeping his daughter from marrying a radio singer. They are vacationing and the scenery is used to splendid advantage to show off the values of the color process. Eddie Cline directed. Running time, 10 minutes.

Fits any kind of bill.

Midnight

(Pathe)

Full of Laughs

A CAT quartette yodeling "Ida, Sweet as Apple Cider," and six dogs singing the "Sextette from Lucia" furnish the major portion of the laughs in this Aesop Fable, the sound and action synchronization being done so cleverly that the effect is good for a number of roars. The story concerns the plight of a farmer, annoyed by the cats, who pulls a boner by calling on the pound for a score of dogs to stop the nuisance. But they supply more whoopee than the cats did. Running time, 7 minutes.

Fine for added comedy.

Below Zero

(M-G-M)

Another Laugh Treat

LAUREL and Hardy go through a lot of silly experiences in this new comedy, but they are good for plenty of laughs. They are street musicians, the picture opening with them trying to panhandle in front of an institute for the deaf. Later they find a purse containing plenty of dough and go with a copper to a tough restaurant. When it develops the purse belongs to the cop, there is plenty of excitement. Another reason why Laurel and Hardy are so popular. Running time, 22 minutes.

On any kind of program.

Neighborly Neighbors

(Paramount)

A Howl

LULU McCONNELL is pretty much the whole show in this short, but she's some show. It's filled with laughs, some of them of the uproarious variety. She moves in on her neighbors for a game of bridge. Her husband hasn't a chance to get a word in edgewise, neither have her neighbors, in fact. And when the liquor is served, Lulu gets gloriously pie-eyed, the affair winding up in a near fight. Any audience will get a big kick out of this. Running time, 22 minutes.

Scotch Taffy

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 956)

A Wow

NEAT dialect monologue and plenty of funny material which is fresh and all fits the bill. Scotch character played by Scott Saunders introduced as a scissors grinder who has had but one customer in three years. Opens with a song and closes with the final chorus of same number. In between is a genuinely amusing series of Scotch anecdotes.

Saunders sells himself splendidly on the screen, having an admirable sense of timing. Caught on a bill which included three other shorts, this was the only one getting a hand. One reel.

Too Hot to Handle

(Darmour—RKO)

One Continuous Laugh

LOUISE FAZENDA turns on all her laugh guns in this one and furnishes two reels of continuous laughter. It's pure slapstick of the kind that turns on the laughs at the start and keeps them rolling until the final fadeout.

Louise is cast as a social advisor who agrees to supply an "old Southern family" as atmosphere for her employer, a "climber" of the worst sort.

Many ludicrous happenings occur before it is revealed that the "old Southern family" are all relatives of the "advisor" and come from South Brooklyn.

It's Miss Fazenda's show from start to finish, but the supporting cast, gags, direction and dialogue place this one at the top of the list. Vernon Dent, Fern Emmett, Harry Bernard, Lyle Tayo, Joe Young, Hilliard Kerr and Irving Bacon are the other players.

Musical shorts should be used to balance.

Lonely Gigolo

Misses

A TECHNICOLOR musical in which Lotti Loder sings two numbers. She makes her entrance in male attire backed by a chorus of girls. Female orchestra also spotted in background. After singing title song, Lotti wishes she could be a woman for just a short time. Dissolve grants the wish and at the same time changes the chorus girls to chorus boys. The orchestra is likewise transformed. Then the second number.

Miss Loder has not a particularly good singing voice. Nor are her dance routines out of the ordinary. Mistake was made in working chorus girls too tall and large for her. The whole idea just misses. Running time, 9 mins.

Cannibal Islands

(Talking Picture Epics)

Highly Interesting

EPICS has cut up "Across the World with Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson" into serial form, and the result is interesting. This is the first of the four chapters and an interesting one it is. Johnson accompanies the film with a lecture pointing out points of interest and describing the cannibalistic natives of the Solomon Islands. With the present vogue of travel talk pictures, this one should go over well. Running time, 20 minutes.

Jumping Beans

(Terry-Toon—Educational)

Weak Cartoon

THIS is pretty shy on laughs or funny gags. As the title indicates it is a Mexican border affair, built around the effects of eating jumping beans. Terry has turned out so much better stuff that this one suffers plenty by comparison. Can't hand it much. Running time, 11 minutes.

Use with good support.

And Now Chains Double Feature In Windy City

Chicago—Circuit houses here, balked in their attempt to have a clause restricting double-featuring included in the new plan of release and protection for the territory, are now resorting to double-featuring themselves. The Film Board and zoning committee threw out the clause after independents raised strenuous objections to it. Now Warners' Avalon and Symphony theatres have started using the double bills. Both houses are among the most important of the circuit's local holdings. Essaness, in which Publix holds an appreciable interest, is double featuring at the Center, Davis and Embassy.

The discarded clause in the zoning plan attempted to prohibit double featuring until the eighth week of general release. Now, as formerly, it is being done in the first week of general release (ninth week after the Loop). The circuits, apparently, unable to halt this form of independent competition by having it forbidden, are now claiming it for their own. Other circuit and chain houses here are reported about to inaugurate double feature bills.

Publix on Level On Dirty Copy Ban

Chicago—Proof of the earnestness with which Publix regards the purity code governing advertising copy was had here recently when M-G-M copy on "Madam Satan," slashed and censored on a wholesale scale, was presented to a local trailer firm. All deletions were of salacious or suggestive nature only, and the trailer house was instructed to follow the M-G-M copy in all other respects. Deletions of references to "bacchanalians of love" and "satin-skinned women for sale" were typical. The trailers were for use in outlying B. & K. houses here.

Walter Immerman, who succeeded John Balaban as director of Publix Chi and Detroit theatres, has been greeted by old friends here with as much enthusiasm as there was sorrow in Detroit over his departure. And that was plenty. Immerman, in the opinion of this column, is one of the few genuine regulars in responsible positions in the business here. We

Fights 'Giveaways' In Zone Pact, but Uses 'Em Itself

Chicago—Yearly, monthly and daily passes to Publix-Balaban & Katz theatres here are being offered by the circuit to winners of a newspaper contest designed to gain additional and habitual readers of the circuit's daily theatre advertisements.

Each day a "still" from a feature current at one of the circuit's theatres is published in an afternoon paper. Contestants are asked to identify the picture from which the "still" is taken and to supply two snappy dialogue lines to accompany the "stills."

Fifty pairs of guest tickets to Publix-B. & K. theatres will be distributed to daily winners. Twenty-five "Annie Oakleys," good for one month's admissions for two persons, will go to weekly winners, and 10 passes, good for one year's admissions for two persons, will be awarded monthly winners. The contest is for one month's duration. Hearst's Evening American is the sheet that figures in the tie-up, which, incidentally, does not call for any increase in the amount of advertising space used by the circuit. The paper figures the reader interest in the contest will repay.

And, yet, Publix representatives at the recent zoning conferences here championed the clause in the proposed protection plan regulating "give-aways" at the smaller independent houses.

Buying Strike in Chicago at End

Chicago—The biggest business week of the season was marked at all Chicago exchanges. Exhibitors, either in a buying frame of mind at last, or forced to open up for want of pictures, descended on Film Row in a body with fountain pens poised for action. Every exchange reported the phenomena.

Exhibitors, whom salesmen have been chasing for months, this week sought out the salesmen. Contracts were signed in a volume that has not been attained here since last year. Indications are that the buying will continue and may reach its peak this week, with a good volume of business persisting for weeks to come.

Balaban & Katz Not to Take Over Woods Theatre

Chicago—Balaban & Katz is not interested in acquiring the Woods theatre, which is to be relinquished by RKO next Monday, Walter Immerman, successor to John Balaban as director of the Chicago and Detroit Publix theatres, told a Motion Picture News representative this week. Immerman also denied a trade paper report that Balaban & Katz contemplated making a vaudeville house of the Oriental. The latter report originated when RKO changed the State-Lake, vaude-film spot, to a straight picture house, which eliminated vaudeville from the central theatre district in which the Oriental is situated.

"We are not interested in acquiring or operating the Woods," Immerman stated. "Nor is there any truth in the report that a change to straight vaudeville policy is contemplated for the Oriental."

The Chicago office of RKO was definitely advised by New York this week that the circuit would cease to operate the Woods after Oct. 27. "A Lady Surrenders" is current at the Woods and only one other booking, "East Is West," has been made for the house. The Shuberts, original lessees of the Woods, will operate it as a picture house, thereafter, it is believed.

RKO Ad Heads Add Headaches

Chicago—RKO's local newspaper advertising was obliged to bridge two extremes of public taste this week, when vaudeville was discontinued at the State-Lake and simultaneously a 12-week policy of name acts was inaugurated at the Palace.

"In response to the insistent public demand for 'in-the-flesh' entertainment," began the Palace ad, while, next to it, the State-Lake copy read: "A change of great significance to motion picture fans! In the future this theatre's entertainment will consist solely of the extended run showing of the most important talking pictures produced."

Universal, Judell Start Hot Serial Sales Race

Chicago—Universal and Judell Pictures are running neck and neck in a race for the lion's share of the serial picture business in Chicago. The race is largely between Universal's "The Indians Are Coming" and "The Lone Defender," distributed locally by Judell. Both are getting a tremendous play from exhibitors, though "Defender" appears to have an edge on the bookings to date.

The remarkable popularity of this type of picture is giving other exchanges something to think about. Exhibitors here find they go over with almost any type of audience, and have been particularly effective for matinees and kid busines.

Confessions

Chicago—This city's railroad terminals were full of picture luminaries in recent weeks. Here are a few of the errands on which they were bent:

Sharon Lynn, Fox featured player: "I'm going to New York for tryouts with both the Selwyn and the Woods interests. I want to improve myself with actual experience on the talking stage. Since the talkies a lot of us girls have just been getting away with it as far as voice is concerned. This experience in New York will help me immensely, whether I will be on the stage for a month or six months."

Ruth Roland, who recently completed "Reno" for Sono Art-World Wide: "I want to see the New York opening of my new picture. It will be more thrilling to me than my old serial thrillers were to their audiences. I'm crazy about talkies, and hope to make a lot more of them."

Charlie Mack, co-star of "Anybody's War": "I'm taking three new 'Morans' along with me to New York. There is no use telling you their names because you may not hear of any of them again. There have been seven 'Morans' so far. They come and go; but I'm always 'Mack'."

Oo La La Gal's French Roused In Pose Flare

Chicago—Posing a French actress for newspaper pictures requires a technique different from that commonly applied to the professional dames of our native heath, photographers for the local sheets learned to their dismay.

The occasion was the arrival here of Pierette Caillol, Parisian comedienne, en route to the Coast for picture work with M-G-M. Mlle. Caillol, a stranger to the English language, was all for popping one exasperated photog in the snoot when, after vainly trying to explain the quaint American custom of leg-crossing to her, he endeavored to assist her personally in striking the approved newspaper pose. Pierette, quite naturally, thought the mugger was getting fresh and properly resented it. She drew back a business-like right, but the photographer evaded it and returned to his office. In consequence, no one in Chicago is absolutely certain whether or not Pierette has knees.

Lorch Resigns Pathe Post; Ballentyne In

Chicago—Harry Lorch, for the past six years mid-west division manager for Pathe, with headquarters here, resigned that post this week, and left for New York where arrangements for a new post will be completed. Though Lorch stated before leaving Chicago that he was not at liberty to announce what position he would occupy, it is generally conceded here that it will be as a sales executive with Universal.

R. S. Ballentyne, former Omaha manager for Pathe, was named to succeed Lorch as mid-west division manager, and assumed his new office here this week.

Bomb Thrown in K. C. Opens War Between Unions

Kansas City—Opening gun in the "war" between the union operators and members of Sound Projectionists' Association, a non-union group, seems to have been fired. An explosion, believed to have been caused by dynamite, caused damage estimated at $200 at the Baltis, suburban house, shortly after the theatre closed. Several windows in the theatre and in a nearby store were broken. The blast occurred under the canopy, but there was no fire.

Several weeks ago the management laid off two union operators and hired one belonging to the "non-union union." Police and fire officials blame labor for the explosion at the Baltis.

Shortly after the non-union association became established, a rumor was issued to the effect that this body would retaliate any bombing of non-union houses by bombing union houses. An anonymous letter, describing such intentions, was circulated among all exhibitors in Kansas City. The non-union group denied any responsibility for the letter, its leaders declaring they did not know the identity of the writer. However, it is believed the union officials lay the writing of the letter to the Sound Projectionists' Association, and it is reported in exhibitor circles that the union is testing the strength of the new non-union by means of the Baltis affair.

The anonymous letter stated that the non-union houses would retaliate "the very next time a non-union house is bombed." It also hinted that the victim would be a de luxe house. Fireworks are expected as a result of the dynamiting of the Baltis.

equipped with tapped primaries so as to adapt the transformer to various line voltages. Such an arrangement is essential when the transformer is designed for general application in all parts of the country where the line voltage is apt to vary from 95 to 130 volts. In order to accommodate a single transformer upon these different primary voltages, the primary winding is tapped so as to provide various ratios between the secondary and primary turns. Each ratio is such that it provides the rated secondary voltage with one particular range of primary voltages.

An example is that cited in connection with the shorted primary winding. If this transformer were operated upon 90 volts instead of 100 volts, the output voltages would be those available with the complete 100 turns in the primary and a primary voltage of 100 volts. The effect of a fixed ratio and a variation in line voltage can be illustrated as follows.

Suppose that the turn ratio is 100 and the transformer has been designed for a 110 volt line to supply 1,100 volts out of the secondary. This transformer is used on a 90 volt line, the output voltage is 900 volts. At another point the transformer is used on a 125 volts line. The output voltage is 1,250 volts. This difference is not of great moment when voltage is applied to the plates of a rectifier tube, but suppose that one winding is used to supply the filament voltage. This winding is rated at 2.2 volts and the ratio is .02.

If the line voltage is increased to 125 volts, the voltage output of the filament winding will be 2.5 volts. On the other hand, if the line voltage is 90 volts the output voltage will be 1.8 volts. In the first case it may shorten the life of the tubes and, in the second, may not provide sufficient voltage for correct operation of the tube. To overcome such difficulties, power transformer primaries are arranged as shown in Figure 77.

The number of turns in the primary winding is increased as the line voltage is increased, thus reducing the ratio. In turn, the number of turns in the primary winding is decreased as the line voltage is decreased, thus keeping the same transformation ratio and adapting the transformer for different line voltages. It must be understood that such devices are manually operated and function upon ordinary power lines without compensating for momentary voltage fluctuations. The reference to various line voltages means steady line voltages but differing in different localities.

More about transformers in Lesson 23.

Strike Settled, But Musicians Plan New Fight

Philadelphia—Musicians already are pointing to 1931, following the compromise settlement which ended the local strike. The agreement is for one year, and the musicians feel that conditions will better enable them to enforce their demands.

"We are counting on assistance in the form of an aroused public demand for real music in the theatres," states Adolph S. Hirschberg, chairman of the arbitration committee of the musicians. However, he points out, the new agreement was concluded without any ill feeling between the parties.

Theatre Employes Fight Daylight Saving Law

San Francisco—More than 1,500 theatrical employes are pledged to work against the proposed daylight saving measure, which will appear on the November ballot.

The theatrical folk gathered at the St. Francis theatre and heard talks against the plan. Among the speakers were Henry Duffy, Bert Lytell, Herman Wobber, A. M. Bowles, State Senator Thomas A. Maloney, John O'Connell and A. A. Hickson.

Gilbert in the Air

Hollywood—John Gilbert's next starring talker will be an air story which Lt. Commander Wead of the U. S. Air forces will write for the star. Wead is the author of "Flying Fleet" and "Dirigible," air pictures.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

"Kwitcherbelliakin"

THIS talk about stock market conditions, business depression and numerous other, so-called, causes for bad business at the b. o. has finally reached the point where it now constitutes the pet alibi for all kinds of showmen.

Out on the coast this past summer, when lots of houses were crying, we saw many theatres doing a turn-away business. True, they were running good product, but, also true, they were selling their shows to the public without a let-up.

That struck us as damned sight better sense than lying down and bellyaching all over the town. On several occasions we made it a point to find out how strong the "crying houses" were making a play for patronage, and, in all but one instance, they were doing practically nothing at all.

Show business has no use for slackers, and any one who seizes upon the "business depression" alibi to support his claim for poor b. o. receipts ought to be seriously thinking of getting into some new kind of a racket.

When things slow up, that's the time you should make an inventory of yourself and your methods of show-selling. And when business is brisk, you must keep plugging if you want it to stay that way.

If you are willing to face facts and truths, such an inventory may reveal that you are letting yourself slow up to a dangerous degree.

Dangerous Pastime

Then you must snap out of it quick and get them coming back to your theatre by working harder than ever. Perhaps these kind of tactics will surprise you by the way it works, and we are confident that it will work if you will only do your share.

Then we have those visiting "crying towel" managers; you know the kind we mean; they trot from one house to another unfolding endless stories of how hard (?) they are working to put their house over and how little appreciation the boss shows for their efforts.

Show them the door, and show it to them quick. You have enough problems to juggle with without listening to a lot of hooey from showmen who are a disgrace to the business. And it won't add one bit to your prestige or reputation to be Septemberissue.Forty-one found entertaining them when you ought to be doping out ways and means of keeping your house up among the big money makers.

Visiting between managers has been one of the suggestions we have made time and again, but those visits should be educational as well as social. Not that you should be expected to talk shop all the while you are together, but the very nature of the business you are in is bound to provoke some sort of discussion about show-selling and the theatre game in general.

Karl Lindstaedt Let House in for Break On "Harvest Week"

Karl Lindstaedt, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Austin, Minn., has earned for himself the title of being an "obliging" manager, with the result that his good-will stock in the town has shot sky-high. It happened because Lindstaedt's Anniversary Week and the local Harvest Festival Week fell on the same date. Being wise, he decided to tie his event in with the town celebration, much to the gratification of the merchants.

The Festival Week was sponsored by the Advertising Club of Austin, who in turn appointed Lindstaedt chairman—giving him charge of the entire affair.

The "Week" was advertised in seven out-of-town newspapers, corn stalks and special printed cards were used on all the lamp posts, a free pavement dance was given and a three-day style show was had at the Paramount Theatre.

Over $400 was collected from the merchants to defray the expenses of the Festival Week. And inasmuch as this was the first time an amount of money of this proportion had been collected from merchants on an affair of this kind, it was quite a feather in Manager Lindstaedt's cap.

Prizes were offered to farmers bringing in the largest family, biggest stalk of corn, biggest potato, biggest stalk of celery, oldest car, family that traveled the farthest, etc.

With something doing every day and evening during the six days, Lindstaedt figured by having lots of people in the city he would get his proportionate share of the business at the Paramount. Consequently, he dressed his lobby accordingly for the three pictures he presented during the week.

A stunt that got lots of attention was the posting of nine autographed photos of Paramount stars in the lobby. These same stars also sent congratulatory telegrams regarding the Festival Week and they were placed underneath their photos—all of which made a good attention-getter.

The theatre played to excellent business all during the week, and Lindstaedt was more than satisfied. Listen, Karl! Let's have some more dope on you. Send us in a photo of yourself so that we can give you a regular introduction. Oke?

Cut-Out in a Local Park Was Latest Smart Achievement

It took plenty of drag for Hugh Smart to secure permission to pull the knockout stunt he used recently on "All Quiet" when it played the Montgomery Theatre in Spartanburg, S. C.

As the photo will show you, he placed a huge cut-out in a centrally located park in the business district, at the base of a statue. And one of them looked so good, that he decided to stick another in the park as well, which, accordingly, was done. This gag proved to be a big one for his box-office and will probably prove a good break for you, too, if you care to use it. Proposition your park authorities if you have something that will be of mutual benefit.

A tie-up was arranged with a drug store and soda fountain whereby persons visiting the Montgomery during the presentation of "All Quiet" would receive tickets which would entitle bearer to two drinks for the price of one. The drug store advertised it in the paper playing up the picture, theatre and playdates. The store also paid for the tickets which carried the theatre's ad on the coming attraction.

These activities form a great part of the work turned out weekly by Smart and, as he is one of our active contributors, we know that we will have some more of them to present in the future issues of the Club pages where thousands of other showmen find the ideas which are making their jobs really worth while. It's the spirit of the organization, let's keep it up.

Bair Plugs Shows From Roof, Using a Beaverboard Sign

As much as possible, without detracting any from the facade beauty of his house, E. E. Bair, manager of the State and American Theatres in East Liverpool, Ohio, utilizes every available space to plug his attractions and make the prospective customers look his way.

His house, the State, is located on the main street, and Bair observed that automobiles or pedestrians from blocks away could see the State sign and the side of the building quite clearly. This set him to thinking, and he doped out that the use of cut-out letters along the side of the wall would probably help him to plug his features to great advantage. The letters would be quite inexpensive. Accordingly, he set out and achieved the result that the photo shows you. Mammoth letters were placed along the side of the building and you may be sure that they attracted plenty of comment and attention when they first appeared. We don't know whether they are responsible for the long line of people who waited at the box-office for tickets on the opening day, but it must have brought some of them there. And that leaves you wide open for suggestions. Have you any space that can be used in this wise? Look your house over, inside, outside and upside down. Perhaps there are some valuable spots lying around idle. Fill 'em up! But do it in a manner that doesn't resemble the old time ballyhooing.

Bair is also stepping right along with his newspaper ads and we notice in his latest batch that he has again switched to the simple tone that has characterized most of his past advertising. In one of the ads—a plug for "Top Speed"—he showed a picture of the star puffing away contentedly at a cigar, and alongside his head, in very small type were the words: "Did'ja See Me?" The unusualness of this ad attracted plenty of comment from the newspaper readers and doubtless helped to sell the show in a big way. Thanks, "E. E." Let's have some more so that we can keep the rest of the Club posted on what's who in your town.

Theatre Newspaper Is Wow'g Them Out In W. Frankfort, Ill.

Division Manager L. J. McCarthy, who handles the Fox Wesco houses in the vicinity of West Frankfort, Ill., may well be proud of the plan he conceived when he tied in seven towns in his district on a co-operative plan whereby the theatres would get out and distribute an eight-page tabloid newspaper.

The paper, titled "The Egyptian Movie News," is devoted to ads from the local dealers in the seven towns, carries local stories on the advertising dealers and their products, and also carries publicity on the picture. A great deal of the motion picture publicity is secured from "Now," the official Wesco organ put out by Frank Whitbeck and his hustlers.

The sheet is only in its fourth week, but already ten thousand copies are distributed; and from the requests coming in, the number is going to jump up hundreds more. The paper is edited by Lou Cox of the Strand Theatre in West Frankfort. The residents take a great deal of pride in the paper and they go to the trouble of writing and sending in their opinions, with the favorable ones completely overshadowing any unfavorable ones. As a matter of fact, there are no unfavorable ones—only critical. We think that with a few more editions the paper will develop into a real box-office getter, as it has certainly started off fine. Keep us posted on it, Lou. And let's know what else you are doing, too.

Showman Has His Say; Do You Agree, Can You Assist?

In New York City there's a showman who has been in the game for a good many years. At present he is handling a local house, and, knowing his business as he does, he is more than making a go of it. In order to let you in on what he does to beat the terrific competition offered him by three houses of a major chain, right near him, get a load of his views, in which he starts off by saying:

"By the way, it might interest you to know that we've installed the Theatrephone, that device that enables the hard-of-hearing to enjoy squawkies. This is the same device that the Warners installed in their houses, and I believe that ours is the only theatre at our admission scale in the world to install this device. We make no extra charge for the use of it, and, believe me, I never knew there were so many hard-of-hearing people in this neck of the woods. It is certainly a help, both to me and the patrons, as the majority of them haven't been to the theatre since the advent of sound. Now they are regular patrons here, and as they usually bring other patrons with them, the installation more than pays for itself."

"Wish I could take a photo of a display I have here on "The Storm." Have two empty stores in the building and use one of them for ordinary lettered banners. In the other, the larger of the two, had a beaverboard proscenium built, with a stage, and room for an announcement card at the bottom of the proscenium, under the stage. Just now am using an animated display on "The Storm," made up of beaverboard cut-out of Wm. Boyd and Paul Cavanagh fighting, while on background we have Lupe Velez and another male character holding on to a tree watching the fight. Background also shows the snowstorm scene. Animated it by means of white confetti thrown into the window and three rotating fans blowing it about, giving us a good snowstorm effect. The attention it attracted more than makes up for the trouble we had rigging it, and the time we put in experimenting with the fans to get the confetti to fly about properly."

"Have a few more ideas up my sleeve for displays of that sort, but it's still the same old story of not spending money up here, which gives me an idea. You often mention problems of various managers, but they usually apply to either small towns or first runs. Now let's see what you can do with this. I'm in a tough jam, located in the Bronx, playing third run since Fox bought out our opposition; which originally played day and date with us, giving us at that time second run. I'm not permitted to spend much money for advertising, which ties me down to programs, window cards and a six-sheet truck which is split up between three theatres, meaning that we use it about 10 days a month. Our sound is satisfactory to our patrons, although it could stand plenty of improvement; in fact, am experimenting on that end now. We are the only theatre in the section running double feature, our shows usually running about three hours in length."

"The theatre itself is kept clean and neat at all times, and is the most modern of the smaller houses in the section, being only three years old. Of course, we have our regular patrons, who have been patronizing the house since it opened, but we can't depend on them. Since installing sound have no room for stage attractions, as the horns and tower take up all available stage space. Previous to sound we gave our patrons a stage attraction in the form of a high-class singer every week. I don't believe in give-away propositions or rebate tickets or price reductions, as I believe that all of those items tend to cheapen a theatre."

"Have prospects of Saturday morning Kiddie Shows, through getting acquainted with the president of the Parents' Association of a large school nearby, something I've been trying to promote since we opened, but without success. Did him a favor by running program notices regarding school registration, and he promised to use his influence with the principal, so we shall see what we shall see."

"By golly! When I started this letter I thought I had nothing to say, but it looks as though I'm wrong, so better stop now. Say, before I forget, here's a hint for houses that use the non-sync for opening and closing. If they want some good snappy fox-trot numbers with vocal choruses, tell them to try those 15c "Hit-of-the-week" records, issued once a week. They're made of fibre, are unbreakable, and can be run about a hundred times without impairing the sound quality. Recordings are just as good as on the expensive discs, and they employ some well-known orchestras. Have been using them here for the past few weeks, and they're more than satisfactory."

"'Snuf for now."

Well, how about it? He wants to know what you'd do if you were in his shoes. Drop us a line giving us some dope on it and we'll pass it along. Remember it's "All for One and One for All."

Ken Hoel Gives Us A Little Tip On Novel Candy Tie-Up

The economy idea instilled in so many of the American gentry during the term of office of Coolidge seems to have hit Ken Hoel pretty hard; but it happens to be an advantageous wallop. Ken, as you know, manages the Harris Theatre in Findlay, Ohio.

It happened this way. When he played "Bright Lights" he decided to use a throwaway that would be looked at. To do this, he tied up with a local confectioner and the man donated a bunch of candy kisses which were placed, one apiece, in an envelope appropriately labeled: "A Kiss From Dorothy Mackaill, charming star of 'Bright Lights,' etc." A small box carried a credit for the dealer.

To seal up the envelopes, Hoel printed a number of small stickers, which contained the program for the week. The stickers were placed on the flaps of the envelopes, holding them down, and insuring their being read. The angle proved to be a good one from the box-office standpoint and resulted in additional business. Which, as that is what Ken is always after, was oke with him.

And by the way Ken, how about passing along some photos and dope on how you manage to turn out those marvelous art fronts that we have been hearing about from some folks who passed through your town recently? Not fair keeping those things a secret. We're waiting. So don't tell us that you are too busy.

Dan Weinberg Is Latest Virginia Showman to Join

Another showman from Virginia comes to the Club in the person of Dan Weinberg, district manager for Warners, of the state, working under the direct supervision of John J. Payette, general zone manager. He handles all of the houses in Harrison, Staunton, Lexington, Clifton, Forge and Bedford.

Well versed in showmanship, having been in the game since he was knee high to a water bucket, Weinberg is well qualified to handle the job he now holds. In the olden days his father was one of the pioneers in the business, and has been handling houses since then. Weinberg himself has developed right along in the game, starting as an usher in the houses, shifting to ticket taking, billposting, and operating. He knows almost every phase of the business. The success of the Shenandoah Valley theatre can be accounted in no small way to his efficiency.

Well, when a showman can present so excellent a card of admission, it seems to us that we have acquired a man who will join the ranks of the active Club members. We want to extend him a hearty welcome into the Club and express the hope that he is going to pass along some slants on his work so that his fellow members might also benefit from them. What do you say, Dan?

A National Guard Tie-Up Netted Ray Peterson Publicity

Tying in with the National Guardsmen was largely responsible for Ray N. Peterson increasing business over 200% during the showing of "All Quiet on the Western Front" at the Strand Theatre, which has been making theatrical history in Gulfport, Miss.

Company M, 155th Infantry of the Mississippi National Guard paraded to the theatre from the armory in uniform with a full complement of officers at 7:30 P. M. on first day of picture's engagement. Upon arrival at the theatre they assembled along the sidewalk and went through a few drills and were then photographed.

Besides the parade, Peterson had the guardsmen's full cooperation in putting over the picture. They furnished a machine gun which was displayed in the lobby during play dates with three uniformed guardsmen with rifles and fixed bayonets on duty at all times. The machine gun was set up behind a sand bag dugout in the lobby. A uniformed bugler was also secured who blew taps at the close of the feature each time. All lights in the theatre were dimmed and then the bugler stepped from the wings of the stage and was spotted with a dim baby spot which threw his shadow on the back curtain while he softly played Taps. This went over very nicely and was loudly applauded.

Peterson then persuaded the Captain of the guardsmen to award, from the stage on the first day of the picture, Government medals for marksmanship which two of the guardsmen had won at the National Guard summer encampment. The medals were presented and the boys received tremendous applause from the audience. A special shadow box was made on which was painted two big guns pointing up toward top of box. Then at the mouth of the gun a jagged hole was cut out to resemble a bursting shell and this was covered over with red transparent paper on which was lettered the title of the picture. By the use of a flasher in the box, it gave the appearance of the guns firing. At each flash, the titles stood out boldly in the center of the explosion.

Other mediums included 250 postcards being sent to American Legionnaires and to prominent people in the city; the distribution of 3,000 paper napkins printed in two colors; 1,000 heralds wrapped around bread and distributed by the bakeries and others.

With so complete a campaign is it any wonder that they were yelling S. R. O. when the first show was half over? We have noticed from this showman's past activities that he doesn't waste any time in putting his campaigns across, so we'd like him to shoot along some dope to us on the various means and stunts he uses to sell them. Let's hear from you, Ray, and include your photo at the same time, so that the rest of the Club can meet you.

Says W. Ward Marsh in The Cleveland Plain Dealer

I know of no other big business which asks so little loyalty and gives so little human interest to employees as the film industry, as a whole.

It is an enterprise which has never made inventory of the cost of labor-turnover—or what price it is to have a loyal, honest, affectionate employee.

With but few exceptions, barring relatives, most men within the industry will tell you (if they speak the truth) that they expect to be "let out any time." I mean by "most men" to include all the workers with particular emphasis on the ones on the lower rungs of the ladder.

A new boss comes in (which happens regularly), and there is a complete change of staff. This happens with astonishing regularity. And the pictures have yet to learn that no employee does his best or even tries to do his best when he knows that it's only a matter of months or weeks or even days when he'll be hunting a new job.

The cost of these changes of staffs is terrific, but so far no one has made the slightest attempt to reckon the cost nor has any attempt been made to build up good feeling, morale or anything else which goes into solid, if abstract, construction of a business enterprise.

In place of that, standardization has set in. All ushers bow from the hips, direct you with extreme and annoying politeness to seats you do not want, and in all respects act as about as unAmerican as it is possible for them to act.

House managers, not all but most, still have no great say in the operation of their houses. They are told to get business, and that they have a free rein—and then next day a favorite from New York appears, fires ushers, raises blazes because the rest rooms are not perfect (when no appropriation has been given to assist in perfection), and acts so lordly that every employee in the theatre knows the manager has no authority and thenceforth treats him with no respect. The theatre goes down. Then a new manager comes in.

Often expenses seem to be running high, and so several jobs are closed and more work is thrown on the manager of the theatre, with the results that he can't do all the work allotted him. Finally New York asks, "What's the matter with business?"

The trouble is that so little brains is going into management—both in exhibition and production. Only one factor is not neglected and that is this: Are we making as much money as we set for our quota?

And then when the producers find they are not they begin cleaning house again, establish new staffs and begin the same rotten old process of doing everything to kill business, and just enough of the right thing to keep business going.

What the screen needs is loyalty within its folds. What it also needs is enough sense to understand that its forte is telling motion picture stories. I think it will struggle along for a long time as it is.

There is no telling how far it will go if it sets about telling stories which have movement in them.

As for loyalty in its own house, that's its own grief. It costs millions to have its own hands bitten by the thousands who don't care what the hell happens to the old concern just so long as they can hang on. It's a great game among employees—this hanging on. I've been watching them come and go for a decade, and there are shining exceptions to every rule, but most of them hate the handouts which are feeding them.

New Angle on Phone Gag!

Remember that telephone hanger gag that C. J. Latta and Johnny Scanlon passed along on our pages? Paul Kunze, Manager of the State Theatre in Stoughton, Mass., is using it now and he reports unusual success.

A slight variation—one that is of great help—has been made by Kunze on the stunt. He prints, like Latta and Scanlon, the program for the week on the phone hanger. As a pass privilege stunt though, he announces on the hanger that every day fifty phone subscribers will be called and asked what is playing at the State. If the answer comes back correctly the person called is informed that tickets will be waiting at the box-office for him. In this manner Kunze is sure that the phone hanger is put on the phone, as the person called will have to have it before him in order to state the name of the current picture.

Solomon Sure Can Lay Out Campaigns; He's a Real Expert

When S. S. "Sig" Solomon, city manager for Publix in Youngstown, Ohio, sets out to execute a campaign on a picture, every possible angle is covered, as witness what he did to sell "All Quiet on the Western Front" to the town when the film played the State Theatre.

For his general treatment of the film, Solomon depended, to a great extent, on the newspapers. Cut off from the east and west suburban territory because "All Quiet" played Sharon, Pa., and Warren, Ohio, he concentrated on intensive city coverage and devoted most of the selling energies to north and south. On the art work, his copy sold the title, above all else. He played up the sex appeal angle, and heads of all the prominent characters. All copy connected the book with the screen. The street displays, valance and lobby cards carried copy: "Regular Prices—Doors open 9:30 A. M."

To sell the trailer, Solomon spotted it between the news and the comedy. Two men uniformed in German army attire seemingly opened and closed the unit. They appeared at the center of the stage and as the curtain unfolded marched toward the exits (offstage) and remained in the background to march toward the center as the trailer finished and the curtains closed in. The fader setting was raised higher than usual to bring home the "thrill" effect.

His free publicity in the newspapers netted him a human interest story, supplied by the State doorman, whose childhood was spent behind the Western Front lines, a special feature preview story write-up written by the dramatic editor, special human interest story written by a Detroit nurse, the impressions of a local German pastor on the film, a Funny Face contest with children being entitled to revamp a cartoon of Slim Summerville, and readers in all the foreign papers.

On his outside billing, Solomon covered every inch of available space in the city, even to the posting of dated one-sheets on all of the army boards. Every window of prominence in the town features some of his art work, with the book stores coming in for a great play. He ran a special preview early in the morning for the benefit of the dramatic editors, vice-president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, the two most prominent Germans in the town (the Pastor and Mr. Dietz), and the superintendent of public schools. He secured reviews in writing from every one in attendance and ran them in the papers, in the write-ups and display advertising.

His exploitation included a personal address during the meeting of a prominent German society, the distribution of 1,000 personally signed German letters, at a Teuton picnic; 2,000 postcards to the Mahoning valley district adjacent to Youngstown; an address at the Kiwanis Club; at the Saturday Booster Club meeting he announced to the children the importance of "All Quiet"; secured personal contacts with the American Legion and Cinema Club for theatre parties; two German pastors gave their comments to the congregation on the picture; and the superintendent of schools gave all of the principals copy of his personal review to post on the bulletin boards.

Some campaign! So completely covered and so adeptly handled that it had to click! Have yet to hear of an instance where Sig's campaigns have not gone over. We want to say thanks for this one because we know that the rest of the Club is very much interested in seeing what this showman is doing out in Youngstown, and we are sure that they will be able to pick out and use some of the ideas to suit their own particular case. Thanks, Sig, and remember, we're always looking for more from you.

Ike Berney Wants Your Help on His Price Slash Problem

Here's one for the Club to dope out. In accordance with our policy of "All for One and One for All," and not desiring to express our own personal opinion on the angle, since we feel that it is the Club's problem as well as our own, we are going to give you the low-down on the ad we are reproducing here.

This ad, made up by Ike Berney, manager of the Pastime Theatre in Lewistown, Pa., was inserted in the local newspaper. In an effort to boost business for the coming season, Berney and the owners decided to reduce the price of the house. In the ad he explains that he can hardly afford to do this, especially since pictures are not cheaper and his expenses are as high as ever. He tells the readers and patrons of the theatre that he is going to take a sporting chance. He wants their support, and, being confident that he is going to get it he is slashing prices.

PICTURES are not cheaper. Expenses are not lower. But lower prices are what conditions request we know and what the public is asking for.

Not for the PASTIME to destroy the result of a lifetime's effort—but for PASTIME to substitute poor pictures. What then, to do—to keep prices lower?

Decrease "overhead" by increasing patronage—all our seats every night without adding to expenses. If we can do this, then WITH THE SAME QUALITY, prices can be kept down.

Making our Winter price 35c (children, 15c) is a bold step. We expect a general public commendation—we expect an increased patronage—we expect a warmer goodwill than ever!

IKE BERNEY

Here's his list of prosperity promoters, which he lists in the ad, cover some of the biggest pictures for the coming season. He tells the whole town what he is going to play, and gives them a line on what to expect. His aim is to have those persons who formerly visited the theatre but once or twice a week, come to every new show. In this manner he expects, through increased patronage to get back the money which he stands to lose by lowering prices. What do you think of his move? Is it a good one? Would you try it? Have you any suggestions to offer? Let's have your views so that we can pass them along to him? Or if you're in Berney's district drop him a line or two and he'll give you some dope on how he's doing on the plan to date.

Claar Handled the House Capably While Holden Vacationed

It is too bad that we have to bust in on this column, which we had intended to devote exclusively to the activities of J. M. (Jake) Claar, assistant manager of the Fairfax Theatre in Miami, Fla., where Earle Holden manages, but we have to pass along the photos showing the arrival of the flyers and officials from Cuba, who attended the premiere performance of "The Dawn Patrol," of which we told you more some time ago, so we hope that Jake will forgive the little break. However, here goes for a recital of Jake's work while Earle was recently vacationing in Havana.

When he played "The Spoilers," he went down to the Miami Herald and sold the sporting editor the idea of attending the screening so that he could witness the fight scene in the picture. The editor attended and was so impressed with the film that he gave the special scene a big write-up on the sporting page. In keeping with the theme of the picture, Claar secured a quantity of slab lumber and converted the entire front of the theatre into a hut similar to those found in the lumber camp of Maine and Oregon. The same effect was obtained for the box-office.

To plug the film about the city, Claar, in lieu of heralds, made up stickers, which were pasted on automobile windshields. The stickers carried copy: "Keep Smiling; Don't Be a 'Spoiler.'" A number of them were also pasted on the windows of local merchants. For a street ballyhoo, an usher, dressed in miner costume, with pick, shovel, boots and everything that goes to make up the well dressed miner. He paraded the streets during the busiest hours, a banner on his back plugging the film.

Then he effected a very valuable tie-up for "Monte Carlo," crashing one of the largest department stores for the first time, with this particular sort of gag. The store agreed to furnish him with perfume costing $15 an ounce. The perfume was sprayed in the theatre during the boudoir scene in the picture and proved a knockout angle. You can figure that it must have taken some tall talking to promote the perfume, $15 an ounce, an ounce each performance, five performances a day, and a seven-day run! Not so bad, is it? And Claar did more besides that on the picture, too. Nearly every store dealing in ladies' apparel was tied up for window displays.

Claar certainly deserves to be complimented on his work, especially in view of the fact that he had all the regular routine to look after, too. Keep us posted, Jake, so that we can keep tabs on you.

HOLIDAYS ARE COMING!

No doubt many of our members and readers will wonder why we start calling attention to these things so far in advance, but truthfully speaking, nothing real big was ever accomplished through rushing about doing last-minute things. On the contrary, rushing generally ends in failure and hard feelings for all concerned.

Christmas holidays means, in the parlance of show business, headaches. Unless you are one of those honest-to-goodness managers who know how to capitalize on the hundred and one angles which present themselves to those who would seek them.

Promoting a free show for the poor kiddies of your community is just one way of cloaking the theatre in good-will. Receiving and distributing groceries, vegetables or toys, via the local Salvation Army, Chamber of Commerce or other welfare organizations.

Working up interest in a Santa Claus matinee, perhaps one of the best ways of showing a real day's receipts on Christmas Eve. It's simple enough. Advertise it as just that; "A Santa Claus Matinee"; time it to break after school hours on the 24th. Have a Santa Claus there to greet the kiddies as they come in and to present them with a little package. The package to contain one or two small toys or novelties, plus some good Holiday candy. We know of one manager who took in $165 on the day before Christmas. Out of the $165, the special matinee netted him $152. It was like finding the money. All the toys and candy cost him was twenty-two dollars.

These are just suggestions; think it over, boys, but don't wait until the last minute to make your plans or arrangements.

Fortune Teller at Old Mill Theatre Was Fine Novelty

Showmen have had artists, singers, dancers, musicians and every other form of entertainment to plug shows, so it was no surprise to find out that W. W. Lewis, manager of the Old Mill Theatre in Dallas, Texas, had introduced a gypsy fortune teller to help him boost business higher at the house.

A gypsy tent was promoted and a psychic was secured who had built up quite a following at a local tea room. The gypsy woman was glad to co-operate on the stunt for the prospects of customers which she might get. The fortune teller gave readings free and became so popular that she had a line all day, every day, waiting to have their fortunes told. Patrons received readings on presentation of seat check—showing that they had actually attended the show.

The stunt proved so popular for the three days that it was decided to hold it over for the remainder of the week. Well, there it is. If you can find a spot for it, it might also click for you, too. At any rate, we want to thank Miller for letting us see it, because we know that his fellow Club members are always interested in seeing what the other fellow is doing.

Truthful Advertising

In a recent letter received from R. Mason Hall of the Lyric Theatre in Norton, Virginia, we quote a paragraph which we consider straight from the shoulder and always of timely interest. We would appreciate any other expressions of a similar character because it deals with a subject of such great importance.

> "My possibilities for exploitation here in Norton are limited, but regardless of the town or the location, if you go after it strong enough using the available opportunities that the town affords you can usually get the business. By winning the confidence of your patrons, being fair and square with your advertising, and exploiting each feature as being just what it is. Exploiting each feature as being bigger and better than the one you just showed, I think is about the worst practice a theatre man can follow, especially if he has competition and uses this method; he will wonder why he isn't packing them in. My idea of exploitation is not putting over a big special; any fool can do that. It's these good little subjects that need the plugging and if you put it across, then I congratulate you and consider you a good exploiter."

We are grateful to Mr. Hall for this frank expression and we hope to hear from him again on some more of his opinions on how to sell your shows and your theatre.

Carkey Crashes Thru With Whiz Work for Olympic Opening

Throwing all his showman resources into the task before him, Larry Carkey, who is now handling the Olympic Theatre in Utica, N. Y., is turning out some great stuff at the house.

On the recent opening of the house he treated Utica to a fine campaign. Radio announcements were broadcasted four times a day for ten days in advance of the opening date, telling about the theatre opening and the attraction playing the house. Fifty thousand paper napkins were placed in every restaurant and soda fountain in the city. The napkins carried the imprint of the initial attraction at the theatre. 40,000 circulars were distributed on a house-to-house campaign. Music stores, book stores, and every available merchant's windows were tied up, the windows being devoted entirely to the theatre opening.

An elaborate theatre front was built for the opening of the house, cut-outs and other things were being placed on top of the marquee, with floodlights enhancing the effects. Cards were placed in every room in the leading hotels advising the guests of the feature attraction at the Olympic. Plenty of newspaper stories were secured well in advance and right through to the opening day.

As the city boasts a large foreign population, every foreign paper in the city carried ads and stories, a move which proved to be an excellent one. Over 5,000 telegrams were sent out through Western Union informing Uticans of the event to take place. Congratulatory telegrams sent in by screen stars were placed on a large board in front of the theatre. The Western Union set up a receiving set in the lobby, and furnished with copies of the congratulatory telegrams by Carkey, they duped them so that it appeared as though they were just being sent. This move created a lot of comment, the natives thinking that it was the McCoy. As a result, the stunt clicked wonderfully.

Carkey's whole campaign, well planned and executed, was a certainty to click from the start. The theatre enjoyed one of the best nights it had ever had and the town saw a sensational opening night and campaign. With Larry all set up there, we look forward to hearing more from him real soon, and we are sure that his work will contain some slants that will help his fellow showmen. Keep it up, Larry.

Guest Week and a Film Check Chart Campbell's Latest

Up in Canada they are still as active as ever, and one place where there is bound to be something doing is in Wallaceburg, Ont., where Duncan Campbell manages the Capitol Theatre.

Not so long ago he pulled a stunt that went over well in his town. It was called "Guest Week." Six local merchants co-operated in it and permitted Campbell to insert names in their daily ads. The names were selected at random from the town directory. A heading on the ad stated: "Look for Your Name in This Ad and Receive a Free Pass to See (Title, etc.)." The local newspaper came through handsomely and give him a front-page streamer on the top of the sheet, "This Is Guest Week at the Capitol." Directly underneath they ran a long reader. The space was secured absolutely free. Incidentally, "Guest Week" went over very well. Perhaps you want to try it?

Along with this story we are reprinting a copy of the film report chart which Campbell so kindly passes along to us. This was gotten up for him by one of the boys at his house and contains a pretty complete summary of what goes into the booth. If at any time the theatre is accused of damaging film, they have only to check back on the film report to find out the condition it arrived in. We are reprinting this rather small in order to save space. If you care to use the slant, you can make up your reports any size you want. They may be either printed or mimeographed, Campbell's being the latter.

WHAT IS EXPLOITATION?

EARLE HOLDEN Says:

EXPLOITATION and ballyhoo!

As great a difference between the two as day and night, or a black horse and a white horse. At least I think so, and although I have only been in the game four years, I have learned to respect the meaning of the two words.

As it appears to me the word ballyhoo takes us to the circus lot. It is a hard word to use, because of the fact that modern showmanship had almost eliminated the word. When the spieler of a side show stood on the platform, and with cane in hand, told of the million of wonders that one could see on the inside for ten cents, that was ballyhoo. But the managers of theatres don't go in for that kind of showmanship, not that there is anything wrong about it, but their method of selling comes under the classification of exploitation, to sell their shows in a manner that will bring them the greatest returns for their money.

And what constitutes exploitation? There's so many ways of exploitation that it is rather hard to state just what does constitute exploitation. I would refer to any form of a street device for selling a picture as a street ballyhoo. I would refer to any noise or music device for selling a picture as a ballyhoo, which shows that even the present day theatre manager does have to use bally methods in selling some of his shows, but his ballyhoo must carry a truthful message. And it must be stated that some of the old time showmen who stood on the platform yelling their wares to the public were apt to stress a point here and there, such as the giant reptile you will see on the inside, captured after it had strangled 40 men to death with one stroke. The snake probably was raised on some snake farm, and had been doped from the time it was old enough to see until the present, so much, that it did not know a man from a horse.

But the most practical side of the showmanship game of today where motion picture theatres are concerned is the regular exploitation methods. And they come under many classifications, but all tend to sell that particular show which the theatre manager is attempting to put over. If you plant a special story in a newspaper that is exploitation. You had to sell the editor the idea that the story had news value, you had to write it like that, and that was newspaper exploitation. The window trim in which the merchant had to be sold on the idea that the stills and art displays would attract to his window were surely exploitation ideas. The fact that you promoted perfume at $15.00 an ounce gratis to spray the theatre with was exploitation. You had to sell the merchant the idea that people would like the scent of the perfume and would want to know where they could purchase it, and if the merchant was wise he would do some exploitation of his own with the results that you would have a trailer on his screen announcing that the perfume could be purchased at his store.

In all matters pretaining to exploitation the word ballyhoo should be left out. They are two separate means of selling a picture. If you are going to ballyhoo a picture then ballyhoo it and if you are going to exploit a picture then exploit it, and yet there are times that the two can be worked together to good advantage.

If I build an atmosphere front for my theatre that is exploitation. It had been included in my exploitation plans. Now if I decide to further enhance the selling value of the front by placing a loud speaker on it playing music, then that is ballyhoo, a direct bally to call attention to the front which should then sell the picture.

The same thing applies to the truck that I might have out on the streets. My exploitation ideas call for certain specifications on the same. The art department and the carpenter carry out my exploitation ideas. Then my truck is ready, but how shall the attention of street walkers be called to the truck. By ballyhoo methods of course, a loud speaker or a spieler.

I have tried to show what I believe is the difference between the two. Exploitation is used mostly, is used all the time, with a mingling in of ballyhoos for the purpose of attraction additional attention to that particular exploitation idea that I am trying to put over.

In the modern show business we necessarily need both exploitation and ballyhoo, with the exploitation dominating. Exploitation itself is a separate part of the show business, but a good theatre manager in order to hold down a good job has to be a theatre manager and an exploiteer. And the theatre business is not the only business that depends on exploitation and bally methods in order to do business.

While it is true that the words originated around the show business, practically every industry today is using exploitation methods to sell their product and it is a noticeable fact that most of these methods were handed down by showmen. And all in a nut shell exploitation is really advertising, which is secured free of charge to put over a show. Advertising really heads the list with exploitation coming next and then ballyhoo and all three make the combination to either pack your house or to have your show play to empty seats.

Here's the latest opinions on exploitation. These views submitted by Earle Holden, manager of the Fairfax Theatre, Miami, Fla., and Dave Lustig, publicity chief of the Manhattan Playhouses in New York City will let you see what two showmen—hundreds of miles apart—have to say. Follow this series closely, as the tips contained therein are valuable. Only a few more of them, too.

DAVE LUSTIG Says:

WHAT is exploitation?

If we are wrong this case can be taken to a higher court. If you agree with us . . . our time has been well spent knocking out this "must go" for our friend "Chick."

Exploitation is the getting across of a certain picture or stage show that hasn't the big names, well known story by a well known writer . . . and a number of other lacking qualifications the seasoned showman should know.

Suppose we get the order or get the idea ourselves to put across a certain special month, picture or what have you. Instead of the usual three or four hours sleep we remain awake jotting down various steps and ideas that later we will either incorporate into a more or less smashing campaign or tear up and assign to the ever-waiting waste basket . . . only to begin all over again doping, planning and discarding. Yes, indeed, its a great life but nerve wracking! Ask Chick . . . he knows!

After we decide on a dozen or two jotted ideas we start pounding out the necessary copy, routines, window displays, and the war is on! Each manager, following the set campaign, suggests various bits and ideas. Then they start to work. And boy they sure do work!

The campaign is under way . . . the dear public learn all about it . . . they tell their friends and results start clicking in a consistent manner. The box office sings a theme song . . . the home office begins to smile . . . the managers are delighted . . . and more bacon is brought home.

Exploitation embraces many things . . . and covers a multitude of sins. It acts as the hypnotic influence, when properly applied, that draws them from various sections into the theatre and when the talking entertainment is entertainment Mr. Mrs. and Miss Public, dear beloved souls . . . leave the theatre in a happy mood . . . and if not . . . well . . . we do try to make 'em come and then like what we give them.

The mere sending out of a few thousand circulars or heralds doesn't mean exploitation. It is the many different items checked on a campaign routine that clicks and hits the bell.

It was the consistent plugging of the Manhattan Playhouses, Inc., organization that put over Blue Ribbon Month, Gratitude Month, Better Talkie Month, and everything we have done. It was the managers who went over the top with banners flying and bands playing. Pictures that had but litle selling value were put across to satisfying returns by the men in our organization stepping to the music doled out by the main office. Our men are not rubber stamps nor puppets . . . they are expected to do things and they do. Empty seats are the bugbear of every theatre man. Exploitation properly applied will fill, at least, many of the empties, but each and every theatre really needs a bit of study and special exploiting of ideas for it has been proven time and time again that certain stunts and campaigns that will click well in one neighborhood will not apply to another.

Managers who know what it's all about know their immediate vicinity and their own house can add to a campaign sheet with telling results but these additions will bear more fruit when taken up with the main office for two or more heads many times are better than one.

And on the other hand it is imperative that the house manager follow the campaign sheets as well as studying the press sheets for every bit of effort put forth to boost a picture counts and the public is always interested in something a bit different and the oldest standbys can be rehashed and adapted with a new angle that many times goes over to much better results than a newly thought out bit of special exploitation and that is where the value of The Manager's Round Table section clicks . . . for here the managers have a fund of practical exploitation stunts used by managers throughout the country.

Often a manager picks an item out of the pages of the News and brings it in to our office and asks us if they can use it. We often adapt the idea, giving it a different twist and are honest enough to admit that we are thankful for these pages especially when we have a million things to get out so copy can reach the printers before deadline.

Backgammon in New York City!

Right on the heels of our suggestion a while ago regarding the rapidly gaining popularity and value of Backgammon, we learned that one of New York's houses has installed the game, and it is meeting with favorable response from the patrons.

The Little Carnegie Playhouse, Leo Brecher's house, on 57th Street—formerly an arty cinema, and now playing second runs at Broadway prices—is ideally suited, due to its background, to introduce the game. The house is the first in the city to feature it.

Loose Buttons Were Sewed on by Lady As Harrison Stunt

They are still laughing in Waco, Texas, over the latest Harrison gag. It happened when "Animal Crackers" played the Waco Theatre. J. P. Harrison, manager of the house, in order to make certain that his patrons would go home with all their buttons on, engaged a lady to sew on all lost buttons.

The lady sat in a big wicker chair in the lobby with her sewing basket, table and plenty of buttons. A large sign in the background read: "The management of this theatre has employed a lady to sew the buttons back on the clothes of the patrons who burst them off laughing at ANIMAL CRACKERS."

The lobby stunt got a lot of attention and caused much favorable comment.

A street stunt was used that evoked a lot of laughter. Two grown boys rolled each other around in a baby carriage through the business district—and the one riding carried a sign reading, "I am now paying off a bet that ANIMAL CRACKERS is the funniest picture ever produced."

And while we are at it, we'd like to tell you of the realistic lobby display he constructed for "Manslaughter."

The local Ford agency and a motorcycle dealer loaned the vehicles to make up the lobby display. The motorcycle was turned on its side as if the car had hit it and the dummy in policeman's uniform was under the motorcycle.

In the car was placed a wax figure of a woman that was valued at $500; the wax figure being loaned by a local dry goods dealer. She (the wax figure) was seated behind the driving wheel and was attired in sports wear and was smiling as though nothing had happened.

The car had to be turned on its side to get it into the lobby and then put on rollers and rolled in. The display looked so realistic that people gazed at it for some time. Special stills and catchlines regarding the picture were placed around car and motorcycle. In addition to the interest displayed in the exhibit many people were curious to know just how the car had been placed in the lobby.

You all, no doubt, remember the gag that Harrison pulled on "Vagabond King" when he had girls on the street present every man in Waco with a rose, which they pinned on to their lapels, so you know he is no slouch when it comes to turning out stunts that will click at the box-office. In view of this fact, "J. P.," we think that you ought to be represented often, so we hope that you are going to keep us posted.

Haley Had Trolley Car Plugging Film Playing His Theatre

It's all star showmanship that Eddie Haley is displaying at the Star Theatre in Concord, N. H. Eddie, whose photo appears with this article, is right there when it comes to attracting shekels into the box-office. One of his recent endeavors may be seen in the street car gag that formed a big part on his campaign for "Follow Through."

Through the co-operation of the General Manager of the street railway—who was persuaded that the stunt was a corker and would help business—Haley secured the use of a trolley car, the only cost being the salary of the motorman, a trivial expenditure in view of the results obtained from the stunt. The car, appropriately bannered with compo board, carried a plug for the street railway and the selling talk on the picture. The gag, never before pulled in the city, went over like hot cakes in a Childs' beanery. The street car company, well pleased, reported an increase in business, as did the theatre. The way was paved for another tie-up and we don't doubt but that Haley is going to take advantage of it when the occasion arises.

Another gag that went over very well in his town was an animal cracker hunt, held in conjunction with "Animal Crackers." A notice was inserted in the newspapers to the effect that envelopes filled with animal crackers would be secreted amongst the shrubbery and trees in the local park. All of the children in town were invited to participate and the one securing the most animal crackers would be awarded a football donated by the local dealer. The second highest received a month's pass to the theatre and there was a number of other awards. The children were cautioned against opening the envelopes. When they were brought to the theatre and counted they were distributed evenly, thus giving Haley an excellent break along the good-will angle, and also showing that he knows his stuff. The local newspaper came through with a story on the stunt and this, too, helped to put the picture across.

Oke Eddie, when you display work like that we know that you are going to be an active member. Let's have some more.

After Trying for a Number of Months Hance Staged This

"If at first you don't succeed, try, try again," was what they used to tell us when we went to school. Monte Hance, manager of the Saenger Theatre in Biloxi, Miss., seems to have remembered it, for after a lot of trying to secure a couple for a stage wedding, work which was started in Hattiesburg and finally ended in success in Biloxi, he accomplished his objective.

He had been trying since last March, while in Hattiesburg, to secure a couple who would agree to marry on the stage. He had things pretty well sewed up in Hattiesburg when he was transferred to Biloxi. This was somewhat disappointing but he kept on, determined to have that stage wedding if it took him a few thousand years. On his arrival in Biloxi in May he remarked, in one of the weekly letters that he sends out, that he would like to have a couple married on the stage. He expressed the opinion that he thought he could run it on August 15th. He missed out by three days. The wedding was held on the 18th.

But we are getting way ahead of the story. Hance started his quest for the couple by calling a meeting of the theatre personnel and asking them to be on the look-out for prospects. A want-ad was inserted in the paper advertising for a couple who would be married on the stage. The confidence of a lady running the "Advice to the Lovelorn" department was next gained, and a letter submitted to her in which the writer confided that she would like to be married in a novel way where all their friends could see them. The letter was published in the paper and several days later Hance sent in an answer stating that a wedding on the stage of the theatre would be the proper way. This letter, too, was printed.

A favorable break in the campaign was hit upon when a certain gentleman, still unknown to Hance, advertised for a wife. The newspaper played this up, and Hance sent in an answer purported to come from a woman who expressed the desire to be married on the Saenger stage. The newspaper grabbed the fictitious letter and gave it a big display.

So the months rolled by, and still no couple in sight. In the latter part of July, another meeting of the service staff was called and they were again requested—this time urgently—to scout around and see if they couldn't get a lead on a couple.

Finally he got a break. A man came into the office and announced that he and his bride would be married on the stage. Hance almost hit his head on the ceiling jumping for joy. Then he set out to put the wedding across. Everything and everybody in sight was tied up. There were gifts of an opening account at the bank, bridal dress and veil, bride's slippers, flowers and bouquets, groom's evening clothes, wedding ring, the bridal suite at the local hotel, haircut for the groom and facial and permanent for the bride, 3 month's subscription to the daily paper, floor lamp and baby carriage, wedding cake, ice cream, wedding supper, 50 piece dinner set, complete shower bath installed, and many other articles.

REMEMBER—FOOTBALL—!

This is about the third time we are calling attention to the fact that during the football season you can do many things to boost business, tying right in with the popular sport.

In response to many requests we have forwarded the details of how other showmen have successfully engineered this type of stunt in the past few years, but it should be sufficient to know that an invite to the entire local team, together with their coaches, trainers, etc., ought to mean something in your theatre. If the school has a band, O. K. Bring them into the party, too. They'll liven things up with a parade to the theatre and then play some of the popular school songs before the team is presented on the stage.

Get busy right now and plan some sort of a celebration for your team. Print their line-ups, the schedules, and get banners around the home field. Enough angles here to make it mighty profitable for every one concerned.

Hance did the job up fine and received reams of publicity for his house. Each of the merchants displayed his gift or gifts in the window; a display was placed in the theatre foyer; the merchants inserted co-operative ads in the local paper and plenty of stories and pictures came along.

The stage setting was a knockout, and we are unable to show it all to you in the photo we are reproducing. The photo was taken the morning after the wedding. Only a part of the setting is visible. The photo had to be taken this way to eliminate the cost of stage hands. At the real wedding the stage was deep, the screen being flown. The town had never seen so fine an affair and they didn't hesitate to tell Hance about it. And by the way, Monte, like a real showman, declares that he shouldn't be given all of the credit. He wants to hand some of it to the employees who contributed their services, and a lot to his assistant George Pollitz who helped him make it a success. Oke Monte, there are the credits; but just the same you deserve plenty.

Collegiate Flivver Was a Ballyhoo That Clicked for Hecht

A couple of stunts that netted him some publicity and good-will for his house were successfully executed by Elmer Hecht when he played "Sunny Skies" at the Isis Theatre in Pensacola, Fla., by the use of an ancient flivver and a tie-up with a cooking school.

The flivver was of 1924 vintage and was completely painted white and covered with numerous collegiate wisecracks as well as the title of picture, name of theatre and play dates. Just above the back of the front seat an opened umbrella was placed on which was painted the title of picture and name of theatre. Four boys drove the thing through the residential and business district of the town while one of the boys announced the title of picture, theatre and play dates through a megaphone. At night the car was parked in front of the theatre. The ballyhoo caused much atention and received more comments than forthcoming in a long time.

Hecht also tied up with a local cooking school in which two guest tickets were offered as an attendance prize. In return for this, the name and play date of the current attraction was announced before the body of cooking school members, which totaled about 600. The school also mentioned in their newspaper ads that "Sunny Skies" was playing at the Isis and gave play dates.

These two angles enabled him to turn in a few dollars more than were expected. And when that's done, it turns the trick, doesn't it, Elmer? And, by the way, we haven't a photo of you. What do you say about remedying the deficit?

EXPLOITING IN ENGLAND!

By ROBB LAWSON

"Exploiting screen entertainment effectively calls for an insight into English psychology."

The above comment from Robb Lawson, publicity director for the United Artists' Film House in Wardour Street, London, England, can be best explained by reading the English showman's signed article, reprinted below, in which he sums up the show situation in England from the exploitation and publicity angle.

Mr. Lawson has long been active in theatrical affairs on the other side, and his observations are made after years of careful study, in which he passes along not only his own opinions but those of his contemporaries as well.

"The screen is peopled by such characters as were never seen, conversing in a language that was never heard, upon topics which never arise in the commerce of mankind."

To adapt Dr. Johnson's phrase that is still the official, class and literary attitude of snobbery towards the cinema in Great Britain. Yet we serve 20 million people weekly with screen entertainment!

To exploit that form of entertainment effectively calls for an insight into English psychology. For your Britisher is a pantechnicon-load full of prejudices that must be respected. To the showman the solution is simply to vend the sweets in the proper wrapping paper—in the classic phrase, "feed them with food convenient for them."

Just how the English scene differs from the American can be explained by one incident. A few years ago the Dramatic Critics Circle at one of their discussion dinners chose the screen for its whipping post. Only one member—the writer—could say anything in its favor. Today, five well-known dramatic critics who were there find it is part of their duty to write about films in the London dailies, and there is now a film section of the Critics Circle, with ten members.

As to the English picturegoer today, he is captiously critical. Largely so, I think, because of the superior manner adopted by the press towards films. Editors have not yet taken the screen seriously enough, and their remarks are dictated by, I would say, flaming ignorance.

Two editors of London dailies admit they never see pictures, and I quite believe it, judging by their attitude towards the screen.

The mind of the English public is devastatingly skeptical towards film news. Stories about colossal salaries of stars, etc., hinder rather than help. The yarn served up with sauce piquante has a better chance of seeing print.

The same conditions prevail with provincial journals. There is scarcely one newspaper which employs a full-time film correspondent. A reporter is deputed to cover the cinema showings on Monday openings and his usual method is to write up twelve to forty lines upon the picture, matter for which is derived from an exploitation sheet. There are exceptions in the key cities, of course, but the press attitude towards pictures generally is dictated by the brutal question, "How much are they going to spend in advertising?"—a question that never arises with stage shows.

The publicity man has got to ferret out the correspondents who will be useful in the dissemination of news. Among these are free lances who specialize in film gossip, and these have to be encouraged. One phase in the art of preparation or advance work, is to forestall any angle of criticism that may be unfavorable. An example occurs in the case of "Villon," a stormy subject for critics. This was forestalled by sending out an article in advance stating exactly what was known historically of his life and work. The result was that the critics' expected strictures on that angle were effectively stilled.

There are six trade papers, but only three fan journals, two weeklies and a monthly. There is also a film paper for boys and one for girls. Advance production publicity presents difficulties. A goodly section of the London dailies and Sunday weeklies are open for news stories, but film news comes last in the list of editorial news values. For the ordinary advance news about stars or productions, there is little demand. As to the fate of screen pars., in some editorial offices "the W. P. B. is King." (W. P. B., expect you know, is "waste paper basket.") Yet London stage gossip is always accorded plenty of space, despite the fact that picture theatres spent ninety times the amount in newspaper display advertising that theatres do.

Working "ballyhoos," stunts and street parades in London is anathema to the police. But it can be done! The sad part to a publicity seeker is that when you attend the police court the magistrate usually asks the press men not to publicize proceedings in their reports. In that way you lose your anticipated press publicity. For West End shows catering for high-priced seats ($2 top), it is advisable to avoid ballyhoos, as snobbish prospects are choked off by what they term cheap publicity. In the provincial cities this does not apply, the provincial has not yet lost his sense of curiosity nor his appetite for street shows.

As regards "musicals," the gramophone record makers and song publishers always give 100% co-operation for window display tie-ups throughout the United Kingdom. For merchant shop window displays, it is not quite so easy, but a persuasive and ingenious exploiteer can always overcome prejudices. Woolworth's shops are specially helpful with displays of their 6d edition of film novels.

Outdoor stunts sometimes lead to trouble with local police, but there is generally a way round to secure kindly co-operation.

Summed up, it is the fascination of overcoming editorial barriers, art editors' predilections for British products, and the prejudices of the old-time exhibitors against exploitation, that make the British publicity man's life a splendid adventure.

Circuit Houses Plug Shorts and Discover They Are Valuable

We have consistently stressed the fact that a very valuable form of film to plug is the short subject. We have endeavored to show why, and we were gratified to find out that our arguments were backed up by progressive showmen throughout the country, in the form of a mass of material, in response to our hurry call for anything showing the selling of shorts.

In Brooklyn, N. Y., the Century Circuit, an up-to-the-minute chain of theatres, headed by A. H. Schwartz, well-known theatre man in the East, has instituted a regular policy of plugging all shorts of especial merit in each of the circuit's houses. In the photo we are showing you can get an idea of what one enterprising manager of the circuit thought of "Si, Si, Senor," a hilarious comedy just released.

It is not only on the marquee, though, that the shorts are plugged. You will find many managers on this circuit tying up windows and working gags and street stunts to put them across. No matter what the type of the short, comedy or drama, they have yet to meet with bum business in plugging them. At times a short has saved the entire show.

How are you handling your one and two reelers? Do you put them on as just "fillers"? Or do you try and get more than your money's worth out of them—a thing that may be easily done?

Whitbeck says:

"The Round Table is progressive . . . in editorial and the doctrine they preach. They encourage you to get out of the rut of old-fashioned sameness and repetition and then . . . what is still better . . . they show you how to do it . . . by story and illustration."

And Whitbeck knows!

Good-Will Getting Is a Bright Spot In Peterson's Work

With an eye to future tie-ups, Ray N. Peterson, manager of the Publix-Strand Theatre, Gulfport, Miss., pulled a good-will stunt on last day of showing of "Song o' My Heart" that will undoubtedly prove of value in the months to come.

Thursday noon, on last day of picture, there was a luncheon at the high school which was attended by the members of the school board, the city commissioners, officers of the Parents-Teachers' Ass'n, officials of the Chamber of Commerce as well as the superintendent of schools and all city school teachers.

The purpose of this luncheon was a general meeting for discussion and get-together prior to the opening of the city schools. Peterson took this opportunity to have announced to this group at the luncheon that they were all invited to attend the Strand Theatre to hear John McCormack—knowing that they would particularly enjoy a picture of this type.

Peterson's purpose in doing this was to get the theatre in the minds of the school teachers and to form a spirit of good-will at the start of school in order to be in a position to ask favors during the coming school year and to be able to get co-operation for future advertising and exploitation through classroom medium as well as a foundation for help in forming a Kids' Booster Club in the near future.

The superintendent of schools and the principal personally called on Peterson to thank him for the courtesy extended to their faculty and expressed their desire to fully co-operate at any time in exploiting and advertising the theatre programs. The president of the Chamber of Commerce also expressed his appreciation for making the afternoon program for the teachers enjoyable.

In this way, Peterson is setting himself in solid with the town. And the results are more than ever going to boost the attendance at the local house.

Harry Rice Grabbed Off Publicity on Initial Visit to Town

From the time he started at the new Paramount Theatre in Monroe, La., up till the present, Harry Rice, manager of the house, has been securing plenty of publicity for the theatre.

The arrival of a new manager and the change of name of theatre gave the newspapers something to write about—and Rice gave them all the information desired as he figured it was good advertising for the theatre.

Within the short span of several weeks, Harry engineered a 'Most popular Business Girls' Contest," "Invitations to Visitors" and a "Cooking School" tie-up in addition to articles about the manager himself.

Through the aid of one of the newspapers the "Most Popular Business Girl Contest" gave the theatre lots of publicity at very small cost; the merchants supplying the gifts and helping to defray the expenses of the winner to Hollywood and return.

Through the columns of another newspaper, Rice issued invitations to visitors. If there was a visitor in town, the friends of that visitor or visitors was to get in touch with the newspaper, who in turn would issue them a printed invitation; the invitation being good for any show at any time convenient to the visitor. This stunt resulted in lots of favorable comments for the theatre.

The theatre derived more publicity on a cooking school tie-up which was sponsored by one of the local papers. This paper devoted a full page in announcing the school to be held mornings at the Paramount as well as contributing publicity during the four days the school was in session.

One of the newspaper scribes concocted a story about Harry's affiliation with the local baseball league several years ago, and that they were glad to have him in Monroe instead of a neighboring town. They also mentioned in this story that he was the new manager of the Paramount and the people could look for great things from him.

Another story was that Rice contemplated having amateur programs one night a week at the theatre. A photo of the manager accompanied this story. And still another story about the manager purported to give his biography since entering the show business from the time he managed a show boat on the muddy Mississippi up to the present time.

These many items of publicity have helped to make people think in terms of Harry Rice and especially the new Paramount Theatre. And if the box-office receipts are any criterion, then Harry has made good already.

These publicity stories served to cement Harry's introduction to the town; but we think that if he wants to cement his "intro" into the Club, a photograph and a story about his career in show business would be most appropriate.

POLICE PUPS!

A corking kiddie gag that always brings results is the passing out of some Police Pups (pedigreed or otherwise), in conjunction with some special kids' matinee.

For complete details, use your own imagination, but in doing so surround the angle with enough interest to make the youngsters keen for the pups. It's really a worth-while idea, so think it over. If you engineer it successfully you can repay us for the suggestion by sending us all the dope on how you handled it.

IS IT A DEAL?

Wright at Toledo!

The front page of the Akron (Ohio) Beacon-Journal carried a notice of Dick Wright's departure from the management of the Strand Theatre, so he must have been popular.

Dick is going to handle a duo of R.K.O. houses in Toledo, and with a background such as he has, he should make an excellent job of it. We want to wish him a lot of luck and we are sure that he will continue the excellent work and activities which have characterized his past performances in the field and on the Club pages. Good luck, Dick!

Diving Outfit in Lobby Helped to Plug Beck's Show

Through a tie-up with a local telegraph company, Edward Beck, manager of the Georgia Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., turned in a very creditable week, from a box-office as well as publicity standpoint, when he played "The Sea God" recently.

Postal installed a receiving set in the lobby. On opening day of picture telegrams were being received from stars and executives in Hollywood and New York complimenting the theatre upon having secured "The Sea God" for the first appearance in Atlanta.

From Tuesday on, however, Beck had telegrams come in over the Postal from the newspaper critics and various prominent citizens—commenting upon the show. As the telegrams came in, they were posted on a display board, which was captioned, "What Atlanta Is Saying About THE SEA GOD and the Only Vaudeville Show in Atlanta via Postal Telegraph."

Beck also rigged up a telegraph operator's key which was concealed in an unused box office. This key was connected to a spark intensifier over the box office and for four hours a day a school boy was kept busy sending in Morse code—the same messages being received in the lobby. The noise of the spark intensifier attracted lots of attention.

In addition to posting telegrams on the board, Beck also got out a message of about 30 words addressed to "Mr. or Mrs. Atlanta Theatregoer." These were distributed on the sidewalk in front of the theatre very carefully to the extent of about 50 a day.

A complete diving suit was placed on display in the lobby with a card attached reading, "This suit worn by Richard Arlen in THE SEA GOD." The suit was stuffed with newspapers so that it was filled out—and then it was suspended from a beam in the lobby. This display attracted a tremendous amount of interest from passersby and proved even more interesting to patrons after they had viewed the picture.

We understand that Mr. Beck has been turning out some good work around his district and we hope that he is going to be represented on our pages often, particularly so since his fellow showmen in the South are rated among the active.

Identification Idea Helped Mitchell to Put His Show Across

In order to introduce his patrons to something novel in the form of an exploitation stunt, J. L. Mitchell, manager of the Genessee Theatre in Waukegan, Ill., tied up with the local newspaper and arranged to run a photo identification contest on "The Big House" in which free tickets were given to the contestants guessing correctly the identities of the pictured players.

Photographs showing a portion of the faces of each member of the cast were published in the paper on consecutive days, and in connection with them, Mitchell also ran a description given in the manner of those found on reward notices for escaped convicts. The stunt proved to be a very successful one and Mitchell will probably use it again, as its simplicity insures its clicking.

Thanks, "J. L.," for letting us in on what you are doing, and incidentally, we haven't a photo of you. How about one?

J. Real Neth Is An Active Showman Says Jean La Roe

It is Miss Jean LaRoe herself, the well known feminine press agent for the J. Real Neth houses in Columbus, O., who passes the palm to her boss, Mr. Neth, and the staff artists, M. F. Bragdon, who arranged the ad we are showing in the cut.

Knowing that a certain shot in the film "Dancing Sweeties" would afford him a tie-up with the makers of a well known drink, Neth decided to tie up the film when it played at the Grand Theatre. The bottling company paid for the entire ad, which ran a half of a page, and we think you'll agree with us that its copy is effectively worded.

Here's a situation where the owner of the circuit proves he is right there when it comes to displaying showmanship. Miss La Roe tells us that she ought to feel a bit jealous, but then, she explains that Mr. Neth is one of the most capable showmen the city has ever seen, and in this manner she manages to excuse herself, and at the same time she pays her boss a tribute that he deserves, and the reason we know that he does is because we have been in touch with things theatrical long enough to know what is going on in Columbus and every other city in the country.

We have a hunch that Miss La Roe is going to follow this up with some other angles, that will more than make up for the march that was stolen on her. However, since every one in the Neth organization is working for the theatre and not for personal glory, it makes things all right. Are we right on that point, Miss La Roe?

The midget cuts and studio mats blend in well with the artist's drawing and this helps keep the eye focused on the ad to the extent on seeing every point.

We were glad to pass this along to our other members and readers for two reasons. First: it shows how good the Beth ad artist is, and second: it proves again how angle for free space can be engineered.

Potato Matinees Are Corking Thanksgiving Gag

Are you planning a potato matinee for the week or two weeks before Thanksgiving?

It's one of the best ways to grab off a flock of good-will and publicity for your house. It is a certainty that the local paper will get solidly behind you. Announce through their columns and your screen and house organ that on a certain day, all kids bringing in a bag of potatoes or a can of fruit, beans, etc., will be admitted free to the theatre.

Stack the goods up in the lobby of your house. Let the residents of your town know that the goods will be donated to the Salvation Army, or local charity. Take a picture of the stuff you receive and grab off some additional space in the local newspaper.

The "potato" matinee is a natural for Thanksgiving. There are plenty of ways in which you can benefit your house, as well as yourself and others by working like a Trojan to put a stunt of this sort across. It is not alone from a publicity standpoint that you should attack it. You're a showman, a credit to your community, and anything you can do to relieve an unfortunate situation in your town will more than be appreciated. Oke.

Walter McDowell of Louisville, Ky., Joins Round Table Club

From down in Louisville, Ky., we recruit another member in the person of Walter D. McDowell, of the State Theatre, the United Artists and Loew house.

During his many years in the show game, McDowell has turned out some corking showmanship, accounts of which have been frequently seen in trade publications and newspapers throughout the country. He is very active at his house, being one of the real vets in show experience.

As we list this city as being pretty close to 100% Round Table, we are under the impression that Walter will have some pretty stiff competition if he tries to lead the field. However, Walter, it is up to you. If you want to take a crack at running ahead of the pack, you know your ability. Let's have a photo of yourself when you send in your initial contribution so that we can give you a regular introduction on the Club pages.

Man Painted Sign In Full View of Patrons of Plaza

A lobby stunt that derived an unusual amount of publicity for "Animal Crackers" when it played the Plaza Theatre, Asheville, N. C., was the stunt that F. LaBar, Jr., used by having his house artist paint a coming sign in full view of the patrons.

The artist worked in the lobby at different hours of the day on a special banner which was to cover the entire electric sign. Neatly lettered cards nearby the artist informed the patrons that he was working on a special sign for "Animal Crackers" —one of the laugh hits of the season and coming to the Plaza the following week.

The special sign made by the artist covered the entire electric sign with the exception of the name "Plaza" and electric border. The banner contained cut-out heads of the four Marx brothers, their names, title of picture and catchlines pertaining to the picture. The sign was illuminated by four 1,000-watt lights which made an excellent attention-getter.

As you all know, LaBar turns out some fine displays at his house, and it was only recently that we showed you the work he created for "Anybody's War" and "The Silent Enemy," so you know what to expect from him in the future. Right?

Oscar Offers Us a Couple; Including a Knockout Herald

Down in Athens, Alabama, the natives have been seeing plenty of showmanship for the past couple of seasons or so and the reason for it has been that Earle Oscar, manager of the Ritz Theatre doesn't let up on the speedy pace he sets when he wants to sell the town on each and every show that he plays at the house.

As usual, Earle hands us a bunch of quantity gags with the quality mixed in with them. Take the account of his campaign for "Dynamite" when he played the picture not so long ago. Small red cards measuring about two inches all around, carrying copy, "A Careless Driver Plays With 'Dynamite'," were placed on every car in the vicinity of Athens. Another stunt was that of securing a great many cardboard boxes, labeling them "Dynamite" and throwing them about the streets. This stunt, as would be expected, caused plenty of excitement, until the persons got near enough to distinguish the name of the theatre and the fact that "Dynamite," in this case, was a picture title and not an explosive.

We are showing a cut of the novel heralds Oscar uses. These heralds measure three by two inches, printed in black on common stock paper. Look them over. They go great in Oscar's town and they should probably do something for you, too. If you can use them, hop to it. They are inexpensive and will give you an opportunity for displaying ingenuity in make-up.

A gag that went over well on "Hell's Heros" was the distribution of heralds, in the form of pay envelopes, that contained appropriate copy on front, and inside, a couple of spoonsfull of sand. The natives liked the stunt very much. Another stunt, on the same film, that went over well was a street ballyhoo. Three men, dressed like desperadoes, rode horseback about the town. Signs on their backs plugged the film, and the effectiveness of the stunt may be seen in the photo we are showing. The other photo shows you what Oscar does along the lines of display work.

He's certainly a busy showman, isn't he? Though he is not located in a big city, the work he turns out is certainly big time showmanship and we feel sure that he had made the theatre one of the community assets. This is the way it should be and we are glad to see that Oscar is right on tap. Let's hear some more from you, Earle.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Meet Fred Polacek Johnson's Side Kick At the Robb Houses

Here he is—Fred Polacek, himself. As you know, Fred is the assistant manager of the R & R Theatres in Big Spring, Texas. He is the sidekick of Heinie Johnson, the house artist whose work has appeared many times on our pages. Since he has been at the house, Fred, who is considered pretty good at exploitation has been turning out some fine stuff.

Not so long ago we showed you the miniature aeroplane that he doped out to plug "The Dawn Patrol" when the film played the local houses, and we are sure you will agree that he knows his stuff. Fred tells us that he and Heinie have some good work in store for us on their campaigns for the new season and that the team is going to try and put in as many novel angles as they can dope out.

They have a rather neat system down in Big Springs for selling shows. Robb, the part owner and manager of the chain, dopes out the campaigns, hands them over to Johnson and Polacek and they add whatever they can dope out, meanwhile carrying out to the letter, the directions that Robb has given them. In this manner they are able to do work that means something. Welcome into the Club, Fred, and remember we want to hear plenty from your district.

E. Street Strung Banner in Main Section of Town

He sold the police on the idea of careful driving and thus was able to put up three banners across the street in different locations; the banners reading, "MANSLAUGHTER may be the charge if you do not DRIVE CAREFULLY." There was no mention of theatre and play dates or any intimation that "Manslaughter" was a picture, but when the newspaper ads broke, everybody was rather anxious to see the picture.

Street also arranged to have cardboard signs placed on light and telephone poles as well as traffic signs. Copy on these signs read: "Do You Realize it may mean a conviction of MANSLAUGHTER if you run down a person through reckless driving? DRIVE CAREFULLY is a city ordinance requirement."

To top off his campaign with another medium that received lots of comment was the lobby display. In the lobby was a sport roadster on which was a banner reading: "A Woman Was Driving This Car," etc. Alongside of the car was a motorcycle, lying on its side with a dummy policeman standing near by.

How Big Is Great?

Words never used in show business:

Gigantic, Colossal, Tremendous, Massive, Magnificent, Titanic, Startling, Momentous, Pretentious, Mammoth, Terrific, Stupendous, Imposing, Staggering, Enormous, De Luxe, Immense, Prodigious, Superb. . . .

Now you tell one!

That is effective exploitation. He covered every angle thoroughly, making certain that his newspaper ads broke at the right time, as well as his announcements, in the theatre, of the picture. Every stunt used on the picture clicked for him. We are glad to note that he is continuing the live-wire work that has marked his efforts down at the Carolina, and we hope to hear from him again. And send your photo in with your contribution, Eugene.

Heap Big Indian Chief Was Invited To Witness Film

Playing up a local interest angle was one of the ways that enabled C. J. Russell, Jr., manager of the Opera House in Bangor, Maine, to get in a newspaper plug and a picture on his current show, "Silent Enemy" which resulted in big returns for his efforts.

The local interest was due to the fact that the leading lady in the film had come from the Indian reservation just 12 miles distant from the theatre.

Russell visited the big chief at the reservation and got him to send down a representative group to attend the first night's showing of the picture.

Both local papers played up the local interest angle in the picture in addition to running photo of the leading lady. The picture got an excellent opening and held up well throughout its entire run.

Mr. Russell has been displaying some fine showmanship in his town, and while this is only his first contribution we have an idea that he is going to be represented often on our pages. And when you send in your next contribution, "C. J.," include your photo and some dope on yourself.

Smart Shot Stunts Swiftly; Starting Season Show Selling

Here's a few gags that were used recently by Roy L. Smart, manager of the Broadhurst Theatre in High Point, N. C., to sell the current attraction. We are passing them along in the event that you may be able to find a spot for them in your own show selling.

A neat looking card containing institutional copy was mailed to school teachers. Copy on these cards varied from the usual copy sent to teachers in view of the fact that most of them were not new and a large number of them have been in the city all summer.

"Theatre News," an irregular publication containing four pages and about 7½ by 5 inches in size was made possible through the co-operation of a store presenting a fashion show. The News contained the kind of news one would expect in a publication of its kind—all the news about the theatre, the forthcoming pictures, etc., as well as news about the fashion show. The store stamped and addressed them at their expense to a mailing list of nearly 2,000.

Another unique looking folder was made up with the front page headed, "Instructions for Rear Seat Drivers," etc. Pages 2 and 3 contained in large type—SHUT UP!—and the back page was devoted to listing the coming attractions at the Broadhurst.

The novelties went over very well, especially the Rear Seat Driver gag, which found its way into the homes of nearly every resident of High Point. As Roy is always pulling stunts of this sort, he being active in his town—we will probably have some more of them to pass along in the near future.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Assistant Managers as Members!

In order that we may dispel a wrong impression, we want all assistant theatre managers to know they are eligible for membership in the Round Table Club, PROVIDING their manager certifies as to the position they hold.

Many assistant managers have important duties in their respective theatres, such as publicity and exploitation directors, treasurers, etc. We therefore feel that their activities are many times just as important to the Club pages as the managers.

The reasons we make this one provision is that it is difficult for us to know whether an applicant who calls himself an assistant manager is really just that. We can check up on the managers but the managers must help us check up on the assistants and we would rather they expressed their willingness before their assistants joined the Club.

M. R. T. C.

It Was "All Wet" But Sonosky's Gag Was Winning One

Sonosky's stunt was "all wet," but this time "all wet" didn't mean what the showman equivalent is supposed to mean. The gag pulled by "A. J." who is the manager of the Riviera Theatre in St. Paul, Minn., was one in which he used a display of fish to sell "The Sea Bat."

The advance lobby display consisted of a fish tank 22 inches wide by 36 inches in height and 3½ inches in length, with a special undersea background painted in. This tank was especially made to fit a gold frame with a special compo board cut-out mask to fit over. Fish were obtained from the local fish hatchery and also from a fish store. The display attracted lots of attention from patrons leaving the theatre.

During the week of run of picture, a special front was built —the tank mentioned above was moved outside and an additional tank was also set up outside; each with various types of gold fish and small game fish. This display created tremendous interest and stopped practically every passerby.

The "young aquarium" stunt worked so well that Sonosky intends using it again at some future date, and he is passing it along now in the event that any of his fellow members may care to use it in conjunction with a current or coming picture. Thanks, "A. J., let's have some more of them.

Presentation Angle One of the Gags Weaver Made Use Of

No matter what picture he plays at his house, it is a sure thing that L. P. Weaver, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Phoenix, Arizona, is going to do something to sell it. And it generally happens that the work he puts into it was just the necessary thing.

When he booked "All Quiet," he achieved an effect with his foyer display that did plenty towards putting the film over when the play date rolled around. In the foyer of the theatre, on each side of the stairway leading to the balcony he built a parapet composed of sand-filled cement sacks, procured from a local dealer, to create the illusion of a trench. A number of war trophies, of especial interest, were promoted from the American Legion Post and placed so as to give atmosphere, with the sacks lying so that the protruding muzzles of machine guns recruited could be seen. Special lighting effects were used and they lent a powerful tone to the display. In addition to this advance plug, the service staff wore silk badges ten days prior to the opening, attracting, as a result, a great deal of attention and curious comment from the patrons. The angles proved very valuable and their success was seen in the large crowds attending the showing of the picture.

A presentation slant that went over excellently on the war picture was that of sounding a bugle call, on the non-syc, with the title curtain closed while the picture was starting. At the conclusion of the bugle call, blue lights were put up and a blue effect projected, by means of gelatine, on the screen, and put out as the first shot opened. On the last scene of the picture, the blue footlights were flashed up slowly, with "Taps" being played on the non-sync, the organ joining in, playing softly. The curtain was slowly closed and the picture ended just as the bugle call faded out.

As we have said before, Weaver does something with every picture. On the "King of Jazz," he distributed special heralds in the form of card invitations informing the reader that Whiteman would be happy to entertain his friends in "Kings of Jazz." The angle, a novel one, more than clicked.

And on "Manslaughter," he achieved some fine results through a tie-up with the police department, who permitted him to place signs all over town bearing copy: "Drive Carefully—You May Be Convicted of 'Manslaughter'." The title word was printed in brilliant red ink, the rest of the card, black and white. The placards were displayed on every pole in town and at all of the busy street intersections. They attracted considerable attention and were the subject for an editorial in the newspaper. The co-operation of all the civic clubs was also secured on the picture. The week preceding the opening of the engagement, traffic policemen distributed small cards containing the same copy as the larger ones, in all of the parked automobiles on the city streets.

In conjunction with this story we are also showing a photo of a crackerjack front display turned out for "Hit the Deck." Look it over carefully and you'll pick out many helpful hints on art work. In the center doors of the theatre, Weaver placed a miniature battleship, made out of compo board, and carrying copy on the attraction. The other photo shows three clowns, their backs bannered, parading the streets of the city on the opening day of the picture. The clowns performed tricks and kidded all along the streets, with the result that plenty of attention was paid them.

So you see, Weaver is certainly one active showman, and there's no getting away from the fact that Phoenix must get its eyeful of showmanship. We are sure that we will have some more of his work to report on in the near future, because we know that he wants to let his fellow members and managers in on his work, too. Right "L. P."?

ED. MOONEY ACTIVE!

From stories drifting into Club headquarters we learn that E. J. (Ed) Mooney, manager with the C&M Amusement Company in Marietta, Ohio, is displaying some great showmanship out around his section.

He has long been an active member and Club booster and we believe that he is going to have some novel slants to pass along to the rest of the Club, setting forth his season's campaign. Let's hear what you have today, Ed.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Walter D. Fleck Moves to Grand Island, Nebraska

It looks as though Grand Island, Nebraska is now 100% Round Table, especially since Walter D. Fleck, former manager of the Strand at Waterloo, Ia., is now the new manager of the Island Theatre.

The house, directly after Brown came to town, was closed for re-decoration and repairs. A special newspaper campaign and other showman stunts were put on and the residents were informed that the theatre would open shortly for their enjoyment. With so capable a showman handling the house, it appears to us that he is going to give the town some of the showmanship he displayed while at the Strand, which, as you will recall, was right up to tap as far as showmanship goes. Incidentally, in a recent issue of the Club pages we credited another showman with a window tie-up on Jolson's "Mammy" film, and another for "Paramount on Parade." These stunts were put over by Fleck and we'd like you to know it, so that he can receive the proper recognition.

Okay Walter, we are glad to see that you are all set and raring to go at your new house. We want to wish you continued success and we know that you will keep us posted on what you are going to do along present and future lines.

Coiffure Show Is Perrin's Latest to His Fellow Showmen

Give a hand to C. T. Perrin, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Cheyenne, Wyo., for the marvelous way in which he introduced the patrons of his house to a hair-style show, which, if you will recall, is something that has been going over great, a gag of similar lines having been pulled recently and successfully by Paul Short in Tampa, Fla.

Perrin's hair-style show was made possible through a tie-up with a local beauty shoppe. The beauty shop furnished 14 young ladies for models and paid for the advance trailer announcing the revue. They also ran an ad in two editions of the Tribune in conjunction with their own ads.

The show was something new and different and the ladies not only fell for it, but thought it was great stuff. The show lasted only five minutes and was very pleasing to all who saw it.

It was staged in front of the screen with the curtains parted just far enough for the models to step up into a spot that was centered in the middle of the stage. Models traveled between the curtain and the screen until they reached the spot. The spot covered them from the shoulders up so that their clothing would not detract attention from their hair.

A very beautiful color effect was thrown on the main curtains throughout the entire performance, constantly changing color. A fast dark color and design covered the screen where the curtains parted. A white spot then showed the models up to great advantage.

Music was played very low with a 33 1-3 r.p.m. record. And announcements of different styles were made by a man with a strong voice, the man not being seen by the audience.

You don't have to cut your show down to any special time limit. There are plenty of other angles that you can use in conjunction with it, if, of course, your local conditions permit. We don't know how things were with Perrin, so we can't say. But a suggestion on these shows has come to headquarters in which local beauties can also take part. Another gag is that of doing up the hair of two or three ladies in the audience. At any rate, we want to thank Perrin for passing along this angle which we are sure will meet with plenty of favor on the part of his fellow Club members. Let's have some more news about what you are doing out there in Cheyenne, "C. E.," so that we can keep posted on it.

Allen Opening Toronto Theatre!

One of the reasons why he hasn't been as active on the Club pages as usual is explained by Jack Allan of Kitchener, Ont., when he tells us that he is going to Toronto to open one of the new theatres there. We don't know how he made out, as we haven't latest reports yet, but we are sure that our Regional Chairman will more than put the house over. Give us the lown-down, Jack.

Display Board Used By Tom Olsen Was Fine Attention Draw

One of the gags that Tom Olsen used on the recent Third Anniversary celebration of the Fox Washington Theatre in Washington, D. C., was a lobby display board featuring congratulatory telegrams from the various movie stars.

The display board, quite a large one, was placed on an easel in the lobby. It was attractively painted, with an exceptional border running around it. On the center of the board was placed the plug for the anniversary and the notice that the messages were sent direct from Hollywood. Around the borders were grouped metallic cut-outs in star shape, in the center of which was placed a still of a star. Directly under the still, the telegram was placed. The board proved to be an effective medium for making them stop and look in the lobby.

Listen, Tom, we'd like to hear more about what you are doing down there in Washington. Let's have the low-down so that we can pass it along to the rest of the Club.

JUST ASK THESE SHOWMEN!

FRED S. MEYER is a showman with whom most of the Club is already acquainted. In his many years in the game, Fred has come to amass quite a reputation for himself and his work at the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee and is upholding it. Welcome into the Club, Fred, and remember we want to hear from you real often.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BERNARD BUCHHEIT manages the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Alabama. He is well versed in the show business and from the activity being displayed down here in Bolivar Hyde's district, he must be kept pretty busy. Let's have a photo and a little dope on yourself when you send us your next contribution, Bernard, so that we can give you an introduction.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK W. GOODALE is the manager of the State Theatre in White Plains, New York. In his district Mr. Goodale has been turning out some excellent work, and we are going to present some of it in future issues of the Club pages. Welcome into the Club, Frank. And let's hear from you often.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LEN GROTTE manages the Tremont Theatre in New York City. Being fairly well acquainted with Mr. Grotte's section of the town, we think it offers possibilities for some good exploitation angles, and we are sure that if that is the case Len is taking good care of them. Are we right, Len? Give us the dope on the "sitcheashun", will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. S. GOLDSMITH is the manager of the Majestic Theatre in Perth Amboy, N. J. In his town, competition to see who leads the showman list along the exploitation line is keen as there are a number of crackerjack showmen operating there. As Mr. Goldsmith is just hooking up with the Club we feel that he should send us in a photo of himself to start off his first contribution, as we hope he will be very active. Oke, "A. S."?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ANDREW J. GOLDBERG is the manager of the Hawthorne Theatre in Newark, N. J. We think that his town is pretty well sewed up as regards a 100% enrollment. And if that's the case, competition ought to be pretty keen. However, we'd like to hear what you are doing to bring them up to the box-office window, Andrew. Let's have a view of your methods and at the same time include your photo so that we can give you a regular introduction.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SYDNEY J. BURRELL is the manager of the Strand Theatre in White Plains, N. Y. He is handling the house for the Loew chain and, we understand, doing a very capable job of it. We'd like to know some more about you, Sidney. Give us the low-down on yourself and the way things are going up in your part of the state, will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NAT SALANDER manages the Hillside Theatre in Jamaica, Long Island, N. Y. He is located in an up and coming part of Long Island and it affords him ample opportunity to display the showmanship that has characterized his time in the business. We suspect that he is turning out some great stuff and we hope he is going to pass it along to us. What say, Nat?

ELMER HECHT manages the Isis Theatre, Pensacola, Fla., for the Publix outfit. Mr. Hecht is one active showman; and there are very few opportunities that he lets go by to plug his house. If you'll keep your eye on future issues we think you'll pick up some good slants on show-selling. And listen, Elmer, how about your photo?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES F. HOLSCHER is the manager of the Paramount Theatre in Monroe, La. He has been in the show game for a number of years and is well qualified for the position he now holds. From what we understand, according to the stories that reach Club headquarters, Mr. Holscher is turning out some good work. Well, Charlie, we'd like to see some of it because we are sure it will merit passing along. How about sending some in to us?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES BREWER manages the Tennessee Theatre in Knoxville, Tenn. Since he has been located at the house, Brewer has been giving some exhibitions of great showselling. As this is right in line with the rest of our Tennessee enrollment who also are very active, we look for some stiff competition to see who will reach the top rung first. Keep us posted, Charles.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

O. G. FINLEY, the manager of the Victory Theatre in Tampa, Fla., is another showman who really needs no introduction, especially since his work has been seen so frequently on our pages. But you know the rule, Mr. Finley, everyone has to go through these mystic portals at some time in his illustrious career. And now that you have passed the barriers don't let up on your activity. You can increase it though by sending us a photo of yourself.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES H. SKIFFINGTON is the manager of the Nelson Theatre in Springfield, Mass. Mr. Skiffington's work has appeared several times on our pages so a number of his fellow members are already acquainted with his work. But, unfortunately, they don't know what he looks like, and as the only remedy for this is a photo of himself, together with a little dope on his career, we hope he will oblige.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOSEPH FELDLUN is the manager of the Kameo Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y. He is the latest of the Brooklyn showmen to hop on the band wagon and shoot in a membership application to the Round Table Club, and some of our most active members are being found in that part of the country, which, in view of the fact that we are rapidly nearing the 100% enrollment mark, means something. Welcome into the Club, Joe, and let's hear from you.

THE Club is anxious to publish photographs of every member and would, therefore, appreciate receiving as many as possible for use in future issues of the Club columns. If you have not already done so, PLEASE send us your own photo at once. Thank you.

Bankers Plan to Set Off Fireworks as Negative Costs Keep on Skyrocketing

Nearing the End

Hard-boiled government authorities are about ready to tighten the strings of a net which during the past several weeks has been woven around one of the most notorious—if not the boldest—picture stock swindlers in the East.

This particular gent of ill-fame had the nerve to attempt to interest news and tradepaper men in his venture, using their editorial comment on his questionable venture to fleece big names in the business. He did succeed in duping one or two of the newshounds, and secured the patronage of several important screen luminaries who are yet unaware of the crooked deal.

Director Lick Reporters? Then Came the Dawn

Hollywood—"I can lick any newspaperman in Los Angeles," shouted Ralph Ince, director, during a little argument in a newspapermen's club. When peace had settled down gently three members of the film colony had cracked heads and the journalistic casualties numbered four black eyes and one broken nose. Final score, 5 to 3.

It started when Rex Lease, big he-man among the weepy sex, who holds a courtesy card at the club, appeared with Ince, Henry Clive, artist, and Oliver Price, oil operator, as his guests. When Lease wanted to leave, his compatriots indicated a desire to remain, but club members hinted that he take his bosom friends along. The hint brought the aforesaid challenge from Ince—and the battle was on.

Rex's friends, outnumbered 35 to 3, had little chance. Rex, who is adept at slugging women, judging from the $50 fine he paid for socking Vivian Duncan in the eye, was a calm onlooker and did not go to his friends' aid. He apparently got a huge kick out of his ringside position. But he did see his guests safely to the hospital for first aid. Police were called during the fray, but no arrests were made.

Studio Chiefs to Be Put on the Spot for Shooting Up Expenses; Nick Schenck, Rubin, Feist, Brandt and Kennedy Make Quick Exodus to West

Negative costs, ancient nemesis of the picture business, are out of bounds again. Coupled with the skyrocketing in expense seems to be a general nosedive in quality of pictures.

The bankers who make it possible for the entire industry to go 'round are of that opinion, have expressed themselves to film executives in terms far more specific than general, and the hula-baloo is creating an inside storm that threatens to raise plenty of havoc unless the producing executives on the Coast listen to the mandates of their home office executives and trim expense sheets until it hurts.

The bankers' ultimatum is understood to be the inside reason for the sudden westward trek of a number of important executives. Nicholas M. Schenck and J. Robert Rubin of M-G-M leave for Hollywood on Tuesday. Felix F. Feist, general sales manager of the company, is already on the ground.

Joe Brandt of Columbia leaves today; Hiram S. Brown and Joseph P. Kennedy tomorrow.

Schenck's trip is described as "the usual annual journey" at his office, but the purpose, dictated by those who hold the financial strings, is expected to concern itself with cost sheets. It has been reported in recent weeks that the M-G-M studio expense ledger has been running far beyond its scheduled pace.

Insofar as Columbia is concerned, the same situation prevails. Brandt and Jack Cohn are reported to have been advised by their bankers that Harry Cohn is spending too much money on pictures for value received. Columbia's new policy of bigger pictures, adopted with this season's line-up, is understood to have shot negative costs up from an average of $60,000 a picture to $125,000. Specials like "Rain or Shine," "Dirigible" cost more.

Paramount is the only organization on record, so the inside story goes, which beat the bankers to the post on the matter of costs vs. quality. An advance tip that something of import was brewing in Wall Street, it is reported, reached Adolph Zukor before the actual tip arrived. As a result, B. P. Schulberg was brought East and told that slashes will have to be made immediately. He is expected to leave for Hollywood shortly with definite instructions along these lines.

Many angles on showmanship and equipment of vital interest to all exhibitors are discussed in The Showman, beginning page 59 in this issue

Motion Picture News

Vol. XLII NEW YORK CITY, NOVEMBER 1, 1930 No. 18

PANSY SHOWMANSHIP GOES OUT OF THE PINK

THE opposition will tell you that Amos 'n' Andy are freaks, circus stuff, naturals for any box-office with or without ballyhoo, advertising, headline broadcasting.

Radio Pictures will admit that "Check and Double Check" is the freak it is claimed to be, but the record tells you that it was two-fisted, all-embracing and infinitely smart merchandising in the trade, and without, that went miles to make exhibitors and their public conscious of the entertainment festival about to be dumped in their laps.

Overboard with the Routine

HERE was a real commodity to sell. The radio team, reaching into many thousands of homes six nights a week, was almost its own guarantee that an audience was ready-made and waiting to see what the comics looked like on the screen. All this, RKO knew.

It would have been easy to sit back, do the perfunctory things in the perfunctory industry-fooled fashion. But the company of the Titans sensed its opportunity and turned smart enough to launch something that proves its right to use that self-selected monicker.

Adjectives Do A War Dance

IT was circus-ey, it was hard-hitting, it tossed superlatives about in bewildering and, often, amazing fashion, but Hy Daab, whose job it was, made the trade understand that the air was thick with something and that something was Amos 'n' Andy. He planted his advertising campaign where such campaigns belong—no matter how you look at it—in the industry's trade papers, because he had the fine showmanship sense to understand that his spiel must get across to the men of the theatre before he could enthuse them into the job of putting the picture across with the public.

He upset precedent because he smashed his message across week in and week out. Some of his copy might have made the Harbords and the Sarnoffs, perhaps the Browns, wince, but what it may have lacked in restraint it whammed across in effectiveness.

The Grand Push Crashes Through

THEN Joe Schnitzer pulled the day and date stunt and Daab followed in with his newspaper splash: single pages and double trucks, many in color, in eighty-nine newspapers in fifty cities and in thirty states at a cost of only $75,000.

The intensity of the grand push became contagious. Elsewhere in this edition today you may read for yourself what Amos 'n' Andy are doing for some of the country's biggest theatres.

The Lesson of the Upset

THE personalities, of course, cannot be discounted. Nor the entertainment characteristics of the picture. But what Daab has done with Amos 'n' Andy lends itself to a Lloyd, a Chaplin, a "Journey's End," a "Big Trail" and all other big-time attractions that stride the boards.

Merchandising—intelligent, emotional, sweeping, colorful, specialized—merchandising, in the trade and without, but in the trade always, has turned the trick.

Raskob and Fox and Smith and Hughes And Franklin and Schenck—What Now?

Economy

Along with the rigid economy program which has resulted in ouster of a number of employes, restrictions on stationery and office supplies, even extending into the booths of company theatres where costs have been shaved a few dollars weekly, Paramount Publix has cut down publication of Publix Opinion to twice monthly. It formerly was a weekly. Its editor, Ben Serkowich, is resigning Nov. 1.

Paramount Staffs In Portland and Seattle Canned

Seattle—Paramount has served notice on its employes at its theatres here and at Portland that their services are being dispensed with. The Portland ouster is effective Nov. 1, while the local edict is effective Nov. 7.

Speculation as to whether the theatres are to be operated by Fox West Coast Theatres has prompted denials. The visit here of Robert Bender, personal representative of Oscar Oldknow, executive vice-president of the Fox circuit, has renewed the report that Fox would take over the theatres, as first reported by Motion Picture News. Changes in the personnel of the houses are anticipated.

Robert Blair, Pacific Northwest division manager of Publix theatres, says the notice to employes is more or less of a formality to be complied with in connection with the abandonment of Seattle and Portland as route points for the Publix stage shows that have been showing here for the last two or three months. After the dates specified, it is stated, the houses will revert to their former policies of feature pictures and orchestra specialties, together with short subjects of a revue nature.

Warners, F. N. May Add Five Each to '30-'31 List

Warners and First National may step up their current programs from 35 to 40 pictures, an addition of five features on each list.

The contemplated move is predicated on the company's belief that the additional groups can be handled without difficulty by the sales force. No decision, however, has been reached. Each studio has about seven more to go to round out the '30-'31 schedules.

Lloyd in New York

Harold Lloyd arrived in New York from the Coast Thursday to attend premiere of "Feet First" at the Rialto.

They're All in This Week's Merger Stew; Dally with Dizzy Deals

The merger stew boiled over this week. After clouds of steam had cleared away sufficiently to permit a check on the casualties, the picture that unfolded itself had John J. Raskob, William Fox, Harold B. Franklin, Alfred E. Smith, who once ran for president of the United States, lined up on the same side of the fence, with Joe Schenck and Howard Hughes bringing up the rear.

Reports from Hollywood indicate that Franklin may shortly be identified with Raskob in the latter's further participation in motion pictures. New York reports Smith and Fox have been indulging in plenty of conferencing of late, while the Smith association with Raskob has, of course, been known and recognized as a close one since the former governor of New York ran for the presidency on the Democratic ticket.

Raskob owns a heavy block of Warner stock. Fox is reported to have been buying in, although at the Warner offices reports that Fox will shortly figure in the affairs of that organization are laughed at, and not so politely at that.

Over at Fox Film whenever mention is made that William F. may again secure control of the companies he formerly headed, via finances secured from Raskob and the latter's banking affiliations, executives are inclined to get mad. But that story, too, refuses to down.

More Mystery

The missing link that connects these facts with Warners and Fox Film is a reported, but impossible-to-confirm yarn that if the move goes through, Warners, Fox and Loew's will be banded together under one control.

Franklin enters the picture with plans to create a new chain on the West Coast with extensions throughout the country until it assumes national proportions. While Franklin is not talking except to indicate that something big is on the way, his brother, J. J., admitted to a Motion Picture News reporter in Hollywood this week that it was not at all improbable that his brother would be finally aligned with Bill Fox and Raskob.

Raskob Serene

Rumblings that Raskob is dissatisfied with his Warner affiliation are countered in the latter's offices with the statement that an offer to join the company directorate had been turned down, with Raskob reputedly expressing full satisfaction in the management as it now stands.

Schenck and Hughes have been identified with the Franklins' theatre move, but Hughes stated definitely on the Coast earlier in the week that he was not "at this time" interested in the plans of the former head of Fox West Coast Theatres.

Architecture On the Pan

Authenticity of present-day "Moorish" architecture is more or less a lot of bunk, in the opinion of Theodore Komisarjevsky, formerly director of the Moscow Art Theatre, and now one of London's foremost stage producers, who makes startling disclosures in tracing the history of "Moorish" and "Spanish" motifs in THE SHOWMAN, which appears in this week's issue commencing on page 59.

What Did Hughes Get from Joe for His $5,000,000?

Hollywood—Howard Hughes has invested about $5,000,000 in Art Cinema and, while that is a lot of money, the producer of "Hell's Angels" doesn't yet know definitely what he has bought. The explanation offered hinges around the mass of details yet to be worked out in connection with the buy.

Hughes does, however, become Joe Schenck's partner in all of the pictures Art Cinema may finance. They will work hand in hand and Hughes will have equal say with Schenck as to what shall or shall not be produced.

When "Reaching for the Moon," in which Doug Fairbanks and Bebe Daniels will appear, is finished and when Mary Pickford completes "Kiki," the United Artists studio will be shut down until after the first of the year.

Hughes will make his headquarters on the lot, probably beginning next week. There are a number of small subsidiary companies which figure in the U. A.-Art Cinema setup. Coalescing them into the major picture is declared to present a detailed job which will take some time to complete.

Hughes is responsible for the dope. Schenck maintains silence, but the film colony had a good laugh for itself over the latter's denial of the deal on a technicality a few days before it was closed. When he arrived here from New York, he said no deal for U. A. was under way, ignoring the widely published reports that it was Art Cinema that was involved, not the distributing organization.

May Brunette Again

Hollywood—May McAvoy declares that she is returning to the screen within a short time, but will not name the company. She is returning as a brunette. The story is that Warners compelled her to be a blonde during the course of her contract with them, but now that her tresses are back to their natural shade of dark brown she again hears the call of the screen. But it's not coming from the Warner studio, she asserts.

INSIDERS'

WHEN a man's in a position of power he's got plenty of friends —preferred and common. When things go wrong—well, there's always the Salvation Army.

The theme of this bedtime yarn might be entitled "Friendship." The object under fire is a well known production executive in Hollywood who values his pals more highly than wisely—that is, for his own career's sake.

When this worthy took over his present job, he brought in his friends, the chaps he had worked with in other days at other studios. It is now many, many months since the acquisitions were made. There have been changes on the lot, but all of them have been additions. The Old Guard stands as is, Gibraltar-like in its solidity, stability and stupidity.

The executive is turning out a lot of pictures. More so than he, or any other individual on the Coast, should have to worry about, although that is the fault of the system and not the person. But some of them are passable, a lot of them are terrible, and all too few above the average.

The world and its observers know where a good deal of the fault is to be traced. In the friends who bask in the headliner's spotlight, as you have, by this time, surmised. The reason is simple: They are trading on friendship, not on ability as picture makers.

The boss, in whom the quality of friendship is undoubtedly strained beyond all reasonable bounds, knows his prestige is being jeopardized; the sales department has squawked to the president and the president has passed the yelps to the studio.

You would think that ultimately this blindness would be replaced by the light. Only it isn't and today the man's future hangs uncomfortably in the balance with the scales slowly, but steadily, swinging in his disfavor.

Touched by "Genius"

From all indications, a certain director will start on a vacation as soon as he completes his current opus. That vacation will probably take the form of a rest cure.

Strange tales of his weird behavior on the set are being circulated up and down the Hollywood foothills. An instance:

For no apparent reason this director wanted a group of galloping horsemen to pull up to a particular spot. The easy and natural thing for both men and horses was to continue past this imaginary line, coming to a more gradual stop. Where they halted had nothing to do with the sequence, as they are still riding hard when they passed the cameras. In fact, the whole incident could be termed nothing more than an idiosyncrasy on the part of the director.

Yet he was adamant in his demands. Those horsemen would stop where he wanted them to, or he would know the reason why. They tried it again. A score or more were unable to stop in time. Again and three or four were over the line. Again with the same result.

In vain cameramen and sound experts tried to reason with the director. The takes in each instance had been perfect, so why bother about the rest? The director refused to listen. These riders would do as he told them or else——.

Another take and the director delivered his ultimatum. Grabbing a prop pistol, he shouted: "The next man that crosses the line is going to get shot."

The horsemen lined up. At command they started riding full gallop past the cameras and tried to draw up. From the milling group of horses and men one lone rider was pushed across the line. Promptly the director emptied his pistol at the man. When none of the shots took effect, our friend realized he was firing blanks.

"Give me a gun with real bullets," he demanded, "I'll show the ——." His assistants were too scared to move. "Hurry up," he growled, "or everyone of you are all washed up on this unit."

Finally someone shoved another gun in his hand, hoping to placate him. He broke it, found it contained blanks, too, and sought out the fellow who had given it to him. Finding the "culprit," the man was fired, but meanwhile the director forgot his wrath against the horsemen and called it a day.

Still another story is being heard about a different director and a group of riding extras. In filming a mob scene, twenty-seven men were sent to the hospital after having been ridden down by horses. It seems the director operates upon the theory it is up to extras to get out of the way—if they can.

The studio, however, in reporting the accident, overlooked mentioning the fact that the horses all had riders.

Tenacity

Two executives are in a quandary. The head of a certain department under their direct jurisdiction has occupied his post for years. But internal shiftings now find the man's assistant his superior.

The hunch was this would force the stormy petrel into resignation. Only it didn't. He still reports every morning like clock-work with no duties to engage his attention. No question of money involved, because he who has fallen into disfavor is worth several millions and proposes to see how long he can keep the executive pair embarrassed by his tenacity.

There isn't any contract at stake, but certain circumstances make it a tough job to tell the man he's through. In the interim, he continues to appear on deck daily, and collect at the end of each week. As confusion reigns in executive chambers.

Eyes on Hughes Again

Howard Hughes' course in putting over Multicolor is being watched on the Coast. The multi-millionaire who plunged so heavily on "Hell's Angels" is prepared to put plenty into an effort to put over the color project, it is understood.

Multicolor differs from Technicolor in that it has color on both sides of the film, making the film thicker. The company now is working on improvement of the process, and soon will open its new laboratory on the Coast.

Hughes went into Multicolor when he hit a stone wall on use of Technicolor for "Hell's Angels." At the time Warner had the eight Technicolor cameras sewed up. Fox had had an option on Multicolor, which was used in a few Fox pictures. Later Universal and Pathe are

It Is No Longer A Mystery—

WHY "Way for a Sailor" was pulled at the New York Capitol the day before its scheduled opening and "The Big House" rushed in as a substitute immediately after it had closed its run at the Astor.

Why a certain big shot wants to place the blame on the sales department when the production forces under his jurisdiction aren't hitting the ball.

That a certain advertising man got away with graft for a long time before the searchlight hit him.

That a usually level-headed executive drew real disdain from his employes when he issued his asinine order on so-called economy.

That the boys were quick to peg the wise guy who turned high hat.

Who the fellow was who had plenty of palpitations before scanning the morning papers to make sure his name wasn't mentioned in the news.

That a certain company chief is plenty sorry that he didn't give recognition to a valued executive who took the air, to the immense satisfaction of another company.

OUTLOOK

said to have obtained options, which were subsequently dropped.

It's a Business

It seems that things had been going a little tough for him; even though he was one of the big shots, his weekly salary running into three figures. And so, to tide him over, he made several touches from one of his subordinates.

Then, evidently, a lapse of memory. The underling was up on the carpet and his chief told him it meant the gate.

"Okay," was the substance of the subordinate's reply. "I'll take the rap, but the prexy is going to have the lowdown on the whole deal."

Which was a horse of a different color. Was the underling kept on the payroll? Don't be silly.

Short Story

And then there is the case of another who had been scheduled for a big step up the ladder. The Insiders told you about him some time ago. Only, he was caught chiseling on his expense account. The practice was confined to comparatively small sums, but chiseling it was and he was called on it.

The promotion was off, but he was given opportunity to hold his job, through repayment of the chiseled dough. It was agreed upon, but the repayments were not forthcoming. As a result, the gate swung wide, and he walked right through it.

Just a Freak

The president of a certain company this week got a load of the early gross returns on the first week showings of Amos 'n' Andy.

This company happens to have a picture which—the company head thinks—should have done the same sort of business, but didn't. So in came the sales manager—by request.

"How about this and how about our own picture?" asked the boss.

"Don't pay any attention to those figures. To begin with they're exaggerated. Secondly, the Amos 'n' Andy affair is a freak and freaks don't count," parried the sales manager.

One of the erudite Insiders tried to discover since when "freak" was synonymous with "showmanship," but failed to get to first base.

'Twas Ever Thus

Really a clever fellow. His job is to publicize, as well as to advertise, his circuit's houses in a territory not so far from New York, and he does it very well. Or so it appeared on the surface.

But recently his assistant was transferred to another city. And New York wondered why it was that So-and-So was slipping. It didn't occur to the big town executives that perhaps the removal of the assistant from the scene offered the explanation.

There you have one slant.

But the selfsame individual is really in a bad way. What you already know is merely one reason. The other two are these:

His copy is often off-color. So much so that several merry-to-dos have resulted at headquarters. His superiors have warned him to watch his step, but apparently home office mandates mean nothing.

He has gone the way of much flesh; hi-hat. Since his last promotion this foolish young man has made himself inaccessible. That's oke, except when the inaccessibility touches the wrong people.

While matters stand as they are, it won't be long before something happens.

That Big If

SHOW business is just a series of funny guesses. Take, for instance, the case of Amos 'n' Andy. At the time of the Tiffany convention in Chicago last season it was reported the veteran radio aces had made overtures to the company for production of a picture.

The matter is said to have been hot and cold for several days, with the blackface stars even offering to put up their own dough. However, the deal fell through and the next move was the signing of a contract with RKO.

All of which leads to a Big If, and just what would have been the outcome had that Chicago proposal been otherwise acted upon.

Another slant. Paramount was hot after them. The deal was practically set, so the story goes, when RKO, sensing the box-office potentialities of the team, stepped in and exercised its prerogative, by virtue of its hook-up with National Broadcasting Co. That move caused plenty of feeling between Paramount and RKO at a time when a merger deal was pending between the two firms.

RAIDING on personnel, banned by edict of the Hays organization, is being resorted to by the sales manager of one company to a degree which may lead to a campaign of retaliation by the outfit made the target of the raids.

So far, the sales manager who has taken the offensive has weaned away from the rival company a number of its branch managers, salesmen and bookers. At present, dickering is under way for others.

The intensity of the raids, directed only against this one company, has given rise to a query as to the real purpose behind them. One angle has it that malice is inspiring the attack and the truth is that the tactics are undermining the morale of the offending sales chief's own force.

The company attacked is declared planning reprisals which will give the offender something to think about. This was indicated when its sales manager called his "opposition" and warned him that if a battle was wanted, he could have it and how.

"I've been in the racket too long not to know how to meet underhanded tactics," was the substance of the warning, "and if you want to go to bat on the issue, I'll shoot up your payroll 300 per cent."

The warning so far has gone unheeded. The Insiders learn, and a real storm, therefore, may be brewing.

The funny part of it all is that the Hays association, which always has frowned on raids of personnel either is unaware of or is winking at the practice recited in the case in point, and the sales manager attacked can't talk to the "opposition" about it for the reason that the latter now declines to answer his phone when the other calls.

Gelt-Getters

Two big business chiefs sat down weeks ago to work out details of a deal which would place vending machines in each of a certain chain's several hundred theatres. One executive represented the circuit and the other, of course, represented the equipment manufacturer.

They fought for hours, each attempting to drive a hard bargain. The result was an iron-clad agreement with very few concessions for either outfit.

One clause, however, was inserted upon suggestion of the chain head which, on the face of it, appeared trivial. It stipulated that instead of the usual caption, "Drop Penny Here," the wording above the change slot must read: "Drop Coins Here," and the hole enlarged from regulation penny size to hold nickels, dimes and quarters.

This little twist will result in increasing the circuit's net from the machines by at least $25,000 yearly, and the reason, according to the genius who engineered it, may be explained in the public's carelessness in inserting silver coins, instead of copper, in slot machines.

Wide Film Shelved By Public's Wide Yawns; Time Not Ripe, Producer Slant

Agency Agony

Hollywood — "Flesh Peddlers" are having a tough time. With production at a low ebb the various agents are finding they have a tremendous overhead, carrying a number of representatives who, capable or not, are not getting any talent placed.

One of the larger firms with six representatives has cut the staff to two and other agencies are doing likewise.

Film Boards to Probe Status of Two-for-One Gag

Los Angeles—So many complaints have been received by the Film Board of Trade that Lola Gentry, local secretary, has started an investigation to find out whether or not the awarding of premiums by various theatres affect the present zoning plan.

The commission investigating the complaints will determine just what is meant by the word "premium" and whether or not use of premiums is in violation of the zoning agreement.

At the present time some of the smaller theatres are offering tickets which, with one paid admission, permit two to see a show. These tickets are given out by merchants in return for products that can be awarded at gift nights or for similar reasons. If the regular admission is thirty cents and a patron presents a coupon or premium ticket two persons see the show for fifteen cents each. This fifteen cent admission is worked in houses rated as thirty cent admission theatres in the zoning plan which gives them bookings ahead of the fifteen cent houses.

While perhaps none of the managers is in favor of the two-for-one price, there are so many houses doing it that each manager feels he will have to follow the plan or he will lose business. The commission hopes to clarify matters and establish just what the "premium" rights are in the various zones.

Detroit State Is Closed by Publix Due to Depression

Detroit—Poor business is forcing Publix to close the State Friday for an indefinite period. The Adams was closed early this summer, for the same reason.

Admission prices may be reduced at the Madison, downtown second run, the scale being cut from 35 and 75 cents to 25 and 50 cents.

Heavy Plugging Fails to Stir Excitement; Warners to Soft Pedal Vitascope

Wide film will go back to its shelf in the laboratory, to emerge at some future, undetermined date, if opinion current in a number of executive councils stays as is.

The latest socks administered to wide-angled pictures come from the public and are expressed in the lack of enthusiasm evidenced by box-office grosses, shown over Realife and Grandeur. In New York, "Billy the Kid," first example of M-G-M's Realife method, ended its week at the Capitol with an approximate $76,000 gross. The picture was not held over, despite the fact that M-G-M ballyhooed the process in its advance newspaper campaign, plus the additional fact that the company could have forced the picture for a second week in its own house if the inclination to do so had existed.

In Hollywood "The Big Trail," exhibited on Grandeur, failed to cause a ripple of excitement. Here in New York the same picture at the Roxy, backed by a heavy newspaper splurge, did about $60,000 from Friday morning to Sunday night, which is better business than the big 7th Avenue theatre has been doing of late. That gross, however, is not phenomenal.

Significant is the decision of Winfield Sheehan to steer clear of future productions on wide film until the time is considered ripe. What that means in terms of weeks or months is anybody's guess.

Warners Soft Pedal

The current slant on wide film is tipped off by decision of the Warners to introduce "Kismet" for a Broadway run at the Hollywood on wide film, but with no advance ballyhoo. The picture opened Thursday night with nary an advance mention of the introduction of Vitascope, as Warners have dubbed their process. At Warner headquarters, argument raged back and forth before decision to soft pedal the process was reached. Some executives were strong for a real fuss, via newspaper copy, but it was Harry M. Warner who decided to play up "Kismet" and play down Vitascope on the theory that wide film was merely another embellishment like sound.

Executive opinion on wide film is varied. There are some who maintain the innovation is fine for spectacles, but tiresome when an entire picture is projected that way. Others can see no radical difference in the picture image obtained in the 35 mm. print as used widely today and the wide film image. One important man said:

"Suppose the picture is larger. Why not make it smaller? Actual size doesn't mean a thing. It's what the screen shows, not the size it can be made to assume, that counts."

His opinion is being echoed in a number of headquarters in New York.

Turning Old Into New

Londoners May Pull Away from Engineers Unit

One hundred and twenty British members of the Society of M. P. Engineers, comprising the entire London section, are in revolt and are expected momentarily to sever the tie that binds them with the parent body in this country.

The London branch of the S. M. P. E., headed by Simon Rowson, is declared by insiders to have long been a "thorn" in the side of the association, what with its constant "bickering," "fault-finding" and "unreasonable demands," and many in the American group are said to be highly in favor of a split.

The climax was reached only recently when Rowson, on behalf of the Londoners, sent a long cable to the S. M. P. E. governors threatening immediate withdrawal unless certain unnamed policies of the association were changed. Conservative members of the board had a tough job keeping in check those colleagues who favored sending Rowson notice to "go to it." In the meantime, the matter was shelved pending further action by the governors.

New York Quarters Set

New York headquarters of the S. M. P. E. will be opened in the Aeolian Bldg., where Silvan Harris, a newcomer in the picture field, will commence duties as manager and editor of "The Journal." Harris has been given a year's contract for the newly-created post. He was formerly with Fada Radio Corp., and prior to that was managing editor of "Radio News."

Supreme Court Weighs Credit, Arbitration Cases

Washington—Charge of distributors that the lower court erred in granting an injunction restraining compulsory arbitration as a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and allegations of the govenment that the credit committee system is illegal, are under advisement by the United States Supreme Court. Appeals in the arbitration and credit cases were filed early this week. The government is appealing from the Thacher decree, holding the credit system legal. Decision is expected late in November.

Radio Purchase of Pathe Believed Set; Lee Marcus Reported as New Head Man

Kennedy and Brown Leaving for Coast to Make Survey of Pathe Lot

Lee Marcus, at present a vice-president of RKO Radio Pictures, is understood to have been temporarily decided upon to head Pathe if the deal now pending between the two companies is closed. Indications late Thursday were that the purchase by RKO is set.

Under the terms of the deal, as now set up, RKO will assume control of Pathe, but the latter organization will be maintained as a separate organization, serving as a production "feeder" for the RKO theatre circuit.

Joseph P. Kennedy is slated to leave for the Coast Saturday, as is Hiram S. Brown, president of RKO. The purpose is understood to be a final survey of the Pathe studio properties, prior to consummation of the sale. Terms and their details are being handled principally by Elisha Walker of Bancamerica-Blair, Pathe bankers, and David Sarnoff, president of RCA, which controls RKO Radio Pictures.

RKO After Earnings of $2.50 a Share for 1930

Financial forecasters at RKO (Theatres) look for 1930 profits to equal $2.50 a share on the approximate 2,000,000 shares of stock outstanding. This would place the year's earnings at a minimum of $5,000,000.

Although the third quarter showed a big drop under last year, high previous quarter earnings enabled the company and subsidiaries to report profit of $3,052,571 for the quarter ended Sept. 30 after depreciation, interest and Federal taxes, but before subsidiary dividends. This compares with $1,637,900 in the first nine months of last year. Profit for the third quarter was $886,438.

Brandt-Blumenthal Suit Set for January Trial

Billy Brandt's suit against A. C. Blumenthal for $600,000 which he says is due him as commission for lining up sale of New York independent theatres to Fox is slated for trial before a Nassau County court early in January.

The complainant claims Blumenthal's end of the deal totaled $1,200,000 and that he is entitled to half as per an alleged agreement with Blumenthal at the time the purchase was made. The defendant denies any such agreement is in existence.

Ten Lose Fox W. C. Jobs

Los Angeles—Shake-ups hit the publicity and advertising department of Fox West Coast this week and when the excitement subsided the staff was minus ten members. Under a new ruling, all publicity and advertising is to emanate from the home office and from the particular sanctuary in which Frank Whitbeck reposes.

But Cochrane Laughs And Laughs

Wall Street, via one of its usually well-informed sleuths, sold Universal down the river again during the week. This time the story had RKO, which is reported buying every picture company under the sun, annexing the Laemmle organization, including the usual lock, stock and barrel.

When R. H. Cochrane was asked about it he said he had been disturbed for some time now because Universal had been so completely ignored of late by merger hawkers. "It simply proves we do mean something after all," he commented.

Then he started to laugh and was still at it when the telephone conversation ended.

Leo Waiting for Fox Settlement of 5-Year Contract

Efforts are reported under way to bring to an end, by settlement, the five-year contract held by Joe Leo, former president of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., with Fox. It is understood Harley L. Clarke will act on the matter in the next few weeks.

Pending the settlement, Leo is at work on formation of an independent chain covering the eastern half of the country. He plans to concentrate his activities in New York State, Ohio, Pennsylvania and bordering territories and may attempt to tie in independent producers by assuring them outlets for their product.

Paramount Buys London Chain; Changes Policy

London—Paramount changed its spots this week by purchase of the four theatres operated in London suburbs by the Astoria circuit. The buy was made by Emil Wertheimer and turned over to Paramount on lease.

The move is contrary to the company's generally understood plan for theatre expansion in Great Britain, which provides for building, rather than a campaign of acquisition.

Discussing Equipment

Of special interest to every live-wire theatre manager is the discussion on innumerable angles of theatre maintenance, equipment, etc., by exhibitor members of the "Managers' Round Table Club," which this week appears as part of THE SHOWMAN section, and beginning on page 119.

This special feature of the "Round Table" is becoming more popular every month when the maintenance angle of theatre operation is given particular attention by Club members in THE SHOWMAN section.

Broadway Outlet May Mean Another Grind for Warner

With five theatres on Broadway, the Warners are still minus sufficient outlets to supply their own and First National product with main stem showings. The accumulation of pictures awaiting release may make it necessary to convert either the Hollywood or the Warners to a grind policy to eliminate the jam.

There are 13 pictures in the vaults in New York with no place to go under the present policy of spotting what the company believes to be important pictures in Times Square show windows. On the waiting list of two-a-days are "Mothers Cry," "Adios" and "Sunny," turned out by First National, and "Illicit" and "Viennese Nights," which emanate from Warners.

For the Winter Garden are scheduled "Woman Hungry," "Little Caesar," "Going Wild," "Kiss Me Again," "The Gorilla," "The Doorway to Hell," "River's End" and "Barber John's Boy." The holdup is largely traceable to the run of "The Dawn Patrol," which played ten weeks at the Garden when the Warners figured it would run about five. "Office Wife" followed in for another extended run.

The Strand takes the weekly changes, but often follows the Warner, Hollywood and Winter Garden. The Beacon on the upper reaches of Broadway is, of course, out of the Broadway theatrical district and is, therefore, considered out of the running except as a subsequent run house.

The situation will probably create some difficulties as the season progresses insofar as subsequent runs are concerned, the possibility being failure to clean up on 1930-1931 releases in the metropolitan area before the next season rolls around.

Rogers, Shearer Re-Sign

Hollywood—Two stars have attached their signatures to new contracts. Fox has induced Will Rogers to stay with it for two more years, his next to be "The Connecticut Yankee," and Norma Shearer has signed a new long-term contract with M-G-M.

Hollywood Promoters Arrested in News Expose; Accused of Trimming Suckers

Mix Returning

Hollywood—Tom Mix is considering a return to the screen, following conclusion of his circus tour. The former ace western star has been out of pictures since May, 1929, when he joined the circus at a reputed salary of $15,000 weekly. One or two pictures may be made by Mix, but his decision will hinge on conferences with the circus owners.

Carrier Deal to Merge Several Equipment Units

The deal which will bring into one fold at least 15 air conditioning units, headed by Carrier Engineering Corp., is nearly set. Final consummation is expected within a few days, when plans will be launched to organize a new $15,000,000 unit.

Carrier will merge with Brunswick-Kroeschell Co., with both concerns, it is said, representing 60 per cent of air conditioning installations in the country.

Included in the consolidation is the York Heating & Ventilating Corp., which has three subsidiaries, and with other units will swell the total involved to 15 companies. Carrier Company is the name adopted for the consolidation.

Robert A. Kroeschell and A. C. Buensod will manage the theatre division, with Otto Armpach in charge of the air conditioning engineers.

75 Per Cent of Houses In Poland Now Wired

About 75 per cent of Poland's theatres have been wired, with the remainder falling in line at a steady rate, according to William Rybak, who is in New York representing Cebe Film Co., Warsaw.

There are no matinees in Poland, theatres usually beginning operations at 6 P.M. except on very rare occasions when a big feature of special appeal to children is shown.

There are about 730 theatres in Poland, which has a population of 31,000,000. Warsaw, a city of about 1,100,000, has about 60 theatres. During the season of 1929-30 it is estimated that over 1,000,000 admissions were paid in Warsaw.

Lorch Goes to Chicago

Harry Lorch has returned to Chicago to take up his duties as western division manager. He replaces Harry Taylor, who is to become manager of the Kansas City branch.

'Josh' Binney and R. E. Wharff Held Without Bail in Old Racket

Hollywood—Film investment rackets, in exchange for which the investor is offered a chance to break into films, are expected to receive a setback here, due to the vigilance of Motion Picture News. H. J. (Josh) Binney and Robert E. Wharff, alias Bob White, are in jail without bail, awaiting prosecution for their part in the alleged racket.

Binney, who is president of the Interstate Prod. and Amusement Corp., when arrested was in the process, it is charged, of closing a deal for some stock in his company, in return for which the purchaser was to receive an important role in "The Trek of the Titans."

About ten days ago Wharff, who is listed

"Indian" Serial Bringing Back Kids to Movies

Paving the way for comeback of serials on a big scale, Universal's "The Indians Are Coming" is playing a leading part in bringing back children to theatres, say reports from exhibitors made public by the company.

Thousands of children have been attracted to theatres playing the serial, presaging the winning back of child attendance, these reports show. A number of de luxe houses throughout the nation are playing the serial.

Maybe It's Publicity or Maybe Not, Anyway—

Hollywood—Local dailies report police here and at Pontiac, Mich., are man-hunting for Jimmy Trientas, a 16-year-old orphan, who is charged with having sent death threats to Ben Lyons and Bebe Daniels.

Pontiac Sherlocks say the couple have received the following note:

"You double-crossed me and you will pay, and if you don't pay me with money you will pay some other way and pay plenty."

Then Bebe received a second note, this time in Greek, demanding that she send money to a town in Greece, only the sender, whoever he is if he is, failed to stipulate the amount.

San Francisco—An internal disorder was ascribed as cause of death here Thursday of Jack Gum, 46, International Newsreel veteran.

Plan Two Openings

Hollywood—Warners will borrow a leaf from Howard Hughes' manual and open "Life of the Party" day and date at both their local houses. Hughes got big results in New York with a dual showing of "Hell's Angels" at the Criterion and Gaiety, New York, where the film is still playing twin engagements.

Bankers Plan to Light Fireworks As Costs Mount

An interesting speculation concerns itself with the financial pressure that has been brought to bear. The departure of representatives of M-G-M, Pathe, Paramount, Columbia and RKO for the Coast on or about the same time gives rise to the query if the moneyed interests behind the companies are not identical, or at least so closely identified that a general exodus of such importance can be maneuvered.

Months ago, Motion Picture News pointed out, and has since reported new developments along those lines from time to time, that the bankers are digging into the operations of the industry on a wholesale scale. Not only have the inside workings in New York been thoroughly gone into, but investigators on the Coast, likewise, have been busy. Some of them have been functioning under cover. Others have been securing the required data via the social-entry wedge.

A considerable mass of data has been prepared covering operations in Hollywood. Relatives and friends occupying positions made important by the high salaries, if not ability, have been checked, their background investigated and their duties scanned in order to find out whether they are competent to hold their jobs. Also if they are being overpaid and, if so, why and through whose orders.

The results of the probe are likely to be sweeping. Many changes in the Coast lineup may be expected as a consequence. That overhead will be pared in wholesale fashion is definite.

Photophone Earnings to Show Big 1930 Increase

Profits of RCA Photophone for the first nine months of the year will show a substantial increase over the corresponding figure for 1929, it is indicated, although official figures have not been released by the company. On Jan. 1, 926 Photophones were in operation and since that time 1,200 new installations have been made. Its foreign earnings are increasing rapidly, it is said.

Showmanship

Fox has turned out a press book on "The Big Trail" that's a knockout, and a credit to the showmanship of Glen Allvine. It consists of 32 pages, newspaper size, most of them on coated stock in color.

In addition to the remarkable line-up of general exhibitor aids, it contains three full pages of exploitation stunts for the kids—and all of them practical, with the keynote line: "Bring Back the Kiddies with 'The Big Trail.'" Many novelties that will appeal to the juveniles are available to exhibitors. It's a comprehensive campaign to bring back children's trade and should go over with a bang.

Ohio Unit to Go To Bat in Fight On Score Charge

Columbus—Score charges, which have been more or less a dormant issue of late, will go under fire, together with excessive sound equipment servicing costs when the Ohio exhibitor unit holds its tenth annual here Nov. 18 and 19.

The proposed new contract and adverse legislation are other matters to be acted upon at the sessions. Zoning also is to be discussed, the organization reporting on its experiences at Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus and Dayton, in each instance of which it has failed to reach agreement with distributors.

Allied States Association organizers are not expected to be on hand, due to their move last week in forming an association at Cincinnati. Cleveland, it is believed, will be their next objective.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer Operate Woods Theatre

Chicago—Theatre interests here are hazarding opinions on the future plans of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, following the decision of the latter to operate the Woods theatre themselves. It is understood that two circuits made offers to the owners of the Woods at the time the RKO lease expired; both of which were turned down by Aaron Jones, whose company owns the Woods building and theatre. Property and capital enough to make Jones, Linick & Schaefer an important figure in Loop theatre operation is already in the name of the firm, despite the fact that the Woods, Rialto and Erlanger theatres are the only ones operated by it. Also under its control are the Studebaker, Garrick and Randolph theatres, and the Marcus Loew Booking Agency.

Lightman Slated for Re-election; Contract to Be Approved at Philly Meet

That "clockwork precision" which has marked the last two conventions of the M.P.T.O.A. again will be in evidence at the forthcoming convention Nov. 10 and 11, with the slate of officers reported as already set.

M. A. Lightman, president of the organization, who succeeded to the post upon retirement of R. F. Woodhull, just prior to the Memphis convention, and then was re-elected at the sessions, is a cinch for reelection, unless he insists upon withdrawing his name from the roster. However, indications are that Lightman will again be the standard-bearer, returning with him into office practically the entire present slate. Changes in the directorate will be made, it is understood. Under the method of procedure, directors elect officers.

If Lightman pulls out, it is understood, Charles W. Picquet, veteran Pinehurst, N. C., showman, would be next in line, it being the desire of the affiliated chains to keep an independent at the head of the organization for legislative and other purposes.

Contract To Be Ratified

The Philadelphia convention will ratify the proposed new standard form of agreement. Most of its directors already have indicated their approval of it.

There is little likelihood that Allied States Association will be an issue at the convention, for the Allied leaders are not expected to go near the sessions. Last year they stayed away from Memphis, and although theyear before they were on hand at Toronto, they did not try to attend any meetings, probably aware that they would have been invited out if they had.

Instead, while the Philadelphia meetings are in progress they probably will be organizing a new unit in some zone far removed from the convention sphere of activity.

Among speakers who will feature the Philadelphia convention are: Adolph Zukor, S. R. Kent, Hiram S. Brown, Al Lichtman, Major General Smedley Butler, commandant of the Marine Corps; R. E. Logsden, of the Memphis Chamber of Commerce; E. Kuykendahl, Mississippi exhibitor, and Paul Block, newspaper publisher. Michael L. Simmons, president, will lead a delegation of five members of the AMPA to the sessions.

G. E. Short at Strand

"The Electric Ship," a new Marvels of Science subject produced by the General Electric Co., has been booked into Warners' Strand for one week starting Oct. 31. The following week it will he shown at Warner's Beacon and the Brooklyn Strand. The picture was produced and scored under the supervision of John Klenke and is being hooked in the New York territory by Albert Bondy.

Stumped

Hollywood—Overheard on the set where Wheeler and Woolsey are filming "Hook, Line and Sinker":

Woolsey: "Hello. . . . hello. Thish tha hotel clerksh? Shay. . . . wattum I gonna do? I'sh in tha wrong roomsh! Theresh a womansh in here!"

Wheeler, the clerk: "Throw her out!"

Woolsey (3 minutes later): "Okeh, ol' kid. Now. . . . what'll I do wish her husband?"

Rembusch Anti-Monopoly Body Now Organized

Indianapolis—Organization of the Association Against Business Monopoly has been completed here. Articles of incorporation have been filed with the secretary of state by Louis Rosenburg, Indianapolis, one of the incorporators.

Other incorporators are Theodore H. Jeffries of this city, who is interested in the picture business, and Frank J. Rembusch of Shelbyville, operator of about 20 picture houses in this state.

"The organization was formed to assist owners of theaters, shopkeepers and store operators in their fight against monopolistic conditions in their business," Rosenberg said. "The monopolistic conditions to which I refer are similar to those existing in the motion picture industry, where the large operators compel operators of individual theatres to sign contracts agreeing to take films that are sent to them in order to operate their theatres. Then, if the theatre owner has any difficulty the case is heard before a board of arbitrators composed of officials of the industry."

Rembusch has just completed his book on "Trust Busting" which is a tirade against centralization in the picture business, with Will H. Hays the special object of his attack. The book is to be sold for $1 a copy, proceeds of which he says will be used in the fight against monopoly.

The Rembusch book traces various developments in the industry in the process of centralization and offers letters from former Department of Justice operatives declaring their activities in attempted investigation of the Hays organization were blocked by Washingon.

Pangborn to Star in Pathe Comedy Series

Hollywood—Franklin Pangborn is to appear in a series of two-reel comedies for Pathe. Monte Carter now is working on an untitled story for Pangborn and Fred Guiol and Arch Heath are developing a second.

Warners Increase Own Production to Achieve Independence in Theatre Field

Carry On, Mates

Washington—Abram Myers' vocabulary is running riot again. The president of Allied States Association, whose "pusillanimous" crack at the Columbus convention last year caused a scurrying for dictionaries, now announces that the Michigan exhibitor unit is "ready to furnish to organizations in other territories attractive decalcomania signs for use on box-office windows reading: 'An Allied Theatre, Home Owned for Your Protection'."

Afternoon Sunday Show Is Up at Whittier, Cal.

Whittier, Cal.—Voters here Tuesday will pass upon the question of legalizing Sunday shows after 12 o'clock.

Own and First National Output To Be Boosted to 40 to 50 Annually

The Warners are discussing plans to make their organization as independent of the rest of the industry as the industry's set-up will allow.

Latest in the steps designed to bring this realization closer is a plan, purely formulative now, to step up production from 35 pictures this season to from 40 to 50 for 1931-1932, the increase to apply jointly to both Warners and First National.

The inside slant that prompts consideration of the move is this:

Certain of the Warner executives feel that the increase can be absorbed easily by their own theatre organization, thereby adding to the company's treasury money which ordinarily would go to outside producers. They also feel that the sales crews of both companies can handle 40 or 50 features as well as 35.

Jack Warner is due in New York from the Coast on Sunday to remain here about a month, during which time a definite conclusion will be reached. Opinion in Warner headquarters has not as yet crystallized either for or against the plan, but decision will be determined by the end of November.

If the idea is adopted, this means that the Warner circuit will use correspondingly fewer pictures from outside sources during the 1931-1932 season.

Warners to Remain on Sunset Blvd.; Won't Move

Hollywood—Jack Warner denies emphatically stories that Warner production will be centered in the First National studio at Burbank. He says the Warners will stay as is in the Sunset Boulevard plant.

Fifteen scripts are ready for the cameras. Actual work gets under way in a month.

Dizzy Sales Heights

Sales in the independent market are beginning to hit the high paces set in pre-sound days, according to a sales survey just completed by Bill Raynor of "Big 4," which shows that since the beginning of the new season, grosses have jumped 100%.

Bill Raynor

Raynor continues to build-up exchange renresentation for "Big 4," having already lined-up Buffalo, Detroit, Minneapolis, Salt Lake and Denver.

Politeness Pays

Chicago—A State-Lake usher kicked a small package while racing up an aisle the other week. Examination showed it contained $360 in bills. It was turned in and when identified by the owner he offered the usher a $2 reward. The boy snapped to attention and saluted. "Our reward," he said, not even glancing at the proffered bills, "is in serving the public." Who was the cluck who said ushers didn't have a sense of humor?

Inventor Alleges Infringement in "Realife" Process

Los Angeles—Unless an accounting of profits is made to him and to Charles M. Richter, New York financier and associate, Edwin W. Clark, inventor, will bring an injunction suit to prevent M-G-M from showing "Billy the Kid" by the Realife process. Clark charges infringement of his wide screen patents.

M-G-M officials admit that Richter wired them concerning alleged patent violations in the Realife process, but denied any infringement. The Realife method was developed in the M-G-M studio laboratories, it is asserted.

Clark's method is very similar to M-G-M's, so far as projection is concerned. The inventor also wired the Capitol, New York, to stop showing "Billy the Kid," charging infringement. His process is protected by two patents. One dates March 29, 1921, the other Sept. 19, 1922.

About a year ago, Clark says, he showed M-G-M his process and received an offer for it, which he refused. Richter is en route to Hollywood to start the proposed suit.

Realife Process Fails to Please In Kansas City

Kansas City—Realife, new wide screen process being offered by M-G-M, failed to draw the patronage anticipated at the Midland, Loew house here, said to be the third theatre in the country to offer the new process. In view of the advertising and publicity given run of "Billy the Kid," via Realife, considerably better results were expected by the management.

The first three days of "Billy the Kid" drew very well, but patronage slumped after Monday. To exceptionally cold weather was attributed part of the drop in business.

"Titans" Showmanship Splurges Writes New History in Picture Merchandising

Amos 'n' Andy Production in 250 Day and Date Runs Scores Huge Hit

In what is regarded as ushering in a new form of big scale merchandising of special attractions, "Check and Double Check" the Amos 'n' Andy feature, literally has set the industry on its ear by its day and date runs throughout the country, in which it is proving one of the biggest upsets in years.

The picture opened around 150 day and date runs last Friday and Saturday in key cities in all sections, backed by what is considered the most extensive simultaneous newspaper advertising campaign ever employed for a picture. Openings this week run the total of day and date runs to around 250.

Heralded for weeks by extended advertising in the trade press, exhibitors were well sold on "Check and Double Check" in advance, and got behind the national exploitation splurge with efforts that sent records careening in nearly every spot where the picture opened.

A national radio hook-up on Friday helped direct public attention and patronage to theatres where the attraction was opening. Public reaction to it has stamped the attraction as one of the outstanding freaks of show history.

The newspaper splurge, which consisted of two color single page and double trucks in 89 newspapers of 50 cities in 30 different states, was put over at an aggregate cost of about $75,000.

Capitalizing on the radio following of Amos 'n' Andy and public curiosity toward the stars of the air it had never seen, Joseph I. Schnitzer, RKO president, appropriated 201 sound-on-film and 70 sound-on-disc prints to "break" the picture in all sections of the nation simultaneously. New York was prevented from participating because the Mayfair theatre was not ready. The picture opens at this new RKO house Friday night.

Following is a summary of the national reception of the picture, as gathered by Motion Picture News correspondents:

Los Angeles Gross Hits $31,000 and New Record

Los Angeles—Amos 'n' Andy have met Los Angeles and the whole blooming town is theirs. "Check and Double Check" grabbed $31,000 at the Orpheum, which gives that house a rating of 190 per cent on the week and a new all-time record as well.

As the Orpheum business mounted, trade waxed slimmer at the competitive houses. The house did $12,500 over the week-end as against $10,500 the entire previous week with "A Lady Surrenders."

$32,000 on Week

Detroit—Hard hit by business depression, Detroit, nevertheless, is going for Amos 'n' Andy in a big way, the picture playing to $28,000 in six days and will do $32,000 on the week. Since the opening, grinding nine and ten shows daily at the RKO Downtown, the picture has attracted 100,000 patrons. It is to be held a second week with no let-up in sight.

Business is being stimulated at other houses by the RKO picture.

Cincy Dazed

Cincinnati—Amos 'n' Andy took a two-way sock at Cincinnati records, and what a sock it was, their "Double Check" piling up $20,900 at the RKO Capitol, and $17,650 at the RKO Palace from Saturday to Wednesday, inclusive, plus a Friday midnight preview and a Saturday midnight matinee at both houses.

The picture rode the crest of the heaviest advertising campaign in local history and the audience reaction was sensational. Crowds are lined up continually at both houses.

The Capitol will hold over the picture, but it will go out at the Palace, moving to the Lyric for a second week.

Business at other theatres has been hit by Amos 'n' Andy's drain on patronage.

Opening Slow but Film Building at Milwaukee

Milwaukee—Strong opposition has cut into draw of "Check and Double Check" at the RKO Palace Orpheum. The picture's business has been above average, but not sensational, as it didn't get away to such a hot start.

However, business is reported building and a two weeks' run is planned.

110,579 Admissions Set St. Louis on Its Ear

St. Louis—One hundred, ten thousand, five hundred and seventy-nine paid admissions up to, but not including Wednesday night, tell the story of how Amos 'n' Andy have set this town on its ear. The RKO St. Louis charges 25 cents for matinee and 50 cents night, children 15 cents at all shows, which run from 10:30 A.M. to midnight.

The picture opened last Friday and has had some effect on opposition houses, but the degree of this effect will not be apparent before the close of the week.

Omaha Reeling After $22,400 Five-Day Onslaught

Omaha—Box-offices here still are reeling over the onslaught of "Check and Double Check," which in six days got $22,400 at the RKO Orpheum, to hit a 140 per cent rating and smash the RKO Orpheum record. Before the week is out the picture probably will have established a new high mark for the city.

The picture is to be held over indefinitely, with a new stage show going in Friday.

Publix is meeting the Amos 'n'Andy barrage with "Her Wedding Night" and "The Life of the Party," but it is doubtful that either picture will quite hit par.

National Radio Hook-up to Aid Exhibitors in Ballyhooing Freak

Seattle—Amos 'n' Andy are one down, so far as cornering the business of this town is concerned. Estimated gross for five days at the RKO Orpheum is $20,000. The midnight preview last Friday drew only fairly well, but Saturday and Sunday were capacity. Since then business has been above average, but not tremendous. It doesn't seem to have the local appeal of "Rio Rita."

$25,000 in 5 Days at Pittsburgh; Phenomenal

Pittsburgh—Although managers here always refused to divulge figures, the gross of "Check and Double Check" in its first five days may be conservatively estimated at $25,000. This is the biggest business done here in months, and other grosses are falling off but slightly.

$9,000 in Five Days Tells Baltimore Story

Baltimore—"Check and Double Check" is a big hit here, getting $9,000 in five days, six nights and one Sunday midnight matinee at Keith's, operated by the Schanberger interests. Large advertising splurges and the radio reputation of the stars helped the strong draw. The picture is holding up well and is going into a second week. Competition has not been affected.

12,000 More in 5 Days Than "Cockeyed World's" 7

Houston—While actual figures are not available, "Check and Double Check"

New Record in Chi

Chicago—Here in the radio home of Amos 'n' Andy, their picture has already copped the house record of the RKO State-Lake, and is continuing at a terrific pace. In five days, Saturday to Wednesday, the take was $39,712.

Competition is hard to gauge as all Loop houses are doing good business with strong attractions, but two might have done much better if it weren't for Amos 'n' Andy. The Chicago is playing "Laughter" and the Oriental, around the corner, is meeting competition with a heavy stage draw.

"Titans'" Big Splurge Writes Picture History

herded approximately 25,000 patrons into the RKO Majestic in the first five days of its run, a 225 per cent rating for RKO's hit. This is 12,000 more than "The Cock-eyed World" got in seven days, which was the former record. Competition is hard hit and admits it.

$17,500 in 5 Days Real Dough at Casey

Kansas City—Amos 'n' Andy grossed approximately $17,000 for the five days ending Wednesday night at the RKO Main-street. This is a rating of 150 per cent.

The picture is being held for a second week and it is concededly cutting into business of opposition houses.

Atlanta's $25,000 Is Sensation for 5 Days

Atlanta—Knocking competition into a cocked hat, Amos 'n' Andy are riding home winners, grossing approximately $25,000 in five days at the Capitol, RKO and Universal stand. This is from the Friday opening up to and including Wednesday night. The picture is going into a second week.

$21,800 Blast Rocks Dallas Show Business

Dallas—Amos 'n' Andy exploded a bombshell in this city with their "Check and Double Check," getting $21,800 from Friday up to and including Wednesday at the RKO Majestic. The first three days the picture was bucking the state fair, but despite this it knocked records for a row, with half-block lines extending both ways.

The picture has stimulated business in other houses except the Melba, two doors away, which was blanked out at times. However, some of the overflow went to the Melba.

Rain Doesn't Mean a Thing; Big at Des Moines

Des Moines—Rain didn't mean a thing to Amos 'n' Andy, who went soaring for a new record at the RKO Orpheum, the first four days shoving the house way out in front with the SRO sign out.

The picture is bringing good business all around, "Whoopee" doubling the business at the Des Moines. The Paramount is doing only average business on "Heads Up."

Standees Send Grosses Soaring at Scranton

Scranton, Pa.—"Check and Double Check" taxed the capacity of the 1,800-seat Capitol, opening here on Monday, and again on Tuesday and Wednesday, the last named being Mitchell Day, a holiday for anthracite miners.

Hundreds of men, women and children stood throughout the performances, something unusual these days. Comerford-Paramount Publix regulations prohibit making public the gross. Admissions are 50 cents matinee and night, 15 cents for children matinee, and 25 cents at night.

Color

Omaha—Orpheum employes for the past two weeks have had a lot to say. Whether its over the phone, at the box office, the doorman or ticket taker—the greeting has been "Check and Double Check, RKO Orpheum thanks you." The idea was originated by Manager Ralph Pierce.

The picture is spotted in for a week and its overflow is greatly helping business at other theatres.

Frisco Capitulates with $21,500 in Five Days

San Francisco—Amos 'n' Andy broke every record at the Orpheum with about $21,500 gross, which is a rating of 180 per cent. This is up to and including Wednesday night, when it looked like the picture would run for weeks. The draw is affecting all other pictures.

Their heavy draw occasioned surprise locally, as there was skepticism as to whether the radio stars could duplicate their radio following on the screen for they are dialogists first and actors second.

Big Opening at Oakland Presages New Record

Oakland—"Check and Double Check" opened to smash business here Wednesday night. It looks like the film is on the way to a record.

$16,500 Portland Smash; $7,000 Above "Rio Rita"

Portland—From Saturday to Wednesday, "Check and Double Check" just walked away from the town, drawing $16,500 at the RKO Orpheum, according to Manager Gamble. This is $7,000 more than "Rio Rita," which held the previous record. The way the picture is standing 'em up, it looks like it's in for a run.

Competitors concede that the Orpheum is leading the field by a heavy margin.

$20,000 Mill City Smash; Overflow Aids Another

Minneapolis—It's the same story here on Amos 'n' Andy, the sensational drawing cards grabbing off $20,000 in five days at the RKO Orpheum.

The opposition claims no effect on business at their theatres, but this is due to the rush of radio fans to downtown houses, with the other theatres getting the overflow. Publix' Minnesota is a case in point, claiming the biggest Saturday and Sunday in six weeks, despite the RKO smash.

Amos 'n' Andy Crash B. O. Record at Albany

Albany—Box-office records of the year were sent tottering by Amos 'n' Andy up to Wednesday night of this week. The picture opened at a midnight show Friday, playing to tremendous business which has necessitated seven shows daily.

Business was far ahead of "Animal Crackers," the previous attraction, which also went over big. "Check and Double Check" also helped business at other houses, which are enjoying good business in ideal show weather. The Strand is playing "Whoopee," while "The Sea Wolf" is filling

House Records In Many Spots Take a Tumble

New Orleans Flocks to Film; $23,000 for Week Possible

New Orleans—They're wondering how so many of the dear old public can jam their way into the RKO Orpheum here. House records have already succumbed to the Amos 'n' Andy onslaught and the week threatens to end with a gross in the neighborhood of $23,000. Believe it or not, if that figure is reach or approached, it looks like a new show day for the New Orleans show world.

Even Censors Praise Picture in Virginia

Richmond—Amos 'n' Andy have passed the state board of motion picture censorship and their "Check and Double Check" is practically assured a landslide business in Virginia.

"The picture passed without eliminations," said Mrs. Emma Speed Sampson, one of the three Virginia censors who have expressed themselves as being greatly pleased with the film and also benefitted by its laugh-provoking dialogue and scenes.

While it is reported to be attracting great crowds to the Keith house in Washington, the picture already has been assured record-breaking receipts in Richmond for Gosden, one of the pair, is a native son. Exploitation work in connection with the picture has been on an elaborate scale. The picture is to have a midnight showing in the Byrd Nov. 10 and its regular engagement there will begin Nov. 15, states Stewart B. Tucker, house manager.

Cleveland Does Between $17,000, $18,000 5 Days

Cleveland—Amos 'n' Andy grossed between $17,000 and $18,000 Saturday to Wednesday, inclusive, getting big matinee business and fair evening business.

Business was only slightly above average, the picture proving just normal competition. It is going into a second week.

$26,000 Topples Five-Day Record at Boston

Boston—All house records were broken by "Check and Double Check" at Keith's Memorial, the film getting around $26,000 for its first five days. The best previous top at the house was scored by "Sunny Side Up." Business is good at other theatres.

All New England Runs Are Reported as Going Big

Boston—New England is going strong for Amos 'n' Andy. With the film off to a new record here, record business is reported from the Albee, Providence; Keith, Lowell; Keith, Portland; Paramount, Haverhill and Warner, Worcester.

Big business is reported but estimates are not yet available from Warners Palace, Lawrence and Publix Empire, New Bedford.

Trade Paper Copy And Newspaper Ads Put It Over

Conceding that the trade paper campaign which heralded "Check and Double Check" was the first big gun to be fired in the national offensive by way of theatre preparation for the Amos 'n' Andy debut, Hy Daab's newspaper follow-up, which reached 89 newspapers in 50 cities and in 30 states, was put over at a cost to Radio Pictures slightly under $75,000.

Daab steered clear of full page and double truck rates by holding down the number of lines under full column depth, but in each instance, for eye appeal, the splash looked like an entire page. Two big heads of the radio headliners dominated the display, which was prepared in circus ballyhoo style.

Newspaper censorship, often strict in certain sections of the country, failed to apply in this instance, only one paper toning down the copy by throwing a Ben Day screen over the drawings. Daab doesn't know whether he was lucky or simply got away with something, but at any rate his display went through as originally laid out.

The copy was placed in some of the largest dailies in the United States. In the Chicago Tribune the two-page smash appeared in two colors, black and red. Circulation of the mediums used totaled 13,210,595 and in larger cities, two or more papers were frequently used.

Daab is now the proud possessor of a sheaf of letters from newspaper publishers and newspaper advertising managers commending him upon the efficacy of his layout. The letters didn't come only from those dailies in which the ads were carried. One Middle Western publisher saw the display in a daily published in a nearby city, but nevertheless was persuaded to write Daab a word of praise for his treatment.

Clicks for Warners

Amos 'n' Andy have socked grosses right on the chin in every Warner house they are playing. In every instance, business has jumped at least 100 per cent, with many of the theatres rolling up grosses of from 150 to 200 per cent over normal in the first six days of the run.

Amos 'n' Andy Open N. Y. Tonight; Scale Is $1 Top

With a potential maximum gross of $60,000 on the week to shoot at, Amos 'n' Andy make their New York debut tonight at the RKO Mayfair. The theatre at 7th Avenue and 47th St. will operate on a grind policy with a $1 top, in conformity with other houses of its type on Broadway. Forrest C. Macomber, formerly at the New York Strand and now manager of the Globe, will manage the Mayfair and, at the same time, continue control of the Globe.

The revamped Columbia, which housed burlesque prior to its acquisition by RKO, has had a number of seats added, total capacity of the theatre now being 2,300. Morocco rouge marble has been used rather generally throughout the house. In the place of bulky ornamental fixtures, the walls and ceiling show only the outline of recesses and mounted bas-reliefs which tend to further stress the modernistic architectural scheme under which the theatre was remodeled.

One of the features of the house is the marquee, in which the lighting has been arranged to flood not only the sidewalk, but that part of 7th Ave. on which the theatre faces as well. Two large signs, one facing 7th Ave. and the other 47th St., have a main banner of lights 100 feet high and 125 feet long.

Plans and specifications were drawn by Thomas W. Lamb and contracting work by M. Shapiro and Son.

A Break

Omaha—The Orpheum got a break when twins born in a local hospital on the opening day of "Check and Double Check" were named Amos and Andy. Pictures and story were splashed over the front pages.

"Double Check" to Reach $50,000 in First Chi Week

Chicago—Amos 'n' Andy, with smiles lighting up the interior of the RKO State-Lake, sat well to the rear of the house during the first performance here of "Check and Double Check" early Saturday morning. Because of the constant tinkle of change-making machines, audible from their vantage points in the theatre, and the continuous shuffle of paid customers past their seats on the aisle, it was difficult to determine whether the r(R)adio stars were pleased more by the public manifestations of interest in themselves or by their own performances on the screen before them. Only once during the performance did they turn their glances away from that screen up front.

At exactly 10 o'clock, one hour after the theatre opened, that shuffle of feet through the various entrances came to an abrupt halt. Amos looked up at Andy questioningly, and Andy stared back at Amos. But George Quinlan, manager of the State-Lake, was on hand to reassure them.

A pleased smile went the rounds of the three faces, and three pairs of eyes turned back to the screen. The house remained the same way for the nine shows which followed the first; it was still the same for Sunday's eight performances. And at 8:30 A.M. Monday a long line of customers, change in hand, waited in an autumnal rain that shrouded State St. By that time, 48,676 of the faithful had paid out $24,584 for eighteen performances at this 2,800-seat house.

House Records Smashed

Needless to say, all house records at the State-Lake for week-end grosses were smashed in a very definite way, and all-time records for the house are fast disappearing as the rush to lay it on the line continues. The Saturday and Sunday take alone exceeded by $5,000 the normal weekly take for the house on its old vaude-film policy which it abandoned only two weeks ago.

Advance advertising on the picture has never been equalled here before. Extra display space in all local papers was used for a full week before the picture's opening. More than $10,000 worth of space was used in the six dailies on Friday alone. It was apportioned as follows: Two center page spreads with color, Daily Tribune ($3,880); one page, Herald-Examiner, ($1,020); one page Evening American ($2,000); one page Daily News ($2,000); half-page Evening Post ($650); half-page Daily Illustrated News ($525), and additional display space in the theatre sections of all papers. Orders for the space came from Radio's New York office.

Nothing like this volume of advertising on a single picture nor the reception given it in its opening days has been witnessed here before. Local exhibitors and guessers figure it a cinch for the house to hit $50,000 this week, an unprecedented figure here for a 2,800-seat house with a 35c-75c scale.

Cincy Completes Protection Plan 42 Days Is Top

Cincinnati — Maximum protection of 42 days, during which time the picture must play the downtown second runs, is the schedule agreed upon in the new zoning schedules, which have been sent to New York for approval. The second runs are given seven days' clearance over five groups of nearby suburbans, making the protection of 35 days over the last group.

Pictures are available to 15-cent houses 100 days from the closing date of the first run. Fourteen days' protection is given over all houses within a 25-mile radius.

Text of the new zoning plan covering Cincinnati and territory served by exchanges here follows:

To Address Academy

Will H. Hays, who will be the principal speaker of the annual meeting of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences in Hollywood, at which nine honor awards will be made.

Cole Steps Out; Horwitz Named

Dallas—Will Horwitz, Houston showman, who has been fighting the distributor-exhibitor circuits on the protection issue, is new president of the Allied Theatre Owners of Texas. He succeeds Col. H. A. Cole, veteran leader, who stepped aside for the new head of the organization.

The convention here unanimously endorsed the Tiffany franchise as a "life-saver" for the "little fellow," and called upon all members to support it. Several leaders of Allied States Association attended the two-day gathering.

Academy Awards Honors; Hays as Chief Speaker

Will H. Hays is going to Hollywood to be principal speaker next Wednesday at the annual dinner of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences. Merit awards of the Academy are to be presented at the dinner, the third annual event of its kind. An address by Thomas A. Edison via a talker short, also will be a feature.

This year a new award, for sound recording, has been added to the list, making nine awards in all, as follows:

1. Actor—best performance or performances; 2. Actress—best performance or performances; 3. Director—best achievement or achievements; 4. Art director—best achievement; 5. Cinematography — best achievement; 6. Sound recording—best achievement; 7. Scientific or technical — best achievement; 8. Writing—best achievement; 9. Production—outstanding picture of the year from all aspects.

The committee of arrangements consists of Harry Rapf, chairman; William C. de Mille, Sam Hardy, Arthur Edeson, Al Cohn, Reginald Barker, Lawrence Grant, Frank Woods and Clinton Wunder.

Early Trial Seen for W. E. Pacent Patent Suit

Early trial of Western Electric against Pacent for alleged patent infringement is being anticipated following a decision of the United States Supreme Court reversing a lower court decision and holding the company with Electrical Research Products and American Telephone & Telegraph Co. may properly join as plaintiffs in the suit.

Clara Bow Returns to L. A.

Clara Bow has gone to Hollywood, having completed New York sequences for her next Paramount picture, "No Limit." With her went Norman Foster, her leading man; Stuart Erwin, featured comedian, and Dixie Lee.

Mary Brian also has left New York for the Coast.

"Man I Killed" Next

Ernst Lubitsch's next and his first to be made in the East for Paramount will probably be "The Man I Killed," Maurice Rostand's war play.

Strike Postponed

Newark—Sympathy strike of operators in the theatre-musician jam here has been postponed indefinitely while an agreement is being sought.

Warner Club to Meet

First general meeting of the Warner Club, composed of New York employes of Warners and subsidiaries, will be held Nov. 6 at the Hotel New Yorker.

Finished with Warners

Marian Nixon has completed her contract with Warners and from now on expects to free-lance.

Coast Promoters Arrested After Expose by NEWS

as vice-president and treasurer of the company, approached Richard Pierson and Charles Carroll, Cincinnati youths, who were seated outside the Roosevelt Hotel in a car bearing an Ohio license. Wharff struck up an acquaintance with the boys and gave Pierson his card, asking that he call at the picture offices and see him within the next day or so.

Pierson did, and upon visiting Interstate is said to have been told that he was an unusual type and well qualified to play the second important masculine role in the picture. They are said to have told Pierson that the picture was to be made on a scale as elaborate as "The Big Trail," "Fighting Caravans," "Cimarron" and other outdoor pictures of epic proportions.

They told him, it is said, that the picture would be filmed on a large ranch in Texas, which would necessitate a location trip of about eight weeks. They also are declared to have informed him that many of the high-priced free-lance actors of Hollywood had been engaged for this production, that a director of prominence had been secured, and that the producer and his staff were well qualified to make such a picture, having been "important" figures in the film business for the last 20 years. The company, while only established a short time, was out to make a picture that would rank it as one of the outstanding independent organizations in the film capital, Pierson is asserted to have been told.

Asked to Invest $500

After Pierson was reputedly advised of the wonderful opportunity to become a screen success overnight due to the magnitude of the production and the association with important people in the film business, he was informed the corporation was being organized on a cooperative plan, so it would be necessary for him to invest $500 in the venture.

For this investment he would receive 50 shares of stock with a par value of $10 per share, and a note signed by the president and vice-president and treasurer of the company for $500, thus making his investment a loan and a gesture on his part to show his faith in the company.

After hearing these reputed promises, which bade fair to give him a start as an actor, Pierson discussed the proposition with William Crouch, western representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. When Pierson told the story in all its detail, Crouch inquired as to the status of the company and its plans. Suspecting it might be a promotion scheme to obtain money from film-struck people, Crouch talked the story over with Jack Lawrence, of the Los Angeles Examiner staff, and asked him to investigate the records of the company.

This was done, and Lawrence discovered that Wharff, the vice-president, had served a term in the city jail for operating a fake radio concern. Binney, it was alleged, had served time in various jails throughout the country and Canada. At the time of the interview, Crouch had questioned the officials as to their plans, and the discrepancies in their story prompted further investigation.

Detectives Marshall and Swan, Deputy Corporation Commissioner Frederick W. Bahls and State Corporation Auditor George Castle were notified of the findings by Lawrence and Crouch, and they decided that a thorough investigation should be made. They asked Crouch to go to the firm with Pierson, offering to supply the money so that Pierson might obtain the role in the picture. If possible, they were to obtain samples of the stock certificates. While Crouch and Pierson were being "high pressured," the officers walked in and made the arrest. The papers, business records, stock certificates, contracts and other properties were seized by the police for investigation.

When confronted by the law, Binney first put up a bold front, but broke under the rapid-fire questioning of the officers and admitted he had taken various sums of money from numerous individuals, giving them shares of stock, unsecured notes, and an offer for a role in the picture. He admitted also that, while he owned a large share of the company's stock, he did not have one cent of cash invested in the company and neither had Wharff.

Assets Almost Nil

The cash assets of the company amounted to a very few dollars and the only property was some motion picture equipment listed as lights, cameras, reflectors, etc. Just where this property was located Binney failed to mention. It was disclosed during the investigation that Wharff, the vice-president and treasurer, had not been paid his weekly salary of $35 for the past three weeks, and that the company finances were, at the time, very low.

When Crouch and Pierson first visited Binney's offices, Binney is alleged to have stated that Pierson was to receive a salary of $35 a week as an actor. Binney had previously told Pierson that he would pay him $50 a week, while Wharff stated that $75 would be his weekly wage. The men told of having 35,000 feet of "spectacular" film, which they had purchased from the government. This film, they stated, was obtained for their exclusive use and had numerous scenes of buffalo hunting and Indian fights.

They said they were going to use process shots to bring members of the cast into these scenes, showing them hunting buffalo and fighting Indians. Binney is said to have stated that he had signed Don Terry, film player, for the male lead in the picture, and that Aileen Ray, screen actress, intended to sign to play the feminine lead. Binney stated that Terry had, as had the others in the cast, invested in the company. However, when questioned by the police officials, Terry stated that he had not invested a cent in the concern.

Miss Ray, when questioned, said she had been offered the part but had immediately turned it down. The other members of the cast, with the exception of one or two character people, are mostly unknowns in the film business. On the first visit Binney told Crouch and Pierson that Reeves Eason was to direct the production. The second visit, however, brought out the statement that Neal Hart was to serve in that capacity.

Binney allegedly claimed that the financing for the picture was coming from a rich rancher of Texas, on whose estate the major portion of the outdoor scenes would be shot. Other exteriors would be shot on the 20-acre ranch which the company is said to have owned near Victorville, Calif., and for interiors, space in local studios would be rented, he is credited with stating.

Incorporated in Nevada

The company is reported to have been incorporated under the laws of the State of Nevada for $100,000. The stock issue, it is alleged, was underwritten by a "Campbell investment company of Omaha," and stock was at the present time being sold throughout the Middle West. All of the stock was issued from a Nevada office, which made it unnecessary to have a California license. When money was invested by those offered parts in pictures, they were offered the personal stock owned by Binney and Wharff, and given a six-months' note for the amount invested, this making the deal apparently legal, although no cash or financial security backed the transaction, investigators charge.

The men, following the arrest were lodged in jail and refused bail. The district attorney's office then started to question the various individuals who had invested money. One woman of about 50 years of age, who had been promised a leading role in the picture as her initial screen venture, said that she did not wish to sign a complaint because she would lose her chance in pictures. Since the alleged producers have been in custody, numerous individuals who claimed to have lost money in other ventures sponsored by this pair are said to have made statements to the police regarding their losses.

When asked what release the picture would have, Binney stated it would be of such magnitude that it would be the best plan to roadshow it throughout the country. Various other people were interviewed by MOTION PICTURE NEWS concerning talks they had with Binney. A comparison of these interviews showed many discrepancies in the producer's story of his film activities.

Binney stated that for 20 years he had been an important figure in the motion picture and amusement world; that he was formerly an actor with Mack Sennett; a director, writer and producer of motion pictures and had a most esteemed and untarnished record as a film personage. A query of some officials in the major companies failed to bring out any information from them, as to just what he had achieved.

Costly Ducats

Ottawa—Receipt of two complimentary reserved tickets and an engraved invitation for the opening performance of the Capitol, Halifax, N. S., Friday evening, October 31, has cost Manager Joe Franklin of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, just $50 in cold cash. Franklin, a former Halifax exhibitor, felt the old town urge and went out and bought himself the necessary railway ticket which represented an investment of the half a yard. Franklin opened the last theatre to be built in Halifax, 16 years ago.

Allied to Enter All Key Points Before January

Washington—Allied States Association's expansion program, begun several weeks ago, is to be carried out with renewed vigor so that the first of the year will see the organization entrenched in practically every key city of the nation. The expansion is being carried out under direction of President Abram F. Myers.

Already Allied units are operating in 20 trade zones, with 14 or 15 additional key headquarters soon to be opened.

The organization is adopting a principle new to organization work. While each unit will be self-governing and self-sustaining, close watch will be kept upon each new zone organization formed, with the paid secretary in charge of the individual unit responsible for its development and efficient operation. Thus a home office system of supervision similar to that employed by distributors, will be relied upon to speed organization work in each instance.

Many Cities To Be Visited

Cities scheduled for visits by Allied organizers within the next few months are understood to be New York, Buffalo, Albany, New Haven, Cleveland, Kansas City, Memphis, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Washington, Omaha, Charlotte and San Francisco.

Units now affiliated with Allied, together with their headquarters, president and secretaries, are: Northwest Theatre Owners Association (Minneapolis), Bennie Berger, president; W. A. Steffs, general manager.

Allied Theatre Owners of Michigan (Detroit), Allan Johnson, president; H. M. Richey, general manager.

Allied Theatre Owners of Texas (Dallas), Will Horwitz, president; B. H. Haralson, general manager.

M. P. T. O. of Southern California (Los Angeles), L. L. Bard, president; W. E. Knotts, secretary and business manager.

Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana (Indianapolis), Charles R. Metzger, general manager and attorney.

Montana Exhibitors Association (Butte), E. P. White, president; John A. Gaven, secretary.

M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin (Milwaukee), Fred S. Meyer, president; Steve Bauer, general manager.

M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia (Pittsburgh), Anthony Jim, president; Fred Herrington, secretary.

Intermountain Theatre Owners Association (Salt Lake City), J. J. Gillett, president; Homer Holgren, secretary and general counsel.

M. P. T. O. of Colorado and Rocky Mountain Region (Denver), H. E. Huffman, president; Tom Sullivan, secretary and general manager.

Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New England (Boston), Nathan Yamins, president; Ernest H. Horstmann, secretary.

M. P. T. O. of Maryland (Baltimore), Charles E. Nolte, president; William E. Stumpf, secretary.

M. P. T. O. of New Jersey (Newton), Sidney E. Samuelson, president.

Allied Invades 'Cincy' Zone in New Expansion

Cincinnati—Continuing the expansion program which has for its object the formation of a unit in every key city where the organization is not now represented, Allied States Association has formed Allied Theatre Owners of Southern Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia. Frederic Strief, veteran exchangeman, is business manager of the new organization, with headquarters here.

Exhibitors who attended the organization meeting are:

Henry Levy, Elmer Shard, Phil Miller, Charles Fine, Mrs. A. Schwenker, Andy Hettescheimer, Miss Doris Stecker and Carl Brown, all of Cincinnati; John Kaiser and Earl Myers, Chillicothe; Harry Silver and Nat Turburg, Hamilton; Ed. Keene, Oxford; Fred Rowlands, Real Neth, William Pullin, L. Goldsoll, Columbus; Theodore Chiffas, Middleton, Ohio; Lamothe Smith, Huntington, W. Va.; P. Barrett, Parkersburg, W. Va.; Charles Brown, Middleborough, Ky.; J. Guilfoile, Wellston, who represents 30 theatres.

Al Steffes and Aaron Saperstein conducted the meeting. Elmer Schard, manager of the Monta Vista theatre here, was appointed secretary-treasurer and Charles Meyers, Chillicothe exhibitor, was named chairman. Offices will be opened in the Film Building.

Pantages Must Go to High Court on Appeal

Los Angeles—Alexander Pantages must appear before the Supreme Court in December to press his claim for a new trial. Recently, the Appellate Court granted Pantages a new trial. He is under prison sentence for an alleged attack on a dancer.

Van Hyning Warns Allied States Not To Slur Motives

Kansas City—Reflecting the declared attitude of the M. P. T. O. A., that there is room for two exhibitor organization in the field, the M. P. T. O. of Kansas and western Missouri will not object to invasion of this territory by Allied States Association, but the organization does resent any attempt by Allied to impugn its motives in any respect.

It all came about through a statement in Allied's house organ, to the effect that the local organization cut dues to offset threatened invasion by Allied, which incidentally is scheduled to materialize in the near future. E. Van Hyning, president of the local unit, has called upon Allied for a retraction of the article which he says "conveys impressions so erroneous and prejudicial" to his organization that he fails to see how it could have been printed except by oversight.

No Quarrel With Allied

"In an industry so wide-spread and important as that in which we are engaged there is certainly room for two such associations as ours, and it would seem to be the part of wisdom no less than the part of common courtesy for publications issued by any branch of the business to devote their energies to promoting the general welfare rather than to incite the illwill of one group toward another," Hyning's protest says. "Certainly the organization which I have the honor to represent has no quarrel with Allied or any other organization engaged in popularizing and building up the great industry in which we are all vitally and equally interested. We are doing our best to build up our own organization, of course, but we are not devoting a dollar of our money or a minute of our time to tearing down Allied or any other organization. In the course of the discussion which resulted in a determination to reduce our dues, the Allied was not mentioned, nor so far as I know, so much as thought of. We were considering our problems, not yours, and we reduced our dues for the very simple reason that we believed the welfare of our Association and thereby the general good of the picture industry would be advanced by such action.

Financing Own Business

"As to the manner in which our Association is financed, I do not know that that is anybody's business but our own—but there is no secret about it. We are financed in large measure by the Affiliated Theatres, even as are several of your units, a fact which we are glad to have known for the reason that it is an evidence of the importance the heads of the great theatre chains attach to our Association, and at the same time assures our Association the stability which only an ample and certain income could give it. But the contribution which comes to us from this source does not carry with it any domination of our board or any authority or power to dictate to that board, or to any individual member of our association. Proof of that is found in the fact that the president of the association is a small town independent."

Iowa Allied Unit Meets to Battle On Protection

Omaha — Opposition to protection and zoning is the reported object of a meeting of Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa to be held this week at Onawa, Ia. A meeting was held last week at Cherokee, Ia.

Local film circles anticipate no excitement over the anti-zoning plans. Meanwhile, there is speculation as to when Allied States Association will go through with its plan to establish a unit here. The Allied organizers were expected to be on hand during the recent convention of the M. P. T. O. A. of Nebraska and Western Iowa, but changed tactics and did not show up.

M. A. Lightman, president of the M. P. T. O. A., came to the convention to help hold members of the existing unit in line, in the event Allied's organizers were on hand.

Lust New President Of D. C. Exhibitors

Washington—Sidney Lust, film exchange and theatre owner here, has succeeded A. Julian Brylawski as president of the M. P. T. O. of Nebraska and Western Iowa, post Brylawski has held for eight years.

Election of the new president of the organization took place at a recent meeting when Brylawski announced that he felt he had held the office long enough and that the time had come for him to step down and let another run the organization. Other officers of the association will be elected at the next meeting to be held soon.

Ohio M. P. T. O. Meet to Fight Adverse Attack

Columbus—The tenth annual convention of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio will be held here at the Deshler-Wallick Hotel on Nov. 18 and 19. Subjects of vital interest to be discussed, according to notices sent out by Business Manager P. J. Wood, include zoning and protection, score charges, and adverse legislation which threatens to put over an amusement tax.

Open St. Louis Office Elliott Takes Charge

St. Louis—Allied States Association has opened quarters here to handle the business of the recently formed local unit. Arthur Elliott, formerly RKO exchange manager at Detroit, will be business manager of the new Allied unit, which is rapidly rounding out details of its organization.

Constructive

Detroit — Credit H. M. Richey and the Michigan exhibitor unit with a constructive step to relieve the present unemployment crisis here. Members of the organization are donating ten per cent of receipts one night per week for use by the municipal government in alleviating distress.

A Sticker

Cleveland—Double featuring, which proved the monkey wrench in the machinery of the Chicago protection meetings, may be the stumbling block in the local zoning conferences.

Independent theatre owners have asked for a 43-day protection limit on double feature pictures. Affiliated theatre owners presented a 105 day protection plan. Discussion brought about a compromise, with affiliated theatre owners agreeing to 64 days protection of double feature pictures, and independent theatre owners asking for 57 days protection.

Cleveland Makes Third Attempt to Solve Protection

Cleveland—"On again, off again" pretty well sums up the history to date of the proposed zoning schedules for this territory. For the third time exhibitors and distributors are at work trying to untie the protection knot.

The first plan accepted by the exhibitor members of the zoning committee was rejected by the local distributor members. The second plan, which was accepted by both the exhibitor and distributor members, was disregarded by the Hays office because affiliated theatre owners were not represented on the committee. Conferring on the new plan are Martin P. Smith, chairman of the unaffiliated exhibitors committee; P. J. Wood, secretary of the committee, all the members of the Cleveland Film Board of Trade, and, representing the affiliated theatres, W. J. Finney and Fred Desberg, representing Loew's; J. E. Firnkoess, representing RKO; S. Dannenberg, of Buffalo, representing Publix, and Phil Gleichman and Earl Bell, representing Warners. No action was taken at this meeting on any of the affiliated demands in situations in which they are interested.

Before the meeting started, Martin Smith asked that a definite method of procedure be defined in writing so that any plan, now evolved, shall not suffer a like fate as the two preceding plans.

It was definitely stated by Al Mertz, chairman, that the plan must be submitted to the sales managers of each distributing company for approval and ratification before it may become effective.

2 Managers Taken for Ride; Lose $724

Omaha—Two suburban theatre managers here were taken for a ride and robbed of their combined receipts of $724 by a lone bandit as they were on their way to a bank at midnight. Ray H. Mason, Tivoli, lost $347 and K. L. Peter, of the Roseland, surrendered $377. The houses are located in the same block. The thief escaped after taking the showmen for a wild ride in the country.

'Childlike Cuss Words' Censored, Carroll Moans

Boston—Earl Carroll, stage producer, paid a visit to Boston and before departing paid his respects to the Boston censorship rules in no uncertain terms.

He asserted Boston is subjecting its theatrical shows to a group of people who seldom attend a performance and yet it can see no harm in the system.

"I am perplexed by a system of censorship which allows one theatre to do and say things which are prevented in another. It is inconsistency which is not for the best interests of the theatres.

"My opinion is that censorship in Boston is not sincere, because the city censor plays to the churches and not to the theatre-going public. Nothing against good taste should ever be shown in a theatre.

"I cannot understand the city's attitude when the censor forces chorus girls to wear stockings during their dancing, with natural damage to the dancing, when he allows them to go stockingless on the streets.

"Child-like cuss words are stricken out of some shows, yet much more profane words are allowed to go in others. Such censorship as Boston practices, with entire responsibility resting on one man, is hurting the entire theatrical business."

Disagree on 'Common Law' Rights; Draw for Answer

Hollywood—Rights to "Common Law" were bought by Charles R. Rogers in a unique manner. He owned the dialogue, play and television rights, but couldn't make it as M-G-M owned the silent rights. Slips were put into a hat and in the draw Rogers won, paying the price agreed upon by both parties previous to the draw. He will start production soon for RKO.

Warners Planning New House at Washington

Washington—A new Avenue Grand theatre is to be built on the site of 654-656 Pennsylvania Ave., directly across the street from the present theatre of that name in the Warner chain by that organization to seat 2,500 persons. It will be an atmospheric house and cost about $500,000.

Opens Royal Theatre

Salem—C. V. Rakestraw, who owns two local houses, has leased the Royal, closed since last January, and is now operating it with sound programs.

Britain's Best

London—Alfred Hitchcock, director of "Murder," has been awarded the Film Weekly certificate for the best production of the current season.

RKO-B. & K. in Advertising War On Chicago Front

Chicago—Climaxing the most recent of a series of tilts between the respective advertising departments of RKO and Balaban & Katz, revolving about the merits of the stage shows presented in the theatres of both circuits, was a blatant message in the Chicago Tribune authored by RKO which, in addition to implying that B. & K. was misleading the public in its advertisements of stage presentations, also described the Publix stage shows as "obsolete" forms of amusement.

The present altercation began with the withdrawal of vaudeville from the RKO State-Lake two weeks ago. B. & K. seized upon it as an opportunity to flaunt its stage presentations at the Chicago, Oriental and outlying de luxe houses. Accordingly, trailers were run in all theatres calling attention to the Publix stage shows and the personal appearances of popular picture stars at the B. & K. houses. Suspension signs advertising "huge Publix stage shows" were appended to marquees of the circuit's Loop theatres. The trailers and occasional newspaper copy proclaimed that "nowhere else can you see the movie personages and lavish stage productions" offered by Publix.

Ads as Ammunition

RKO, just inaugurating a 12 weeks' booking of big name acts at the Palace, countered with display space in the dailies setting forth the Palace policy and its 12 weeks' bookings. At that time. Jack Hess, western advertising director for RKO, informed Motion Picture News that the counter advertising would continue until the trailers were discontinued at the B. & K. houses and the marquee signs came down. The climax of the tilt came with a message in the Tribune.

"Don't be misled," the advertisement warned in bold-face. "The RKO Palace Theatre is the only Loop theatre with RKO vaudeville. Certain Loop theatrical interests," the ad continued, "have caused a message to be placed upon the screens of their theatres worded in such a manner as to lead the public to believe they are playing RKO vaudeville and that no other Loop theatre is presenting flesh and blood entertainment. This is untrue. Hundreds of thousands of Chicagoans know that the Palace theatre is bringing week after week mighty stars in person who are unobtainable by others." The ad proceeds to name prominent acts booked for the Palace, and continues: "These celebrities appear in a full act; not in 'presentations' with 'boop-a-doop' girls, the same old scenery and a master of ceremonies. This obsolete form of amusement is rapidly disappearing from Chicago; having been eliminated from the North Side months ago, and from the West Side two days ago."

The latter refers to B. & K.'s withdrawal of stage presentations from its Granada theatre, de luxe North Side house, last summer, and from the Marbro, de luxe West Side spot, last week. The reference to the public being led to believe that theatres other than the Palace were playing RKO vaude is believed to refer to the Chicago theatre's stage show of a week ago, which was titled "Varieties," seeming to imply a vaudeville presentation. This bill and the presence of professional ball players at the Oriental led a local picture critic to surmise in print that B. & K. houses were going vaudeville.

No other foundation for the RKO statement appears to exist.

Meanwhile the circuits foot the bills and the newspapers, trailer and sign makers sit back and smile.

"Chi's" Gats Bark

DON'T BE MISLED — THE R-K-O PALACE THEATRE IS THE ONLY LOOP THEATRE WITH R-K-O VAUDEVILLE

Certain loop theatrical interests have caused a message to be placed upon the screens of their theatres worded in such a manner as to lead the public to believe they are playing R-K-O vaudeville and that no other loop theatre is presenting flesh and blood entertainment.

THIS IS UNTRUE. Hundreds of thousands of Chicagoans know that the Palace theatre is bringing week after week mighty stars in person who are unobtainable by others. THE FOUR MARX BROTHERS, GUS VAN (OF VAN AND SCHENCK), JACK PEARL, TOM PATRICOLA, MORAN AND MACK, and the WEAVER BROTHERS AND ELVIRY are among those who will appear in the near future. These celebrities appear in a FULL ACT; not in "presentations" with "boop-a-doop" girls, the same old scenery, and a master of ceremonies. This obsolete form of amusement is rapidly disappearing from Chicago, having been eliminated from the North Side months ago, and from the West Side two days ago.

THE PALACE THEATRE THIS WEEK HAS THE FINEST STAGE ENTERTAINMENT THAT R-K-O OR ANYBODY ELSE EVER BROUGHT TO THE PUBLIC. IT IS HEREBY GUARANTEED AS SUCH BY R-K-O, THE LARGEST THEATRICAL ORGANIZATION IN THE WORLD, WITH REPRESENTATION FROM COAST TO COAST.

DON'T MISS THE PALACE SHOW THIS WEEK!

Chicago—Via the advertising columns of the Chicago newspapers, RKO and B. & K. are taking regular socks at each other. Reading the above ad will explain B. & K.'s latest peeve.

Niemeyer Quits After Brief Oklahoma Stay

Oklahoma—Harry Niemeyer, who recently came here from St. Louis to handle publicity for the local Warner chain, has resigned to become publicity director of the Orpheum, St. Louis. He is succeeded here by Todd Ferguson.

"Mike" Joins "U"

Cleveland—"Mike" Simon, former local Paramount branch manager, has joined the Universal sales force as special representative with headquarters here.

Stage Shows in Portland, Seattle To Be Dropped

Portland—Stage shows at the Paramount theatre are being discontinued Friday both in Portland and Seattle, following the engagement of Horace Heidt and his Californians. For the present stage bands will be continued, supplementing the talker programs.

Stage shows will be continued at San Francisco and Los Angeles. Increase in business at the Paramount here and in Seattle has not justified the expense of bringing these shows to the Pacific Northwest, it is said.

Report that Fanchon & Marco units would soon be a thing of the past at the Fox Broadway was set at rest by Floyd Maxwell, division manager of Fox West Coast Theatres for Oregon. It was admitted that some basis had existed for the rumor, due to discussions with unions serving the theatre, but everything has now been settled satisfactorily and the stage shows will be continued, with a program calling for even bigger and better units. This also aims to set at rest the other report that the Fox West Coast might take over Paramount Publix houses on the Pacific Coast.

Phil Lampkin, master of ceremonies at the Portland Paramount, is being continued with his band for six weeks. Stage hands at the house have received six weeks' notice.

Acrobat Seriously Hurt In Mishap at Seattle

Seattle—Attempting to complete a difficult part of the routine in the acrobatic act of "The Banta Trio" at the local Paramount, Philip Banta, key man of the act, missed his footing on his partner's shoulders and fell to the stage, fracturing a bone. Quick action on the part of Milt Franklyn, master of ceremonies, and the stage crew resulted in a continuance of the show without knowledge on the part of the capacity audience that Banta had been seriously injured.

Banta was rushed to the Swedish Hospital by his brother, Benny, and his wife, Esther, the other members of the act. He is showing progress at the present time, it is announced, and as soon as possible will be moved to Los Angeles, where the family make their home. The act, a part of the "Take It Easy" revue on Publix time, was omitted from appearances during the remainder of the engagement.

Second Portland House Victim of Stench Bomb

Portland—For the second time in a week a Portland theatre was the victim of "stink bombs" with the Fox Broadway object of vandals. Some 200 persons left the show (with refunds at 60 cents per), though the major portion of the audience remained, due to the large air space and ventilating system in the theatre. A similar outrage was perpetrated at the Capitol earlier in the week.

"Yes," replied Lee disgustedly, "I suppose they're out to lunch with most of the Hollywood producers."

$50 License Fee On Pee Wees At Harrisburg

Harrisburg, Pa.—Annual license fee of $50 on indoor and outdoor miniature golf courses has been levied by the city council. Four courses which have been operating on Sundays in defiance of the "blue" laws, have discontinued Sunday operation at the request of the mayor.

First Simple Simon to Be Made by Blumenstock

Mort Blumenstock has been signed to direct Louis Simon in the first series of two-reel comedies to be produced by Simple Simon Comedies, states Mack Stark, general manager.

Blumenstock left Paramount recently after two years at the eastern studio, during which time he directed 40 shorts, starring Eddie Cantor, Irene Bordoni, Lulu McConnell, Tom Howard, Smith and Dale and others. He introduced the current Broadway star, Ethel Merman, to the screen in a short for which he provided both the story and the settings. He is credited by the Paramount studio with the direction of "The Return of Sherlock Holmes" and the co-direction of the last Jeanne Eagles picture, "Jealousy."

In directing Louis Simon, Blumenstock will be assisted by his brother, Sid, who was associated with him in this capacity at the Paramount studio.

Telegraph Company to Handle B'way Tickets

Tickets for reserved seat houses on Broadway are to be handled by the Postal Telegraph Co. on a flat surcharge of 50 cents. The company will take and fill orders and deliver the tickets to the box-office for the 50-cent fee. The move followed a jam between the League of New York Theatres, formed to eliminate ticket speculation, and 16 broker members, who resigned in a body when their demand for a 75-cent surcharge privilege was refused.

Better Product Hurts Wilmington Pee Wees

Wilmington, Del.—John P. McLaughlin, service manager of Wilmington theatres, says miniature golf courses are not hampering the attendance of the Queen, although officials find that a slight drop in attendance is being shown in the other houses.

McLaughlin said that since Aug. 29 attendance at the Queen has shown an increase and attributes the increase to better product.

Cracksmen Fail to Open Winthrop Theatre Safe

Winthrop, Mass.—Robbery of the safe of the Winthrop theatre was foiled when burglars were apparently frightened away. Charles Clark, assistant manager, found the dial of the safe hammered off when he opened the theatre, but the door had not been opened.

Stars in New Series

Commercial Body Intervenes When Strike Threatens

Hoquiam, Wash.—Faced with a decrease in entertainment facilities, the Hoquiam Chamber of Commerce has made a strong effort to prevent closing of the Seventh Street as a result of a controversy between the Fox West Coast management and the operators' union.

The projectionists insist that two men must be maintained in the projection booth, while Cecil Gwinn, manager of Fox theatres in the Grays Harbor district, maintains that only one operator is necessary to satisfactory and safe projection of sound pictures.

The Fox organization operates more than 50 theatres in Washington, using only one projectionist in each booth.

Woodlaw Sues for Writ Against Operators

Portland—Suit has been brought by Woodlaw Investment Co., operators of the Circle, asking a permanent injunction restraining the operators' union from picketing the theatre. A temporary injunction against the picketing was granted by Judge Tucker. Since that time the union has given up its request for two operators in the booths of second-run theatres, but is asking that the one man be paid $90 a week for six hours instead of $70, the present scale.

Guilty in Bombing

San Francisco—Found guilty of placing a fuse bomb in a San Jose theatre, Jack Sutton, San Francisco picture operator, will soon learn what his punishment is to be. Sutton waived jury trial when arraigned before Judge Percy O'Connor.

RKO Freak Off To Smash Start In Detroit Run

Detroit—Huge business done by Amos 'n' Andy's picture, "Check and Double Check," at the RKO Downtown will send the Radio freak attraction into a second week and probably a third, despite the fact that theatre business here has been marked terrible for some months.

Fifi Dorsay is showing heavy drawing power at the Fox coming through on a second week. "Hell's Angels" is taking the air at the Shubert, but its exit is due to previous bookings. The picture has exceeded the guarantee of $12,000 each week of the four it has played the house.

Fifi Dorsay proved a top-side attraction last week with capacity audiences crowding the Fox theatre at every performance. It was estimated that 1,400 people passed through the doors each hour during the week. The second anniversary show, and "Scotland Yard" with Edmund Lowe, helped to hang up a $40,000 gross.

Ideal theatre weather, with two "snappy" days to drive the customers inside, did not help local attendance much, due more or less to a poor assortment of screen and stage entertainment. Norma Talmadge's "DuBarry," thrown into the United Artists house the first of the week, flopped feebly, with Winnie Lightner's "Life of the Party" gradually fading away.

Estimated takings:

Dallas Firm Expands

Dallas—Oak Lawn Amusement Co., operating the Oak Lawn, a neighborhood house, is planning a $50,000 house, seating 1,000, at Wycliffe and Oak Lawn Aves. Both houses are to be operated by the company. They will be about one mile apart on the same thoroughfare.

Broadway Gives Wide Screen Go-By, Grosses Say

Wide screen doesn't mean much to Broadway fans, it is indicated by the reception given Realife and Grandeur at the Capitol and Roxy. Realife grabbed only slightly more than $76,000 when presented at the Capitol with "Billy, the Kid," while Grandeur at the Roxy this week, with "The Big Trail" the attraction, showed no evidence of soaring toward a record, despite a big splurge in advertising.

The Capitol business is only slightly better than average, and the Roxy in the first five days of the week was regarded as satisfactory, but not big, in view of the special equipment needed to project Grandeur.

"War Nurse," new run film at the Astor doesn't look like it will stay for long.

Attention was directed this week to "Murder," British picture, at the Cohan. The picture is showing box-office strength and the notices have been good.

Estimated takings:

"WAR NURSE" (M-G-M)
ASTOR—(1,120) 50c-75c-$1-$1.50-$2, 3 days. Other attractions: "Flip, the Frog" (M-G-M). "Dogway Melody" (M-G-M). Gross: $11,000. Picture rapped and start not so hot.

"BILLY, THE KID" (M-G-M)
CAPITOL—(4,700) 35c-50c-75c-$1.50, 7 days. Other attractions: News, Capitol presentation. Gross: $76,262. Only slightly above average; customers seemingly indifferent to wide films.

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN" (U.A.)
CENTRAL—(1,490) $1-$2, 7 days, 9th week. Other attractions: "Dollar Dizzy" (M-G-M), "The Zampa." Gross: $16,085. Only slight drop over last week but run near end.

"LOOSE ENDS" (B. I. P.)
GEO. M. COHAN—(1,500) 35c-50c-75c, 7 days. Other attractions: "Leather Pushers" (Univ.). Gross: Around $5,000. Good second week for British film.

"HELL'S ANGELS" (U. A.)
(Playing simultaneously at the Criterion and Gaiety)
CRITERION—(850) $1-$2-$2.50, 7 days, 10th week. Other attractions: None. Gross: $15,980. It won't be long now.

EMBASSY—ALL NEWSREEL
EMBASSY—(598) 25, 7 days. Straight newsreel. Gross: $9,616. This house usually holds to around this figure.

"HELL'S ANGELS" (U.A.)
(Playing simultaneously at the Criterion and Gaiety)
GAIETY—(808) $1-$1.50-$2-$2.50, 7 days, 10th week. Other attractions: None. Gross: $12,750. Just fair. Due to fold soon.

"HALF SHOT AT SUNRISE" (RKO)
GLOBE—(1,050) 35c-50c-75c, 7 days, second week. Other attractions: "Hidden Ball" (Pathe), "Monkey Melodies" (Columbia), "Voice of Hollywood" (Tiffany), news. Gross: $16,800. Big drop over opening week, but not bad, considering.

"OUTWARD BOUND" (Warners)
HOLLYWOOD—(1,600), 50c-75c-$1-$1.50, 5th week. Other attractions: "Looney Tunes," "Helen Broderick," "Martinelli" (all Vitaphone). Gross: $17,939. Showing strength at this figure.

WARNERS—(1,490) $1-$1.50, 7 days, 9th week. Other attractions: "The Legacy," "Believe It or Not" (Vitaphone). Gross: $11,481. Should be out at this figure.

"OFFICE WIFE" (Warners)
WINTER GARDEN—(1,493) 35c-50c-$1, 4th week. Other attractions: Eddie Foy, Mark Hellinger, Walter Winchell" (all Vitaphone), news. Gross: $27,394. Holding up well.

Smart Comedy

Frederick Lonsdale's dialogue, as usual and, in this case, smarter than smart, reinforced by a fine English cast of four, of which Tom Walls is the ringleader, makes "On Approval" a really amusing situation comedy.

Walls isn't known in this country. That's a pity. After taking a peek at this English-made production from the studios of British and Dominion Pictures, it becomes easy to understand why the man is so popular in London. He has a suavity, an air of good breeding and a flair of comedy that are pleasurable to watch.

"On Approval" will appeal plentifully to those who like sophistication in their motion pictures. For big town showings, it's particularly there—provided some American distributor has the good sense to take it on.

KANN

Clara-$18,000, Gloria-$11,200, In Des Moines

Des Moines—Gloria Swanson and Clara Bow staged a bit of competition running next door to one another at the Paramount and the DesMoines. Each ran the week and the Paramount grossed almost twice the Des Moines intake. A considerable difference in overhead and in average gross at the two theatres makes a difference in the rating, but the 120% at the Paramount shows that Clara Bow is running very well. The story of "Her Wedding Night" is light, but it had plenty of laughs and proved to be a very good audience picture. Support was good. And a very good stage show with five acts of vaudeville.

Gloria Swanson in "What a Widow" rated 130%, with a gross of $11,120. Gloria has a strong personal following. Helen Twelvetrees made the individual success at the Orpheum. This little star is coming rapidly to the front and with good support in "Her Man" she scored 150%. Showing for four days this gave the picture a gross of $6,000, very good for the last half of the week. The first half with "Outside the Law" ran to average business with $5,000. At the Strand "Down to Hell," advertised as showing the star of "All Quiet," rated 160%. The gross was $2,200 and shows business at the Strand as very good. The last half with "Scotland Yard" with Edmund Lowe and Joan Bennett scored 140%, very nice indeed for the last half of the week.

Estimated takings:

"HER WEDDING NIGHT" (Para.)
PARAMOUNT—(1,700), 25c-35c-60c, 7 days. Other attractions: News, stage hand with five acts of vaude. Gross: $18,000. Rating: 120%.

"WHAT A WIDOW" (Para.)
DES MOINES—(1,600) 25c-35c-60c, 7 days. Other attractions: News, "Camera Thrill" (Para. scenic), "The Fatal Card" (Para. comedy). Gross: $11,200. Rating: 130%.

Amos 'n' Andy A Sensation for Portland House

Portland—With an auspicious preview, clever exploitation and double-spread newspaper advertising, Amos 'n' Andy's "Check and Double Check" swept away all existing box-office records at the RKO Orpheum, with four acts of vaudeville.

Horace Heidt's Californians were the high spots at the Portland Paramount, grabbing second position, and augmented excellent screen fare headed by Ann Harding in "Girl of the Golden West." Night football took some of the grosses.

Estimated takings:

"CHECK AND DOUBLE CHECK" (RKO)
RKO ORPHEUM—(1,700). 25c-35c-60c, 7 days. Other attractions: Jack Osterman plus four acts vaudeville, news. Gross: $19,000. Rating: 200%.

Sheehan Heads Mayfair Club

Hollywood—Winfield R. Sheehan, Fox vice president and general manager, is new president of the Mayfair Club, social organization. Other officers are: Conrad Nagel, vice president; Irving Thalberg, secretary; M. C. Levee, Treasurer; Margaret Ettinger, assistant secretary, and Jack L. Warner, Fred Niblo, B. P. Schulberg and Sid Grauman, directors, in addition to the officers.

Changes Talker Equipment

Tampa—The Seminole, neighborhood house, operated by Publix, is the latest house here to throw out the old sound equipment and install new. The change over was made in such a way that the house had to close but one day for the final hook-up. C. D. Cooley, an old timer in show business here, has been managing the house for the last year.

Start Sick Fund

Cleveland—Al Mertz, RKO branch manager and president of the Cleveland Film Board of Trade, and I. J. Schmertz, Fox branch manager, have been named a committee of two to arrange for an entertainment, proceeds of which will go to a sick relief fund for local members of the industry.

Schram Leases Bijou

New Philadelphia—Fred Schram has leased the Bijou theatre, closed for several months, and has appointed A. B. Abel as house manager.

Coast Hypnotized By Amos 'n' Andy To $31,000 Tune

Los Angeles—It was all Amos 'n' Andy in town this week, their "Check and Double Check," hooked to the sensational national campaign on the picture, running away from all competition to grab $31,000 at the Orpheum. This is a rating of 190% and an all-time record for the theatre.

Up went the Orpheum grosses over last week-end, with other downtown houses taking it on the chin, while the crowds flocked to the Orpheum. The house got $12,500 over the week-end, sensational any way you look at it, particularly when "A Lady Surrenders" did only $10,500 the preceding week.

Meanwhile, the Carthay Circle spurted upward with "Just Imagine," backed by a heavy exploitation plug. "The Big Trail" slipped at the Chinese and strong advertising is being resorted to in an effort to maintain grosses. Pop price houses on the boulevard sagged, the Egyptian getting the best rating.

Estimated takings:

Return Runs for "Whoopee"

Cleveland—"Whoopee" is now playing a round of return engagements in first-run theatres in this district, according to Charles Kranz, United Artists branch manager. Loew's Valentine, Toledo, will play a return booking of one week, starting Nov. 1. The first run of "Whoopee" was a one-week engagement at the Valentine, starting Sept. 27.

Deep Stuff

Having seen his "Escape" filmed, John Galsworthy has given his consent to the screening of two of his best plays, "Justice" and "Loyalties."

Preparing for the screen these three high class dramas should help to raise the standard of cinema plays. The pictures adapted from the better stage plays are the salvation of the talkies. In fact, the only good talkies I have seen thus far this season were "Holiday" and "Let Us Be Gay." The worst talkie I have seen was a Western picture, which had what was evidently an original scenario. I cannot recall either the title of the picture or the leading player. Yes, it was as bad as that.

Thus, instead of the talkies killing the legitimate theatre, the latter is saving the talkies.

"Half Shot" Pulls In Snowbound Putters for 125%

Omaha—Though the first frost and snowfall folded up all miniature golf courses for the week, it did not have the expected favorable reaction on all downtown box-office grosses. "Half Shot at Sunrise" at the Orpheum got most of the idle putters along with $20,000 for a 125% week.

"Heads Up" at the World hit 95% for $10,450, but Buddy Rogers should have done better. At the Paramount, "Girl of the Golden West" failed to equal Ann Harding's previous grosses with $7,650 (90%).

"The Santa Fe Trail," first half at the State, pulled $2,475, which is 110% rating. Last half, "Men of the North," dropped to 90%, bringing $2,250. Weather was somewhat wintry all week.

Estimated takings:

Salesman Now Exhibitor

Milwaukee—Jack A. Kraker, formerly salesman for Paramount, has taken over the Greenfield theatre, local south side neighborhood house which figured in bombings earlier in the year, from Columbia Enterprises. The name of the theatre has been changed to the Pastime.

"Office Wife" at $27,200 Leader At Minneapolis

Minneapolis—Strong attractions enabled local theatres to make the grade, in the face of current conditions, although there was nothing unusual about takings. "The Office Wife" grossed $27,200 for 80% and the city's leader at the Minnesota.

A strange factor enters into the situation in considering hard times and box-office take. The Minnesota, Orpheum and Century find their clientele still holding jobs and able to pay the relatively modest prices asked. A look at the matinee business, however, reveals a noticeable percentage of the temporarily or permanently unemployed using the theatres as a sedative against their troubles and worries or possibly as the best available shelter with assurance of keeping out of trouble.

Minneapolis business reacts more slowly than that of most other cities to unsettled or depressing conditions. The town doesn't go on spending sprees, nor does it squeeze the dimes till they pop when things go badly. This accounts for the fact that many individuals and some good-sized families who can't be quite sure of the winter's coal bill are still to be found going to theatres.

Another theatre was added to the first run string during the week with the reopening of the Seventh Street, formerly the home of the Orpheum circuit for extended runs of certain types of feature pictures. The opener is "Africa Speaks" from the Columbia list.

Wilmington—The appearance of Rod LaRocque and Vilma Blanky in "Cherries Are Ripe," legitimate, at the Playhouse here during October showed the local appeal film stars have on the stage. Houses were good during the run.

Coppock Managing Tour

Rochester, N. Y.—E. S. C. Coppock, acting manager and publicity director of the Eastman theatre and for three years associated with Publix, resigned last week to become manager of a Coast-to-Coast demonstration of bantam cars.

$17,000 Gives Montreal Lead To "Spoilers"

Montreal—Picture business suffered a lapse of enthusiasm following Famous Players' Prosperity campaign. Canada's metropolis was not hit by the blizzard which caused havoc in upper New York state, but yet there was not much flocking to picture houses, although the Capitol made it 100 per cent with "The Spoilers" with a stage show, receipts being $17,000. This was down $1,500 from the previous week. "Old English" was worth $15,000, or 95 per cent to the Palace. After four weeks of "Whoopee" at the Princess, "Inside the Lines" looked strange there and receipts dropped to $9,000, registering 85 per cent. "Whoopee" was going so strong it should have been held over for a fifth week.

Estimated takings:

Tampa License Fight May Be Statewide

Tampa—B. E. Gore, owner of the Garden theatre, is putting up a hot fight against the city theatre license here. Gore says the annual tax of $200 for theatres, irrespective of size or location, is discriminating and unconstitutional. The Garden is a small neighborhood house. The city won the first round, but Gore is taking the case to the Supreme Court. If Gore wins at this final court he will probably go after the state and county license which nicks the theatres' bank roll to the tune of 300 smackers annually in cities of this size.

Resumes Summer Schedule

Cleveland—Because business in his neighborhood has dropped off within the past two months, Harry Horwitz is running his New Broadway and Olympia theatres on summer schedule of three shows a week.

Cameo Goes First Run

Cleveland—Loew's Cameo is again trying out a first-run policy.

The Breaks

Hollywood—William Keighley has been a stage actor for more than 17 years and never once appeared in a feature picture until this week. He has written stories for the screen and stage and played in many Broadway successes but not until he came West a few months ago to work on a film story did he find pictures attractive.

Universal hired Keighley to help direct some of the dialogue sequences in "Resurrection," which Edwin Carewe is making with Lupe Velez and John Boles starred. In explaining the delivery of lines to some of the principals Carewe decided to test Keighley for a role and as a result he was signed for the acting end, too. The Broadway player is now planning to make more talkers as he has "succumbed" to the lure of "Chattering Tintypes."

"Journey's End" Only One Hitting Par in Ottawa

Ottawa—Most of the theatres here had an off week, the principal exception being "Journey's End" at the Centre theatre, which started off with a big midnight show and wound up with $3,200 for 100 per cent at 50c top. "Old English" at the Regent was close to par through the support of Arliss fans, while "The Sea God" at the Imperial got the word-of-mouth boost and rang up $2,900 for 95 per cent. "Rain or Shine" was fair at Keith's, registering 90 per cent, but the week's worst was "Heads Up," which flopped to 80 per cent with $2,700 for three days at Keith's (last half).

Estimated takings:

"What a Widow" 17 Grand Is Top Dough at Toronto

Toronto—Business at Toronto during the week caused few raves, although "What a Widow" was outstanding at Loew's under the new all-screen policy, where it gathered in $17,000, equalling 100 per cent. This was the only feature to hit the perfect mark for the week. The Imperial was off $2,500 with "Scarlet Pages" at $17,500, as compared with the previous week, when Lillian Roth was on the stage doing five shows daily. "Moby Dick" brought steady trade to the Tivoli and the ticket vendors registered $12,000 for 90 per cent. Shea's Hippodrome had a fair week with "The Big Fight" and the only vaudeville in town, taking in $14,000, this being 90 per cent. Toronto got the first real taste of wintry weather and this did not help matters.

Says Fox Franchise with RKO in South Runs to '31

Fox product will play over the Hoblitzelle chain, now controlled by the RKO Southern Corporation, until Aug. 31, 1931. According to James R. Grainger, the current franchise did not expire this year, as reported last week in Motion Picture News.

The 1930 expiration date appeared in connection with Fox plans to build in the Southwest as a result of the reported breaking down of negotiations with RKO for the 1930-1931 product.

Building New Theatre

Postiville, Ia.—This town is to have a new theatre with the erection of the new Isis, which will be opened in December. The theatre is being built for S. E. Palmer, director of the Postiville, which will be closed when the new house opens. The Isis will be a 500-seat house. Palmer has purchased about $4,500 worth of new equipment.

Para. Gets Sayre House

Waverly, N. Y.—Paramount Publix has taken over the Sayre at Sayre from the Comerford circuit. This gives the firm control of the larger theatres of Waverly, Towanda and Sayre. Edward Cangly will be retained as manager of the Sayre house.

"Scotland Yard" 'Liliom' Chicago Red Ink Spots

Chicago—Two flops and a new leaseholder came into the Loop. The flops were "Liliom" at the Roosevelt and "Scotland Yard" at the Oriental, former getting only $15,600 (78%) at the run house and was replaced at the end of its first week by "Old English." Oriental, after one good week, went back to the red line with a $30,200 gross (72%).

Palace, in the midst of a "big name" stage list, chalked up its third successive good week, getting $23,280 (97%) with Irene Bordoni headlining and "Brothers" on the screen. Other good figures were registered at the Woods with $17,000 (150%) from "East Is West," playing to adults only. The picture moved to the Palace for a second Loop week, and "Half Shot at Sunrise" moved over from the State-Lake after two swell weeks to occupy the Woods during its last two days under RKO management. Jones, Linick & Schaefer took over the lease from the Shuberts and opened Monday with "Swing High." State-Lake did $38,160 (90%) for the second week with "Half Shot." "Check and Double Check" replaced on Saturday and did a tremendous week-end business.

"Playboy of Paris" earned the Chicago $43,680 (91%); McVickers got $25,200 (90%) in "Madam Satan's" second week. The picture sticks till the end of its third week, with "The Big Trail" set to follow it in mid-week. "Whoopee" fell more than six grand in its third week at the United Artists with a take of $17,160 (78%), and "Du Barry, Woman of Passion" replaced. Castle collected $4,800 (146%) on "Extravagance."

W. R. Graham continues as manager of Woods for J. L. & S.

Capitulates

Montreal—Charlie Lalumiere, one of the oldest exhibitors in Canada, has fallen to the lure of the talkies at last although he had publicly sworn to stick to silent through thick and thin. Which is another way of saying that the Roxy, last of the silent main stem houses of Montreal, has been rejuvenated with a talking system, a Phonofilm set having been installed.

But just for spite, Lalumiere presented a silent feature, "Anne Against the World," with non-synchronous accompaniment during the week, this being the Canadian premiere.

'Big House' Pace Swift; $22,500 in 2nd Cleve. Stanza

Cleveland—"The Big House" was the outstanding box-office attraction of the week, playing a second week at Loew's Stillman to $22,500. The picture is benefited in this entire state by the wire publicity gained when the censor board refused to pass it. Newspapers, in retaliation, printed the story of "The Big House" in tabloid form, and aroused unusual interest in the production. It is being held a third week.

The rest of the first-runs did average business, but the suburban theatres report a consistent decline in box-office receipts regardless of attraction.

Estimated takings:

"THE BIG HOUSE" (M-G-M)

Ohio Censors Help "Big House;" Gets $23,900 in Cincy

Cincinnati—"It's an ill wind, etc," was never more vividly exemplified than in the case of "The Big House," which this week broke all attendance and intake records at the Lyric, dating back some sixteen years. This record is more than ordinarily significant from the fact the previous managements usually advanced admission prices for a picture with special box-office value. No increase in the scale was made in this case. From a box-office angle the censors "builded better than they knew" when they withheld the picture from showing in Ohio for past five months, thereby unconsciously creating state-wide advertising which, for result, exceeds anything of a similar nature in the past several years. Not only did the crowds storm the Lyric box-office, but double rows of standees extended two blocks down the street the greater part of the week. Translated into exhibitor language, this means a gross of $23,900, or a rating of an even 200%.

Business generally was good at all houses, the aggregate gross reaching around $92,000, in itself a record, indicating pretty conclusively that the first-runs are not suffering from competition to any appreciable extent.

Revival as Double Feature at Montreal

Montreal—To keep up with rival theatres in the matter of morning shows starting at 10:30 or 11 A. M., Manager J. C. Adams of Loew's has adopted a policy of presenting a "revival" as an extra feature each week for the one performance starting at 11:15 A. M. The revived feature for the week of Oct. 12 was "The Return of Dr. Fu Manchu." The admission price to 12:30 is 25 cents and morning patrons see a show lasting from 11:15 A. M. to 3:15 P. M., all different, if they want to—and may stick the four hours. The regular feature for the week was "Forward March," starring Buster Keaton, and there were also five acts of vaudeville.

"Whoopee" Big Smash in Dual Balto. 2nd Run

Baltimore—With ideal weather prevailing for picture going, averages for the week were a little off at the majority of first-run houses.

"Top Speed" pulled in about 90 per cent at Loew's Century with the gross figured at about $14,800. Audiences liked Joe E. Brown's humor immensely, but the story was considered somewhat weak. It is expected that the grosses will jump to high averages again after Nov. 3, when stage attractions will be put on with the regular talking picture program now that the differences with the musicians' union have been ironed out and the orchestra will go back into the pit with George Wild again conducting.

While a gross estimated at about $12,600 was taken in at Loew's Stanley with "Billy, the Kid," this represented but 72 per cent of the normal 100 per cent and it is considered because people do not care for westerns as feature film fare in the big house, no matter how well directed and acted. For the neighborhood houses on Saturdays for the kids—yes.

"Whoopee," with Eddie Cantor, went over big in two houses simultaneously even though it had been shown to a huge week at Loew's Stanley previously. At Loew's Parkway it grossed $5,200, or 139 per cent, while at Loew's Valencia downtown the gross was estimated at $3,900, or 111 per cent. Showing again that the public will go to see a fine picture that they like.

"Renegades" proved a fine pulling picture at the New, doing an estimated 95 per cent business, the gross being figured at $9,500. Nothing but good comments on this by all who saw it.

"Moby Dick" went into its popular-priced engagement at Warners' Metropolitan with a bang, going through the week with a gross figured at $5,400, representing 90 per cent. This after two weeks downtown at $1 top, nights.

Estimated takings:

Balk Walkathon

San Francisco—There will be no "walkathon" contests in Oakland. Permit to hold a contest similar to that completed in San Francisco last month was revoked by the Oakland city council when members of the Oakland Theater Managers' Club objected on grounds that it was "cruel and revolting."

The contest was scheduled to be held under auspices of the East Oakland unit of the United Veterans of the Republic.

"Wedding Night's" $14,000 Is Best Providence Bet

Providence—Business took somewhat of a lacing with political rallies, pro fights and wrestling, not to mention pony golf tournaments, eating into the profits of exhibitors. "Her Wedding Night," with $14,000, led the town, the only picture to go over 100%.

Loew's State had a fair week with "Du-Barry, Woman of Passion," garnering $16,-500. The gay Chevalier pulled $12,000 for the Paramount in "Playboy of Paris," which is not to be sneezed at in these times. The Majestic with "The Sea Wolf" was a trifle off at $11,500.

"Her Man," the RKO Albee attraction, established a week-end record, but petered off during the week, cleaning up a nice $14,000, however. "Brothers," at the RKO Victory, couldn't seem to get under way, but hit around $8,000, which is around normal for this house.

Estimated takings:

"PLAYBOY OF PARIS" (Par.)

PARAMOUNT—(2,300), 10c-50c, 7 days. Other attractions: Organlogue, "Marry or Else," news. Gross: $12,000. Rating: 90%.

"Scarlet Pages" and Ruggles Get $45,000 in Boston

Boston—With "Hell's Angels" grossing $10,000 for the eighth week and continuing for another, United Artists have launched a second road show in Boston, "Abraham Lincoln," at the Majestic, which grossed $7,500 for 125 per cent for its first week and looks good for several weeks more. These two films, with "What a Widow" doing 115 per cent at Loew's Orpheum and "Du Barry, Woman of Passion," at Loew's State for a rating of 125 per cent, United Artists did approximately 50 per cent of the business of Boston during the week.

"Scarlet Pages" at the Metropolitan, coupled with the personal appearance of Charles Ruggles, grossed $45,000 for 140 per cent, hitting the highest spot of any show in town for the week. "East Is West" at Keith Memorial grossed $25,000 for 115 per cent, while "Leathernecking" at the other Keith house grossed $24,000 for a rating of 125 per cent. "Moby Dick" at the Olympia was good for 110 per cent.

The week's business dropped a bit from the preceding week, but exhibitors were satisfied with results.

Manager and Staff Indicted Under Blue Law

Cincinnati—William E. Burton, manager of the Bexley, New Philadelphia, O., and six of his employees have just been indicted by the grand jury for participation in Sunday theatre operation last May. Forney E. Bowers, manager of the New Philadelphia theatre, arrested for Sunday violation last April 27, escaped indictment because Mayor W. F. Hurst's transcript erred in saying Sunday, April 28.

Vote on Sundays

Rutherford, N. J.—The people of this town will have an opportunity next month to vote on Sunday showings. There has been a difference of opinion in the council on the question, and it was decided to let the voters solve the problem.

Eddie for George

Hollywood — Eddie Cantor, Broadwayite who makes pictures once in a while, is on the coast to play a two-weeks' engagement—gratis—at Geo. Olsen's night club. Close friendship between the pair is the reason. Of late the club has been hit hard due to constant raids by prohibition agents.

"Whoopee" Clicks 200% in Third Week at Philly

Philadelphia—The big noise in theatre circles was the $23,000 piled up by "The Doorway to Hell" at the Stanley, for a 130 percentage. Moved down to the Karlton for a third week in the downtown section, "Whoopee" crashed through for $10,000, a percentage of 200 and the biggest gross for this comparatively small house in the last three years.

"Whoopee" had done two good weeks at the Boyd and was strong enough for a third, but was chased out by the necessity of giving a date to "Old English." This Arliss picture was a comparative flop, grossing $17,000, or under average, and was yanked out to make room for "Check and Double Check," which started off like a big hit. Other good business included $19,000 for "Anybody's Woman" at Keith's.

The Mastbaum went considerably under average for the third straight week, the combined pull of "Love in the Rough" and Moran and Mack on the stage bringing in $38,000, about $2,000 under average. Figure is big jump, however, over the $35,000 of the previous two weeks.

Friday marked the return of the musicians to the Mastbaum, Fox and Earle, with the Duncan Sisters featured at the first named; the Roxy Gang and Chorus at the second and a Jay Mills stage revue at the third. Good houses greeted the returning stage programs.

Realife "Billy" Opening in K. C. Gets Only 115%

Kansas City—Realife at the Midland, heralded with an extensive advertising campaign, was unable to get Kansas City excited. After a strong opening, patronage took a tumble, although cold weather and the first snow of the year may have had something to do with the comparatively slim gross. "Billy, the Kid," the M-G-M Realife attraction, gave the house $16,675, or a rating of 115 per cent.

Top honors for the week go to the Uptown, a suburban first-run house, and the Pantages, each chalking up a rating of 140 per cent on its respective offerings. "The Bad Man" gave the Pan $14,000, while "Modern Madness" brought $8,500 to the Uptown. "Modern Madness" in reality is "Wild Company," the picture being given another title by the theatre for "box-office reasons," according to the management.

"Old English" was a good draw for the Royal, which did 130 per cent, or $5,850. The Newman had an average week with "Her Wedding Night," which gave the house $12,500, or a 100 per cent rating. The Mainstreet didn't do so well with "East Is West," taking in $13,500, or a rating of 90 per cent.

Claudette Colbert Hurries Home and Breaks a Law

Boston—The haste of Claudette Colbert and her husband, Norman Foster, to reach New York when arriving at this port caused them to fail to remain aboard the motorship Chinese Prince, on their return from a three-months' tour of Europe, until immigration authorities had passed them. They had departed when the immigration officers looked for them. Evasion of immigration officers carries with it a penalty of $1,000 each. Officials of the steamship company notified their New York offices to get in touch with the motion picture actress and her husband, to report to the New York immigration officials to comply with regulations.

Heavy Stage Plug Shoves 'Liliom' to Front at Seattle

Seattle—Fox's Fifth Avenue, celebrating its fourth birthday, took high honors among first runs. It was not so much the feature "Liliom" as it was the public weddings on the stage each night, plus an elaborate stage revue, that brought the gross to about $14,500 (115%) for the run. Second in the running came the Seattle Paramount with Ann Harding featured strongly as "The Girl of the Golden West." Despite this star's growing popularity, the picture didn't go so well with local fans, and reached only about $13,000 for the week (95%).

Other attractions did average business only. Highest in the second division came "Old English" at Hamrick's Music Box, where a gross of around $8,000 was quite acceptable (125%) but lower than expected in comparison with the "Disraeli" record that was set there a few months ago. "Madam Satan" in its second week at the Fox took about $9,250 for a rating of 90%. "Du Barry, Woman of Passion" at the Blue Mouse was good for about $7,000 (110%) and "Three French Girls" in an extended run at the Coliseum wound up with about $2,950. (95%).

Estimated takings:

Co-op. Concerts Staged By Unemployed Musicians

Montreal—Unemployed musicians have organized the Montreal Concert Symphony Orchestra and are presenting Sunday afternoon concerts in the Orpheum on a co-operative basis. There are 75 men in the orchestra. These concerts are in direct competition with the theatres where many of them formerly were employed.

New Equipment Unknown in East

Washington—Turkey is far behind modernization in many respects, including its very limited theatre market, where modern equipment is practically totally unknown due to low earning capacity of inhabitants which keeps spending power at such low ebb exhibitors are unable to amass sufficient funds for the purchase of new machinery.

The newest installment in the U. S. government's survey of equipment conditions abroad, which appears weekly in Motion Picture News, covers the situation in Turkey and other countries. Full text follows:

As yet Turkey is a relatively small market for the sale of projectors and projection equipment, owing to the very small number of theatres in the country. It is estimated that the total number does not exceed 100, of which 25 are located in Istanbul. In that city there are five large theatres having a seating capacity of 800 to 1,200 each. All other theatres are much smaller in size, having a seating capacity of only 200 to 600. With the exception of the leading theatres in Istanbul, Smyrna, and Angora, all the other establishments are poorly and primitively equipped, their owners having a very little operating capital and being obliged to use cheap equipment and films. In view of the low purchasing power of the great majority of the population in the interior, no modern or large theatres can be established and operate successfully throughout the greater part of the country. The majority of the owners of theatres throughout Turkey operate on a very small scale, and, in addition, practically all of them are more or less uninformed concerning modern motion-picture developments and improved equipment.

Condition Improvement Needed

Increased sales of equipment, as well as the increase in the number of theatres, are largely dependent upon an improvement of social, educational, and economic conditions. Although it can not be denied that the present government has put into application in the course of the past few years a number of laws and regulations tending to promote the cultural and social standards of the population, it will undoubtedly require considerable time for this movement to yield the desired results.

Projectors.—Prior to the war, projectors were supplied largely by French and to a certain extent by German manufacturers. Among the French product, Pathé equipment was introduced at the time when the first local theatres were established and enjoyed a marked preference on the market. During the war, when it was impossible to obtain other than German and Austrian equipment, the Pathé lost its former share of the business in projectors to German firms. Immediately after the war the Pathé and Gaumont companies resumed their projector sales; later, however, after the treaty of Lausanne, German trade with Turkey was reestablished. At the present time about 50 per cent of the projectors imported are of German make, Goerz, Ernemann, and A. G. French projectors are mainly Gaumont machines. Pathé product having lost in the course of the past few years their former popularity. It is generally stated that German projectors are acquiring increasing popularity, and their sales are gradually increasing.

Prices Vary According to Buyer

The selling price quoted in Turkey to purchasers of projectors varies according to importance of individual buyers as well as according to payment terms. Of the four types of German Ernemann projectors supplied, the Imperator No. 1 and Imperator No. 2 are the principal individual large types, being quoted at about $375 and $565, respectively, including the cost of complete equipment. The Ernemann Kinox projector is retailed at $56 to $70. The Ernemann president, a small theatrical type, is also sold occasionally.

The prices quoted for other German makes are more or less in line with those quoted on Ernemann product. The French Gaumont projectors are stated to be sold at a slightly lower price.

German Devices Favored

In a general way, German photographic apparatus has always had the reputation in Turkey of being the best, most precise, and most attractive, and to represent the latest achievements in technical perfection. Moreover, theatre owners consider them simpler to operate and that they run smoother and generally present a number of other advantages.

American projectors are practically unknown on the market. It is reported that just after the war some four or five American projectors were imported, but it has not been possible to learn by whom they are being used at present, and what the reaction of their owners is with regard to their operation. One of the above American projectors is stated to have been sold at auction in the Turkish customhouse for $150.

Believe U. S. Apparatus Too High

The consensus is that American projectors are too expensive for the market and, in addition, too complicated for the average operator in this country. Cheapness of price, solidity of construction, and simplicity of operation are the dominating factors in the sale of projectors in Turkey. It is believed by local dealers and theatre owners that American manufacturers of projectors would probably not be in a position to supply cheap and simple product similar to German projectors, and that in view of the few projector sales at the present time, American manufacturers would probably show little or no interest in entering the Turkish field. Furthermore, it is not believed that they would be disposed to make liberal arrangements with either an exclusive sales agent or an individual dealer.

In the event American manufacturers are interested in the Turkish market, and are able to furnish projectors and equipment competitive in price with German products, they should furnish a supply of adequate descriptive and illustrative literature, price lists covering the projectors and spare parts and equipment, and an outline of the most favorable agency, sales, and credit terms which they will allow.

Tough to Break In

In view of the fact that the total annual sale of projectors at present are only about 10 to 15 units, and that these sales are entirely of the German and French machines, it would be difficult to induce local agents or dealers to invest in American projectors which are unknown locally and which are considered to be expensive. However, if an expert, aggressive, reliable and financially responsible agent or dealer were offered favorable consignment on credit terms, appropriate advertising allowances, and cooperative assistance by American manufacturers until American projectors become known and appreciated, it might be possible to arouse a certain interest in American product, especially in theatrical types. Practically all theatres in Turkey own and operate a single projector. There are four or five theatres which have two projectors. By far the greater proportion of the projectors used in the larger Istanbul theatres, as well as in the better establishments in the interior, are of the latest models. Late models are also used to a certain extent in second and third-class theatres. A certain amount of second-hand equipment, which has been acquired from the larger local theatres and repaired, may be found in a number of small theatres, both in Istanbul and in a number of towns in the interior.

Generators.—With the exception of Istanbul, which has the largest electric light and power plant in the country, only four or five other cities in the country have electric-generating plants. Theatres in towns where there is no electric plant have individual motor and dynamo installations for the production of their electric and lighting requirements.

Power Problems

The larger theatres in Istanbul and those towns which have central electric light and power plants convert the alternating current to direct current by means of generator sets, which are supplied largely by the Allgemeine Elektrizitaets-Gesellschaft, the Siemens-Schukert Werke, and to a lesser extent by the Ganz company. The small and poor theatres operate to a great extent with the alternating city current, using cheap transformers merely to reduce the voltage to their own requirements. This procedure is due to the low purchasing power of owners of small theatres, who can not afford generator sets for conversion of alternating into direct current. The result is, of course, bad projection.

The German generator sets are supplied from consignment stocks of the local branches of the German companies, which extend liberal credit and also sell their equipment to local theatre owners on installment plans. The German product enjoys great popularity and are given ready preference. They are generally considered to be of satisfactory quality, of solid construction, and cheap in price. Considering these factors, as well as the fact that they are obtainable at favorable payment terms from local stocks, and that, on the other hand, American generator sets are practically unknown and believed to be too expensive for local requirements, interested parties expressed the opinion that it would be extremely difficult to develop any worthwhile business in American generator sets. At any rate, it would be difficult to induce local dealers in electrical appliances to invest in American generators on a direct purchasing basis. In the event of low prices and liberal credit terms, local agents might possibly evince an interest in American generator sets, but even under such conditions only very small business in the sets may be expected.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—It is estimated that about 75 per cent of all theatres in Turkey use mirror-reflector arc lamps. By far the greatest majority, probably 90 per cent, use white linen screens, the other establishments projecting their pictures on the stage wall.

Visual Education Nil

Visual education.—All matters pertaining to public education are governed by the Ministry of Public Instruction in Angora, which is represented in the various Provinces by directors of public instruction attached to provincial governments.

The use of motion pitures and other mediums of visual education in the various educational institutions of Turkey is extremely uncommon. The equipment of the majority of Turkish schools is rather primitive, while advanced and modern methods of instruction are almost entirely lacking. Motion pictures, however, are occasionally projected in the colleges and university at Istanbul, but even in those institutions there is no regular or systematic program of visual education.

New Acoustic Plaster

Winnipeg—The neighborhoods here have been given a mineral acoustic treatment, using material called zonolite plaster. Developed by Canadian gypsum interests, it is not yet on the market generally. Zonolite is a mineral of the mica family.

Lack of Culture Halts Progress

U. S. Projectors Not Employed in French Morocco

Four makes of projectors are employed by cinema owners in French Morocco. They are, in order of importance, Gaumont, Ernemann, Pathé, and Aubert. The following sales prices are quoted at Casablanca for those machines equipped with double projectors and complete: Gaumont, $470; Ernemann, $860; Pathé and Aubert, $310.

In spite of its high price, the Ernemann projector is greatly liked. That make and the Gaumont are easily the favorites, on account of the ease with which they can be taken apart and put together. Those projectors give a clear picture and are equipped with double projection heads and one lantern for the two projectors, the change of projectors being regulated automatically.

The French Moroccan market is a small one, there being only 40 theatres in all, and of these six are controlled by the firm of Xiberras, of Algiers, which purchases all its equipment direct from the manufacturers. The cinema owners, therefore, are in the habit of buying direct in France or Germany, and there does not exist in French Morocco any dealers specializing in motion-picture equipment.

Nearly all cinemas are equipped with an extra projector in case of accidents. As a general rule, the equipment is old, dated on the average about four years back. Cinemas are popular but are run on cheap lines, the seating accommodations and material comfort being poor on account of the lack of competition. No American projectors are at present in use in French Morocco.

Generators.—The Thungar (French) transformer is the most popular. It is equipped with two mercury lamps and is sold fully equipped for $70. The lamps last about 1,000 hours, and cost $10 each. No high-itensity and mirror arc lamps are used.

Screens.—The screens consist merely of a whitewashed cloth, or, in the cheaper cinemas, the whitewashed wall is deemed sufficient.

Visual Education.—All schools in French Morocco come under the Direction General de l'Instruction Publique at Rabat. The question of visual education has been discussed, but so far nothing has been done in any of the schools, which are all public and run by the Protectorate authorities. Should any steps be taken in that direction, it is practically certain that only French equipment would be purchased.

Projectors.—In the Tangier consular district, comprising the International and Spanish Zones of Morocco, there are 8 or 10 theatres, four of which are situated in Tangier. The projecting machines used are Gaumont, Ernemann, and one American machine. Foreign projectors are available at Casablanca (French zone) and in Spain at Seville, Madrid, and Barcelona. American projectors, of which there are only two in the district, were imported direct from the United States through an American citizen. It is reported that the price paid at the time (a few years ago) was $1,175 each. No American projectors are on sale in Morocco.

The two foreign makes in use are said to be giving satisfaction, their simplicity of mechanism making them popular in a country where Moors are used as operators. The Ernemann projector, in spite of its higher cost, is found in half the theatres of the district.

In the French zone, projectors are equipped with double posts and one lantern for the two projectors, the change from the one machine to the other being operated automatically. In Tangier and the Spanish zone, the single-post type is used exclusively, requiring a short interval between parts. On one occasion only double posts were imported into Ceuta for the running of an American film, owing to the length of that production.

"George 'n' Albert"

Shaw and Einstein are to appear on the radio the same night. At last a little competition for "Amos 'n' Andy"!—*N. Y. Sun.

It is not believed that there are any local dealers who would be interested in handling projectors. The market is small, and with stocks in Casblanca and Spain, the local demand is fully and speedily satisfied. Cinema owners are in the habit of writing to those sources, or even direct to manufacturers.

Nearly all cinemas are equipped with an extra projector in case of emergency. As a rule, projectors are old, but it is understood that this situation is rapidly bettering itself, foreign companies, like Gaumont, taking back old projectors and supplying new ones for a reasonable cash difference.

Generaly speaking, the equipment of cinemas in Morocco is lacking in comfort and luxury, based on American standards. This is due in part to the fact that they cater principally to Moors with a low purchasing power, which element is by far the most important commercially. In Tangier two of the houses, operated in conjunction with casinos, are run more to attract patrons to the main establishments than to make a direct profit.

The two American projectors employed in Tangier are said to be the best in the city. They have two inconveniences, however: they are relatively costly, and in case of a breakdown requiring a change of parts it is necessary to write to the United States.

Generators.—Transformers are not required in the international zone, where there is a direct current of 110 volts. No high-intensity and mirror arc lamps are used.

Screens.—Screens always consist of a whitewashed cloth.

Visual Education.—Schools in the international and Spanish zones have done nothing on the question of visual education. In Tangier the chief school is under the Direction General de l'Instruction Publique at Rabat, and, were steps taken to develop that form of education, French equipment would undoubtedly be purchased.

Liberia Offers Small Market

The market in Liberia for projectors and other equipment is very small. There are no sales agents for equipment, and the possibilities for the sale of such equipment are at present very remote. There are five projectors in the entire country, four of which are American made (one a portable projector) and the fifth French made. Except for the portable projector, used by an American company upon its plantations, they are old models. White cloth sheets are used for screens.

There are no real theatres, but a theatre to seat about 300 was recently constructed by a Liberian association in Monrovia. Indifferent motion pictures are occasionally shown in the public halls of the larger towns.

Apparently the difficulty in Liberia with the business is the comparatively small number of people to patronize shows. No census has ever been taken of the population of Liberia, but it is estimated to consist of 1,200,000 uncivilized natives in the interior, 50,000 slightly civilized natives forming the fringe of the civilized coastal settlements, 12,000 civilized negroes, principally Americo-Liberians or their descendants, and 500 whites.

Except in Monrovia and the rubber plantations, there is no electricity in the country.

During the past three years, there have been only two exhibitions for educational purposes.

Camera Market Shifts Rapidly In South Africa

Projectors.—Nearly all the theatres in the larger towns of South Africa are equipped with two projectors. The greatest number of theatres, however, are in small communities where only one projector suffices. The equipment in the larger towns is quite modern but the great majority of projectors located in small theatres are very old. The amount of business done does not warrant the installation of new machines as long as the old ones will continue to function. Practically all of the newer types of projectors in use give good service.

Generators.—There is a small demand for generator sets. Most of the sets in use are of American make.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—The great majority of theatres in South Africa use mirror-reflector arc lamps. The high-intensity arc is not favored on account of the high cost of running.

Screens in use in South Africa are usually of linen with a coating of paint or other reflecting substance. In a large number of small theatres the picture is projected simply upon the white plaster wall of the building.

Visual Education.—Visual education has not yet taken hold in South Africa in the public schools, but there is a steady increase in the use of both cameras and projectors for amateur and business purposes. A number of business men in Johannesburg use projectors in their offices to demonstrate manufacturing processes and products and are finding this method of greatest benefit to their sales.

In the last two or three years there has been a decided shifting in the camera market of South Africa. Until 1926 practically all cameras and supplies imported were solely for still pictures. Several sporadic attempts had been made to introduce various kinds of motion-picture or semi-motion-picture cameras, but the first popular appeal to the amateur public came late in 1925. For a long time this was confined entirely to the larger cities, and it has only been within the past six months or a year that any particular interest has been shown in the country districts. At the present time, though, merchants are receiving fairly substantial orders in the country districts of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, as well as from Rhodesia. Sales have been most erratic. At times for two or three months large purchases have been made, only to be followed by an abrupt slump in the market. There has apparently been no cause for any changes, which have been purely sopradic and not seasonal in any respect.

Cameras.—At the present time there are four American outfits in the market. There are also two German machines already well entrenched in the market. Pathé has maintained a high selling average, holding over 60 per cent of the total sales.

It is estimated that by 1929 the Pathé increased its sales from six to eight times over the 1925 sales. American machines have also made very substantial increases, but not in the same proportion, due almost entirely to price considerations. The lowest-priced American camera on the market sells for £17 ($83). A very popular American product sells for approximately £31 ($151). The Zeiss sells for £20 ($97) with a 3.5 lens.

Projectors.—Projectors sell in approximately the same ratio as cameras. The only important projector at present on the market, aside from the American products, is the Pathé, which retails at £8 ($42). American projectors retail from £20 ($97) with resistance up to £85 ($414). A very popular standard American machine retails at £22 ($107).

Egyptians Want U. S. Equipment; High Price Bar

Projectors.—Three makes of projectors are used extensively in Egypt today, the Krupp-Ernemann, the Gaumont, and the Pathé. Up until a few years ago the French makes entirely dominated the market, but lately the Ernemann projector has been increasing in popularity, gradually replacing the old French models which pass out of use. At present it is estimated that 60 per cent of the total number of projectors employed are Gaumont, 30 per cent Ernemann, and 10 per cent Pathé.

The local selling prices of the French projectors range from $200 to $400, whereas those of the German maker run from $500 to $600.

The French projectors secured the domination of the market because they were the first to be introduced, were actively represented, and enjoyed the reputation of being easy to operate. Their prices were also most attractive. Furthermore, the local representatives were well stocked with spare parts and replacement equipment. Despite its somewhat higher price, however, the German make has come into rapid prominence, especially among the larger and better theatres. The Gaumont projectors have the reputation of requiring spare parts after about a year, whereas the Ernemann is considered stronger, seldom requiring replacement parts, and being steadier in operation at high speed.

General commission merchants importing also for their own account would probably be willing to handle such American projectors and equipment as would compete with the Ernemann in price, quality, and payment terms. The local agent for Ernemann is understood to receive most of his goods on consignment. Gaumont has its own branch in Alexandria, and Pathé offers payment facilities (90 days) to its agent.

An American make and the Pathé home projectors are now on sale in Egypt. It is felt that other makes would have considerable difficulty in securing a foothold, as those two have special organizations and offer facilities with which few dealers would care to endeavor to compete in so small a potential market. On the whole, the demand for the theatrical types is also a small one. In the Port Said district there are no equipment dealers, and sufficient business could not be done to make an agency profitable.

Only the very best theatres in Cairo and Alexandria have more than one projector, and the maximum is two. About 20 per cent of the total are, however, fitted with double connected projectors, mostly of the Gaumont type. The four houses in Port Said carry only one projector each, but keep a spare in readiness for emergency use.

In Port Said all the projectors are now of the latest models, whereas in Ismailia and Suez they are mostly of the old types. In Cairo, Alexandria, and elsewhere the majority (around 70 per cent) of the projectors in use are still of the old French types, as above mentioned. These are gradually being replaced by the latest Ernemann types.

No American projectors are used in the theatres in Egypt at present. It is understood that immediately after the war a few American projectors were imported from France, but that the importer was unable to dispose of them, as he had no stock of spare parts. Although local dealers are prepared to believe that American projectors are superior to the makes already on sale, they feel that it would be very difficult to introduce them successfully if the prices and terms were not competitive with the Ernemann.

Generators.—Very few generator sets are used in Egypt to convert alternating to direct current. Most of those in use are old and of German make. Owing to cheaper initial cost, cinema owners employ transformers and rectifiers instead of generator sets in general. The French Delmo and Astra transformers and the Thompson-Houston Tunger rectifier are most popular. They sell at $170, $225, and $150, respectively. No American generator sets have ever been introduced. Although the market is not very large, it is believed that if the initial cost of the sets were not too high it would be possible to find some demand for them, as the transformers and rectifiers now in use are not found entirely satisfactory, wearing out rapidly.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—Local theatres employ, in general, mirror-reflector arc lamps up to 50 amperes. The screens used are all of white canvas or plaster, locally made.

Visual Education.—All matters pertaining to education are controlled by the ministry of education, which can purchase such educational film as it wishes. The censorship of ordinary films is under the supervision of the Ministry of Interior.

Visual education was started about a year ago in the government secondary schools by the ministry of education, and has produced very favorable results. It is to be recalled, of course, that the percentage of literacy in Egypt is not over seven per cent and that in the outlying districts visual education is unknown.

Canary Islands Market Limited

The demand for amateur cameras and projectors is small in the Canary Islands, principally because the purchasing power of the people is small. There is a market available, however, and the possibilities of some sales to tourists passing through the islands.

The chief imports of cameras and projectors are from France and Germany, in the order named. Local preference for both projectors and cameras has been for the French products. The low selling price and the advertising carried on have accomplished this.

The purchasing power of the people of the Canary Islands, comparatively, is far less than in the United States, and the standard of living is generally much lower. This results in fewer purchases of such articles as cameras and projectors, and what purchases are made are considered from the price standpoint more than from a quality one.

The Pathé baby projector is found in general sale in the West Canary Island market, and also the Guyer (German) projector. Cameras of both makes are not common.

There is more interest in projectors for use in the homes, and the fact that the Pathé films can be purchased retail for four pesetas for those in French and eight pesetas for those in Spanish influences their sale. An undeveloped film for the Pathé camera costs 7.50 pesetas ($1.25) for three rolls of 10 meters each.

The great majority of projectors are of the hand-operated type. The local electric service is of 110-volt direct current in the capital, with 110 volts, alternating, in some of the interior towns.

The Pathé baby projectors are found in a number of the retail stores, such as those that sell photograph supplies, musical instruments, optical goods, and even textiles. They are purchased direct from France, the Pathé people refusing to appoint a representative in the island. The Guyer is represented by one of the photography supply stores. A great deal of advertising in the local papers and in window displays is carried on by the stores carrying the French products.

It is felt that a strong advertising campaign might prove of value in placing movie cameras and projectors on the market.

The Pathé Company is giving the local dealers 60 days, and the same is true of the German company. Local dealers, in turn, sell to the public on the installment plan. It is felt that the above terms would have to be met to be able to compete.

U. S. Portables Used by Missions In East Africa

There are only about seven theatres in British East Africa, of which five are in Kenya Colony and Protectorate (three in Nairobi and two in Mombasa), one in Zanzibar, and one in Dar-es-Salaam, Tanganyika territory. A theatre formerly existed in Kampala, Uganda, but this was destroyed by fire not long ago and has not been reopened. The owners of the Alexandra, Nairobi, the Royal Cinema, Zanzibar, and one of the Mombasa theatres have erected a new cinema in Dar-es-Salaam, and there is also a project, not yet under way, for the erection of a new theatre in Nairobi.

Projectors—The Theatre Royal, Nairobi, has recently purchased two new Kalee double-lamp houses, mirror-arc projectors, costing £200 apiece in England. That theatre is believed to be the only one in British East Africa having more than one projector. The Lyric, Nairobi, has a Gaumont projector which has been in use for about 10 years.

Some time ago, while holding an exhibition for a small audience of Indians, this result of which the regular programs at the theatre had to be suspended for a week while the projector was being repaired. All the other theatres in British East Africa use Pathé projectors, and practically all of them are old machines. There are also about 15 American portable projectors used by the Church of England and Italian Roman Catholic missionary societies in British East Africa to attract natives to their meetings.

The manager of the Theatre Royal is interested in considering an American machine if the price is right, and, as most of the other projectors in use are old ones, consideration would undoubtedly be given by other theatres to the purchase of American projectors, either now or in the not too far distant future, if their advantage over machines now in use is clearly demonstrated and the price satisfactory.

There are no dealers in British East Africa handling projectors or other equipment of theatrical type. Material of that sort is ordered directly by the owners or managers of the theatres, and the demand is not sufficient to interest dealers.

Generators.—Alternating current is in use in the district. The sale of American generator sets to convert alternating current to direct current would again depend on price and advantages to be gained therefrom.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—High-intensity and reflector arc lamps are in general use in local theatres. The Theatre Royal, Nairobi, has a Bulman fabric screen, but the screens in general use are canvas screens of local manufacture.

Visual Education.—The director of education is in charge of matters pertaining to education in each of the British East African colonies and protectorates. As yet, however, practically nothing has been done in the way of education by motion pictures, although, as already indicated, they are used by some of the missions, which also conduct schools, to attract the natives. A well-known American explorer and photographer files one copy of all his films with the Kenya Government as a record, but those films have not been shown to any extent. Local dealers who have agencies for amateur picture cameras have held local small exhibitions of pictures taken with those cameras in order to interest the purchasing public, and some of the exhibitions have been held for school children.

They say Quaint

GOD knows there is no reason to scorn the new owners of Hollywood for their dull performances and their stupid rules. When our highest political office is surrounded by secret commissions and a suave public relations counsel group, when everything from the oil industry, with its Petroleum Institute, to independent grocers, have some organized medicine show to make the public aware of anything but the simplest facts of life, there is no reason why film producers shouldn't give their support to the great pastime of keeping the consumer happy and ignorant. But I happen to believe that the movie is a major art form. There is ample proof that Hollywood does afford able men and women, and it is irksome to realize they haven't a fighting chance to work. Before their work gets through the mill it gets smeared somewhere. Propaganda, rules of any kind arbitrarily enforced, are anathema to genuine art.

If movie patrons overnight became as tolerant as Jefferson, if the women's club-houses became groves of Daphne and the censors died of apoplexy, it still would be difficult in present circumstances for one writer and one director and a group of actors to get their work through the factory without a gadget hooked on or a spoke taken out by their owners. It seems to be an immutable law of art that form, ecstacy and dignity grow in inverse proportion to the number of patrons sheltered under one banner. A public utility director is very likely to be an art patron and the chances are that his preferred stock will go to some huge mausoleum of art at his death. He himself is not responsible for the absurd announcements his companies send to the public, the eulogies on how science is making our land a paradise of comfort—he doesn't sign his name, it's "the company." One pants presser is always susceptible to pressure. Once in a while one of his directors might break through. But fifty owners, far away banking control, offer a machine barrier that quenches all fire to some extent before it is properly kindled. The best of our future film productions are likely to have at least one banal episode. But it is no peculiar fault of Hollywood. It happens to be the result of the very framework of finance as it is built today. Our national crest has come to be a slightly tarnished eagle over a share of preferred stock.—Lorentz in Cinema.

While making a picture a director was annoyed by one of the male leads. This actor, a former chorus boy, would end every one of his scenes with a hand-on-the-hip movement.

The director couldn't make him do otherwise and not wishing his picture to be spoiled he ran to the office of the general manager.

"I'm sorry," replied the director, "but you'll have to get rid of that pansy. Else I can't go on with the picture."

"Don't worry," replied the manager, "everything will be all right. You return to the lot and that will be taken care of."

The director, highly pleased, slowly walked to the set. On the way he met a fellow director who called him aside.

"Say," he said, "I've just come from the general manager's office. Do you know what he called me for? He asked me what a pansy was!"—Skolsky in N. Y. News.

HOLLYWOOD, for all her bountiful gifts of fame and wealth, can be unnecessarily cruel, until, at times the unfortunate victim of her jibes and gossip seems pursued by a personal jinx that touches each climax of life.

THERE'S a domestic rift about to occur in the home of one of filmdom's most popular sheiks. His wife, who helped him climb from obscurity to a rich job, says she could manage the struggle, but she can't stand the heights. It seems that he's so handsome and so nice the Hollywood girls can't let him alone, and he forgets he is married and the father of two children. He is afflicted with what is known in California as wandering feet—has a habit of visiting actresses when he has left word at home that he is taking a singing lesson. In a way, it wasn't entirely his fault. He was married before he was through school, and has had to struggle all these years with no time for romance and no money for pleasure. It's hard on his wife.

He is quite keen on a well known blonde star with a director husband, and while she poses as one of the sweetest little ingenues in the business, she hasn't been unwilling to see the married boy friend quite frequently. His wife admits she can't stand much more and while all her friends are advising her to stick it out, she is inclined to ask for an open break, and that wouldn't be helpful to his career. MR. HAYS must not be around the office much these days. For the second time in one week a satirical piece slipped under the wire. It is called, for no reason at all, "The Way of All Men." Sloppy direction lets it fall to pieces but it has, for a movie, a new basic idea. It is, simply, that men faced with one hour to live may rise to noble heights, but if released at the end of their sentence naturally will return to their easy cut-throating ways. Naturally the producers could not allow the hero to regain his senses after he has been cooped in a flooded saloon with his show-girl sweeties and leave her for the attractive, intelligent and young daughter of his employer. He rushes the girl to the city hall as soon as the doors open, but, despite the blunt writing and direction and the mediocre work of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., you have an uneasy feeling after all the shouting is over that the author was taking a sideswipe at religion and that, in the movies, Mr. Hays, is heresy.—Judge

THE biggest surprise to us in this talkie era is the way million-dollar productions have been living up to advance notices. "All Quiet on the Western Front" turned out to be, as advertised, uncompromising, unforgettable—on an epic scale. "The King of Jazz" was dazzling, even though it may have been short on spontaneity and humor. "Hell's Angels," the talkies' first great spectacle, looks like four million dollars. THE talkies and the stage are now so nearly alike in their requirements that actors and actresses move rapidly in both directions. Former screen favorites planning to act on the stage this fall are Mary Pickford, Colleen Moore, Lya de Putti, Vilma Banky and Rod La Rocque. As salaries in the talkies are so much higher, it is safe to assume that most of those returning to the legitimate drama have been obliged to take the step because of waning screen popularity. A few are foreign actors and actresses imported during the era of the silent pictures, and now suddenly obliged to try to cure themselves of their foreign accent.

Perhaps this emphasizes the element of truth in George Bernard Shaw's recent lament that "the poor old theatre is done for" and may survive only "as a place where people are taught to act." That the poor old theatre is completely done for we cannot believe; the reports of its death have been exaggerated too often. But it is at least clear by now that the threat of the talkies is both a real and a growing one. A year or more ago those critics who maintained that the talking pictures were even more puerile on the average than their silent predecessors could show a good deal of plausible evidence to support their contention, but since that time there has been remarkable improvement both in technical resources and in the use of those resources by directors. It is true that the stage still has advantages (that of the direct contact of the actor with his audience is one which the talkies will never capture), but the talkies, on their side, already have great technical superiorities over the stage. They have, to begin with, nearly every advantage the silent pictures had—of unlimited outdoor action, real galloping horses, speeding locomotives, automobiles, airplanes, ships, mob and battle scenes, natural scenery instantaneously shiftable, unusual "angles," enlargement and selection of physical detail—plus not only the voice and natural sounds as on the stage, but the free manipulation of sounds—to portray, for example, the mental state of a character. As the public can see the talkies for approximately one-fifth of what it pays for orchestra seats on Broadway, the future of the ordinary commercial theatre does not seem particularly bright.

Two factors, it is true, seriously limit the competition of the talkies with the stage, as they limited that of the silent screen. The first of these is the commercial need to reach the lowest common intellectual denominator of a great mass audience; the second is a drastic and stupid censorship. Yet the recent appearance of "All Quiet," "Journey's End," "The Love Parade," "The Man from Blankley's" and "Holiday" shows that it is possible for intelligent or sophisticated pictures to emerge even under these conditions. And the intellectual level of the average stage play, it should not be forgotten, is not distressingly high. If the legitimate stage is to survive (as we think it will), it will have to appeal to a more intelligent audience than the talkies and it will have to take much greater commercial risks. In brief, it will have to become "experimental," to bear much the same relation to the talkies as such an institution as the Theatre Guild was originally intended to bear to the ordinary commercial theatre on Broadway.—The Nation.

As far as the great American public is concerned—and by that I mean taking into full consideration the small towns and suburbs, not merely the first runs in big cities—neither Greta Garbo or Clara Bow are entitled to leadership honors in the race for premiere feminine screen honors. Sunday may mean golf, tennis, fishing, or church, according to the extent of one's religious fervor, but to most of the Paramount New York studio gang last Sunday meant what Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday (we could easily have said "week," but this way helps complete a column faster especially when one has a theatre engagement), Friday and Saturday means to hoi polloi—Work. Every department was represented when the Clara Bow picture under Frank Tuttle's direction necessitated labor on the Sabbath due to the fact that there was no time to lose, the cast having to entrain for the coast. Others also had to be on hand for stills of Miriam Hopkins for exploitation and publicity on "Fast and Loose," Miss Hopkins, being forced, by circumstances, in the form of her new play, "The King's Automobile," which was scheduled for an out-of-town try-out, to "look at the birdie," "smile please" and other such repartee synonymous with the business of taking photos.

It seems that when Assistant Director George Yohalem wanted his camera and sound men to start he called "Sync 'em and turn 'em." At the New York studios assistant directors bellow a chaste "Switch." # Public Apathy Dooming Talker Remake Policy

Hollywood—Talker remakes of silent versions will be hard to recognize hereafter if plans proposed by the various studios are carried out. The public apparently doesn't want the remakes of films they have seen before, so they are not going to the box-office. Thus the exhibitors and producers in checking over the receipts have decided to stop remaking the old favorites, or if they do it, will do so in such a manner that the public will not recall them.

Warners have made plans to drop all preparations for remakes at both First National and the Warner studio. Hereafter attention will be given to the new product and what has been made will rest as is.

Laughter

(Paramount)

Intelligent and Pleasing

(Reviewed by Sherwin A. Kane)

WHAT Pathe achieved with "Holiday," Paramount has duplicated with "Laughter." The two pictures, as entertainment material, have much in common. Both are charming and human stories, pleasantly told, acted with distinction, and possessing an intellectual, rather than a physical problem for a plot. Delightful humor is interspersed throughout, and if the fun of "Laughter" is not as sophisticated as that of "Holiday" it is just as human, and universally appealing therefore. The difference is merely the difference between Donald Ogden Stewart, dialoguist for "Laughter," and Philip Barry, author of "Holiday." Both pictures may be said to flatter the intelligence and taste of audiences without confounding them.

There is a sincerity about the performances given by Frederic March, Nancy Carroll and Frank Morgan in "Laughter" that covers up what would otherwise be obvious flaws in the story. Any one of these performances would distinguish another picture. They make of this one a different and refreshing production, set apart from the mine-run pictures of the day.

Nancy Carroll plays a former show girl who has forsaken old, carefree attachments and surroundings to become the wife of C. Mortimer Gibson, a wealthy and elderly widower, played by Frank Morgan. One year after her marriage three significant events occur almost simultaneously.

Ralph Le Saint, a young sculptor still in love with Peggy Gibson, the former show girl, plans a suicide in a mood of bitterness brought on by the treatment his wooing has received from the girl. A chance visit at his studio permits the girl to prevent the suicide and pacify her admirer. Then Paul Lockridge, a musician also in love with Peggy Gibson, returns from Paris, where he fled at the time of the girl's marriage to her financier husband. He resumes a charming and boyish courtship with her, basing his arguments on the obvious stuffiness of her new life and her need of laughter.

About this time Gibson's daughter, Marjorie, played by Diane Ellis, returns from schooling abroad. She is paired up with Le Saint, and both couples proceed to involve themselves in humorous escapades and scrapes that result in considerable embarrassment and trouble to old Gibson. In the course of one of these escapades, Lockridge (Frederic March) tells Peggy he is about to return to Paris. "Come with me," he urges. "You are not happy with your money and power. You are dying. And you are rich—dirty rich. You need laughter to make you clean."

Peggy refuses this invitation and returns to her home. That evening, during a party in the Gibson home, Peggy learns that Marjorie, Gibson's daughter, plans to elope with Le Saint. Aware that the sculptor does not love the girl, but wants her money to insure the leisure necessary to his art, Peggy intercepts the two at Le Saint's studio and exposes the sculptor to the girl. Dejected, he commits suicide, and Peggy, found in the apartment, is involved in the subsequent notoriety.

The emotional experience gives the girl a new spiritual honesty. She returns to Gibson, confesses her unhappiness and advises him she cannot go on as his wife; then joins Lockridge and laughter in Paris.

There is a deft touch to the action which glosses the heavy and the tragic sequences with an air of having been either so natural as to be inevitable, or else that what has happened does not matter anyhow, since the important things are yet to come. This same touch, in which the direction of H. D'Abbadie D'Arrast must have figured importantly, transforms almost the entire production into a highly convincing, sincere and human story. Its last impression is one of lightness and charm.

Its weaknesses are found in its infrequent lapses from credibility. For instance, Le Saint's suicidal bitterness, both at the beginning and end of the picture, is not convincing because it has not been justified by the weight of events leading up to it. People do commit suicide for the loss of love and the loss of money, but Mr. Anders' performance does nothing to help one understand why.

Again, Nancy Carroll, in suddenly announcing to Morgan her intention of leaving him for March, does not succeed in making the action a reasonable one. The spiritual experience she undergoes as a witness to Le Saint's suicide is not registered, and, consequently, her decision would have appeared just as credible before as after the tragedy. Likewise, her buxom, obvious prettiness is out of type with the intellectual companion and adored of artists.

But in the picture as a whole these faults are trivial, inconsequential. As an entertainment offering it succeeds unquestionably well. Highbrow audiences will approve of it without a doubt, and the incurable fans, though they may miss some of its finer nuances, will welcome it as something new and refreshing. It is an opportunity to draw customers from among the disdainful classes who regard the movies as "trash." It should get great word-of-mouth advertising everywhere and should do above-average business in the full week stand where it has a chance to benefit by this and build.

March walks away with the honors in this one. His ambitious young composer is an honest and accurate portrayal of a certain type of artistic temperament that is as diverting as it is refreshing. Frank Morgan turns in a fine performance as Gibson, the successful financier in love with a pretty girl whom he is utterly incapable of understanding, but whose devotion keeps him forever trying and forgiving. He wins a sympathy for the role that in less capable hands might have earned no more than derision. Nancy Carroll's performance is always adequate and occasionally distinguished. Glenn Anders, the young Theatre Guild player, has a difficult and unsympathetic role but handles it satisfactorily. Fine performances are registered in minor parts by Leonard Carey as a butler and Ollie Burgoyne, a maid. Direction is in tune throughout.

One Night at Susie's

(First National)

Well Acted Crook Stuff; Pleasing

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

WHERE the public has not tired of crook dramas, "One Night at Susie's" will please. It is neatly handled and played although its greatest shortcoming is that it wigwags every climax before achieving it.

Nominally the star of the production, Billie Dove plays what amounts to the third role in importance. She profits rather than loses by being cut in footage. Come to think of it, that perhaps was what has been wrong with many previous Dove vehicles—too many close-ups where the star had nothing to do but exhibit her features. This part gives her greater acting opportunities and she avails herself of them.

The story concerns the adopted son of Susie, friend of thieves and gangsters, who is raising the boy straight. The boy (Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.), falls in love with Billie, a member of the chorus in the show for which he is press agent.

Billie kills the rich angel of the show in protecting her honor and Fairbanks takes the rap. While in prison, he writes a play for her, insisting she sell it as of her authorship. She has difficulty in finding someone to produce the piece. When she sees how hard the boy is taking it, she becomes the mistress of a manager who offered those terms as part of the production contract.

Susie has little use for the girl thinking her merely out to get what she can from Fairbanks. Susie learns of the relationship with the manager on the eve of Fairbanks' release from prison. Confronting the girl with the information, the mother is made to understand it was all in the nature of a sacrifice to the boy's happiness. To keep Fairbanks from knowing, Susie helps her gangsters kill the crooked detective who is the only one who might tell. The flatfoot had it coming in any event. Pretty wild stuff.

Helen Ware plays Susie and completely dominates the picture. It is nicely modulated and quite enough in itself to lift the tone of the production. Fairbanks Jr., makes the boy thoroughly believeable and Tully Marshall is responsible for the comedy. James Crane's crooked detective is an out-of-the-ordinary portrayal worthy of attention.

Du Barry, Woman of Passion

(United Artists)

Has Its Moments

(Reviewed by Sherwin A. Kane)

"DU BARRY," as the story of a tempestuous and historically significant woman, has some power and some fine dramatic values. As a picture it is good entertainment and a box-office morsel, if your gang still likes Norma Talmadge, but it lacks that final distinction necessary to set it apart from other pictures of its kind. Like a sales manager's business graph, tracing the rise and fall of sales over some such erratic period as now upon us, it has its moments of excellence, its even, unwavering norms and its depressions. Also, it is in costume which may hurt.

The heights, such as they are, are attained by the ability of Norma Talmadge in some sequences, and by flashes of brilliant direction. Its relapses are contributed to by Miss Talmadge's limitations in other sequences in which she appears to be clearly out of step with the Du Barry role; by the ordinary performances of other principals, and by that gross tinsel touch which pictures habitually are giving to their picturizations of royalty—particularly historic royalty. These latter are as glamourously artificial and unconvincing as any that have ever been given to the democracies of the theatre.

Miss Talmadge's is a difficult role, and with it goes the burden of the picture. In the highly emotional, life-loving and fiery midinette who was plucked from a modiste's shop and set down in the boudoir of the King of France is a gamut of emotions and spiritual adventures which, to be played perfectly, defy imitation or substitution. It is in the sequences demanding spiritual values and understandings that the star is taxed. At such times the Talmadge artistry wears to the thinness of finesse and the star emerges as a motion picture fairy princess.

The same may be said of the supporting principals. Conrad Nagel, as Cosse de Brissac of the King's Guard, for whose love Du Barry is never quite capable of renouncing court luxuries and attentions, is a legendary lover of magnificent restraint and foolhardy vengeance, appearing and disappearing throughout the story's course in the manner of a cuckoo bird released at regular intervals from some historic timepiece.

And William Farnum, returning to pictures in this after an interval of years, makes of his Louis XV something more of the modern Broadway sugar daddy than a weak and selfish monarch whose extravagances precipitated an epochal revolution.

The story is that of the love of a maid for luxuries and the tragedies which result from their attainment. A milliner's errand girl strikes the fancy of her king and is established at court. There she soon tires of her costly playthings and considers again the young guardsman whom she deserted at luxury's call. The man is sentenced to prison and eventual death by the jealous king but revolutionists, already organized, recognize the condemned man's hatred of the king and give him his freedom for a pledge to kill the monarch.

In attempting to fulfill the pledge, the young nobleman, now a revolutionist leader, invades the royal palace and, wounded there, takes refuge in Du Barry's chambers. She hides him in her bed, where he is later discovered and surrendered by his own father, the Duc de Brissac. Condemned to death, young de Brissac is given a chance for his life by the king, who, to save himself from the embarrassment resulting from the discovery of his lowly rival in the bed of his favorite, promises to spare de Brissac if Du Barry will denounce him publicly as an unwelcome annoyer.

To save him she agrees, but in the middle of her denunciation breaks down and falls into the arms of her lover in the presence of the court. The execution is ordered, but Du Barry throws open the palace gates to the howling mob of revolutionists, who save her lover. Later, with the revolution accomplished, Du Barry is sentenced to die as a royalist by the citizens' tribunal. De Brissac, unable to gain her pardon, renounces the revolutionary cause and is sentenced to die with her.

The picture is well made and its story well told, but disappoints only through its own pretensions. Undoubtedly it will do the normal business wherever it is spotted. In substantiation of this it may be said that occasional of its sequences are as intimate and revealing as a peep through a boudoir keyhole. In addition, it has its title and the Talmadge name. The star's performance is somewhat spotty, alternately ordinary and excellent. On the whole, she fails to win for her character the sympathy it deserves.

In her performance one sees more of the unthinking woman, a slave to her own whims and emotions, than one does a tragically innocent girl of great passions. One does not sense the Du Barry qualities of spiritual martyrdom. There is only the disillusioned and thwarted woman. And cameramen need to be reminded that profile views of Miss Talmadge are unkind to her.

The Sin Ship

(R-K-O)

Not See Worthy

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

FEW men are capable of directing and playing the principal role in the same picture and Louis Wolheim is no exception. "The Sin Ship" is his first venture in acting-directing and it emerges just another film.

Wolheim's direction is uninspired. He has shown nothing unusual in either story-telling technique or camera perspectives. Rather has he been content merely to photograph the action allowing the characters to move in and out of camera range as they might on a stage. Panorama and traveling shots are noticeably minimized.

All of the faults of "The Sin Ship" as entertainment are not to be attributed to direction alone, however. The story, too, is largely to blame. Wolheim is introduced as the captain of a trading ship which has just docked. The sailors, bound for shore leave, seek the amusements that all footloose sailors are supposed to seek.

Wolheim, headed for the nearest bar, catches sight of Mary Astor standing on the dock with a minister. Her beauty, or something, strikes him so forcibly as to make it impossible for him to think of anything else. Waterfront women become distasteful and unable to stand them any longer, he moves to a table by himself.

There the minister finds him and, explaining that he and his wife have missed their boat, asks Wolheim if they may sail with him. Wolheim is so overjoyed he cancels shore leave to start immediately. Once aboard his own ship, his yen for the reverend's wife is even more acute. Under the pretense of offering her a cup of tea, he traps her in his cabin, and loses no time in locking the door.

Pulling the heavy stuff on her, Wolheim is repulsed—by words. Mary Astor tells him he is a beast and both he and his ship are unclean. She effectively sells him the idea and he surrenders the key without laying a hand on the girl. The following day there is much business of cleaning up ship supervised by Wolheim in white ducks.

From this point, the plot becomes just another regeneration theme. The parson and his wife turn out to be a couple of crooks evading the police and the ministerial garb a masquerade to escape. When Wolheim learns he has been tricked, his belief in cleanliness and godliness receives a jolt. But his pure love triumphs and, when the crook is killed trying to make a getaway, Wolheim offers the girl marriage and the right to walk his ship's deck for the rest of her life.

Difficult as it is to conceive a love affair between Wolheim and Mary Astor, it is even harder to reconcile the story's absurd major premise. Say that a rough sailor such as Wolheim portrays might fall for a beautiful woman merely upon passing her on a wharf. She is obviously out of his class, but let that go, too. Then he discovers her to be the wife of a minister. Would his yen for her in the face of the gap between them be so overpowering as to cause him to go on the make at the first opportunity? The situation raised a titter from the preview audience. Its very abruptness makes it funny. Aside from that, church circles might easily take offense at the posture of a crook in ministerial garb.

Wolheim is still a great actor despite his shortcomings as a director. But he should shy clear of romantic roles. Miss Astor gains in authority with every new talking assignment. In this she nearly succeeds in rising above her material. Ian Keith plays the pseudo parson for all that is in it. And there is a peach of a comedy portrayal contributed by Hugh Herbert. Withal, this is just another movie.

"Brothers"

(Columbia)

Improving a Stage Play

(Reviewed by Sherwin A. Kane)

NICELY balanced direction and an excellent supporting cast share honors with Bert Lytell in making "Brothers" an interesting and exceptionally well made picture. Lytell handles a dual role which demands the portrayal of two opposite characters like the veteran he is, and with some fine character performances by others of the cast the story comes off vastly better than its somewhat dismal nucleus would promise.

Orphaned twin brothers are adopted in infancy, one by a washerwoman, the other by a wealthy attorney. They grow to manhood with only the doctor who presided over the orphanage aware of their relationship, and following the careers of both as an interesting experiment in the relative powers of heredity and environment. Eddie Connolly, adopted by the washerwoman, and Bob Naughton, the adopted child of wealth, are both played by Lytell. Eddie grows up to become the piano player in the back room of Oily Joe's saloon. Bob is a brilliant attorney, heir to his foster parent's practice, but addicted to drink. He is engaged to marry Norma Moore, daughter of the orphanage supervisor, but is also involved in an affair with the wife of a criminal whom he had defended. In an altercation over the woman Bob kills her husband in the latter's room above Oily Joe's. He is observed leaving the place by Oily Joe, who recognizes him, and by Lorenzo, another roomer at the place, who mistakes him for Eddie Connolly. Eddie is arrested and charged with the murder.

At this juncture, Dr. Moore reveals Eddie's identity to his brother, the real murderer, who consents to defend Eddie in court. Conviction appears certain after Lorenzo's testimony, when Naughton upsets the witness's identification of Eddie by posing himself as the prisoner and is wrongly identified by the witness as the accused. Connolly is freed; but Oily Joe begins a systematic blackmailing of Naughton thereafter. The strain on both his finances and nerves brings him finally to the breaking point, assisted by drink. He is sent to a sanitarium secretly, and Dr. Moore prevails upon Connolly to take his brother's place in the Naughton home, after revealing to him the relationship between the two.

Connolly makes a better son to the Naughtons, and a better fiance to Norma than his brother, and when the latter dies in the sanitarium, the way is cleared for him to make both roles permanent ones. Which he does, with only a minor alteration in the latter one. He marries Norma.

Much of the sordidness which was present in the stage play has been eliminated for the purposes of the picture; and, though it may have been prompted only as a concession to the censors, it has had a happy result. It has succeeded in making the story a little more pleasant and somewhat more credible. It has contributed audience appeal which the stage play, however successful, did not possess.

Numerous comedy touches have also been introduced and do much to lighten the story. Maurice Black, as Lorenzo, and Rita Carlyle, as Mag, the inebriate, and frequenter of Oily Joe's, are particularly deserving of mention. Dorothy Sebastian, as Norma, is at all times a charming actress and likeable character. Frank McCormack as Oily Joe does a convincing bit of characterization. Lytell in both roles is everything the picture demands.

"Brothers" is the equal of any current program material, and should do the normal business in the one-week stands and, later, in the split-week houses.

The Concentratin' Kid

(Universal)

Pretty Weak

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

HOOT GIBSON gives a good performance in this western, but he is handicapped plenty by a weak plot. The story is so thin, it probably will be kidded. However, for juvenile and rabid western fans it will get by all right, although it won't stand any real promises.

In this Hoot is a cowboy with a strong yen for a radio crooner whom he has never seen. He wagers a radio set that he will win her as his bride and is kidded plenty by the rest of the outfit. It's a cinch that the two are to be brought together, so the girl comes to the town as member of a theatrical troupe. When Hoot rescues her from the unwelcome advances of the villain, she falls for him, but after he proposes she gives him the air because of the wager. She feels that Hoot has gone to all the trouble of wooing her just to win the radio. There is a rustling plot thrown in, with Hoot routing the band single handedly and rescuing the girl, whom the villain had abducted.

Kathryn Crawford, playing opposite Hoot, is an attractive heroine who can act and sing. James Mason is fair as the heavy, and the rest of the cast is okay. Robert E. Homans gets some laughs as the crusty showman.

Murder

(British International)

Good Attraction

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

PROBABLY the best of the pictures recently produced in Great Britain, this boasts a strong story, capably acted by a fine cast. Top honors go to Herbert Marshall, a good looking and capable hero, who solves the murder mystery.

The picture has the fault common to many British films of too much dialogue and lack of action, but good direction surmounts this obstacle and the suspense is sustained throughout.

An actress is murdered in a theatre after a quarrel with a girl in the cast, who is found unconscious beside the corpse. The girl is sentenced to hang but on the jury is a noted playwright-producer who, after the trial, becomes convinced of the girl's innocence. He traps the murderer through the ingenious method of casting the suspected man in a dramatization of the murder case.

The climax carries a good punch, with the murderer going through his trapeze routine at the circus, placing a noose around his neck and jumping to his death when he realizes he is caught.

There are no names of American prominence in the cast, but Marshall should be played up, as he is a good potential bet. This looks like a good offering for the weekly changes, as well as subsequents. The title should give it draw. It's recorded by RCA Photophone.

Fair Warning

Just Another Western

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

"FAIR WARNING," the latest of the string of George O'Brien Fox westerns, should have much the same audience appeal as other recent releases in which this star is featured. Good split-week billings with heavy draw from the juvenile element.

O'Brien, strong man idol of small boys, cavorts through this one in his best western manner. He captures a wild horse, shoots three of the villain's cronies and finally wins the heroine without joining those punctured by flying lead. The picture has all of the elements of the good old pre-talker westerns, plus the various noises which go with rough riding on wild horses and gallops down hills.

Louise Huntington makes her talker debut in this production. She shows a nice control of dramatic and emotional ability and displays promise. A winning personality is coupled with beauty and charm to make her seem quite worth while for the fighting O'Brien does to win her.

The villain of the piece is nicely handled by that old trouper, Mitchell Harris. George Brent, who began his stage career with a company in Dublin, is the villain who regrets his evil life, splits with the gang, rescues the damsel and is shot at the finish.

The story was written for O'Brien by Max Brand. It offers nothing particularly unusual in plot. O'Brien is the foster son of an old fellow who has a daughter. These two are in love. Harris hates young O'Brien because the youngster shoots better. The two men fight, Harris pops George on the head with a chair.

During the remainder of the picture O'Brien is attempting to gain revenge for this blow.

Alfred L. Werker, who has directed many westerns, has done an able job in this one, while the photography by Ross Fisher is beautiful. He has achieved some great shots of the high Sierras.

A trained horse and an educated dog do some clever stunts, including the rescuing of O'Brien from a burning building.

The Lady Who Dared

(First National)

Average Dove

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

JUST another picture is about the only classification you can give this talker, which will need all the help the Billie Dove name can give, to put it over. The story is filled with many incongruities and moves slowly. No one in the cast has a great deal to do, although all perform rather capably. The picture lacks punch —decidedly.

Will fit okay on double bills and is all right for the split-week spots, but requires plenty of help if booked for week runs. The Dove name is about the only exploitation plug unless set in where Conway Tearle has a following.

This story concerns the wife of the American vice-consul in a South American country. She falls in love with Tearle, an alleged explorer who is really in league with smugglers. Tearle is forced to aid Cosmo Kyrle Bellew and his wife, Judith Vosselli, frame Billie Dove, so they may be able to use her in preventing Sidney Blackmer, the consul, from inspecting their belongings for diamonds.

Billie is caught in Tearle's room, where she has gone to visit him, but his cleverness prevents the agents from searching the room. She is thus saved from disgrace as Blackmer is one of the searchers. It all ends well when Tearle is cleared and the real smugglers are caught. Tearle goes away and Billie and Blackmer are left for the clinch.

Tearle gives the best performance of the cast, while Miss Dove is attractive and does her best with a simple role. The many queer twists of the story spoil its effect and it fails to develop any amount of suspense or interest.

Short Subjects

The Dogway Melody

(M-G-M)

Grand Comedy

WITH that famous and early musical as its model, 'The Dogway Melody" turns out to be a swell take-off on "The Broadway Melody." Instead of humans, dogs of all kinds and descriptions are used and the result is a grand comedy. These subjects are shot silent, of course, with dialogue and effects added. The "Singin' in the Rain" number, played against a set almost identical with that of the original, actually uses Cliff Edwards' warbling. That's a laugh in itself and a howl for those who can spot it. For a "sister" trio—all composed of dogs, of course—the voices of the Bronx sisters, as per the original, are utilized. Clever, very much of a novelty and a grand comedy. Running time, 17 mins.

Audio Review, No. 42

(Pathe)

Fair

A TOUR of the city of Marrakech, metropolis of Morocco, supplies the spectators with picturesque views and unusual settings. The next unit is a dog style show, demonstrating what the various breeds of smart dogs are wearing these days, some of the costumes costing $200. The final unit gives the low down on the fruit once known as the alligator pear, but which took on fancy prices when it was rechristened avocado. Running time, 9 minutes.

Divorced Sweethearts

(Sennett-Educational)

Will Get By

THERE are some good laughs in this situation comedy, although Mack Sennett's tendency to get away from slapstick and toward situation comedy isn't going to help the box-office value of his offerings. Daphne Pollard gets over some laughs and does her usual holding-the-baby act, with the usual results. Unnecessary and becoming an unfunny joke. This has a fairly familiar plot, but it has action and laughs, thanks to Marjorie Beebe and Sennett's direction. Running time, 22 minutes.

Secrets of Nature

(British International)

Good

ANY audience will appreciate this highly diverting study of the frog. It contains some excellent shots of the frog's evolution, from the egg and through the tadpole stage. The slow motion shots of the frog and toad eating are exceptionally good and carry a laugh. Running time, 12 minutes.

A Hollywood Theme Song

(Educational—Sennett)

A Long Howl

HERE is a two-reeler that will provide more laughs per minute than any short seen in some time. William Beaudine has directed it in capable fashion, and it is one long howl from start to finish. Harry Gribbon, Patsy O'Leary and Yola D'Avril have the leading roles and give excellent performances. It's about a soldier from a hick town who sings a theme song whenever he ventures into battles. Many funny gags are interpolated and the comedy moves at a rapid pace. This will appeal to all types and rates a plugging. Running time, 20 minutes.

Cuckoo Murder Case

(M-G-M)

Okay

FIFTEEN or more series of animated cartoons on the market at one time make the going tough for this type of short. That is, unless they're turned out with the cleverness of "Cuckoo Murder Case," one of the "Flip the Frog" subjects produced by Ub Iwerks. Here, the cartoonist takes the usual mystery slant but sends it over with loads to spare. The answer is in the treatment. Iwerks has Flip go through the most amazing contortions. This shows real thought. Running time, 7 mins.

Seeing Things

Feeble

JUST the old haunted house yarn crossed by the inheritance gag. William Demarest falls heir to an estate provided he lives in a haunted house for a year to make good his claim. Otherwise the estate reverts to other relatives. Need you be told who plays ghost?

Not more than a mild giggle from the audience when caught. Maybe the kids will like it.

Helping Grandma

(Our Gang—M-G-M)

Lots of Laughs

Hal Roach's Rascals can be depended upon for laughs and this two reeler is no exception. However, unlike most of the others feauring this troupe, it depends for comedy more upon situations than upon the wild antics of the youngsters. In this, they undertake to help grandma, who owns a small town store, which is sought at low price by a chain store rival. The kids mind the store, while grandma is out, and succeed in boosting up the price to a fine figure, outwitting a scheming miser in the process. The kids' antics in the store are filled with laughs. Running time, 21 minutes.

Believe It or Not, No. 4

(Vitaphone Varieties)

Weak

THE fourth of the "Believe It Or Not" series lacks the novel continuity of its predecessors. Ripley is introduced as a passenger of an incoming ocean liner. Four ship reporters act as straight men for the strange things he is supposed to have seen abroad. Questions and answers comprise most of footage ending with the usual blackboard sketches. Ripley draws a Chinaman he saw who has two pupils in each eye. He also exhibits a few shots of walking fish from an amateur movie negative. The only other character who makes an appearance is a chap who can make himself seven inches taller at will. Much of the effectiveness of this is lost by not photographing a full length figure. Instead the frame cuts off just below the knee. Number four is a weak sister in the Ripley series compared to the others of its group.

Not So Quiet on the Western Front

(British International)

Poor

ASIDE from one or two good specialty turns, this hasn't much to offer. Monty Banks directed and he certainly misses fire on the comedy slants. There are but few laughs, hardly enough to compensate for 25 minutes of running time. This shows a group of British soldiers in a French cafe. A snappy chorus adds to the occasion and there are a couple of fairly good song numbers. Hardly up to the general run of American two-reel comedies. Running time, 25 minutes.

Roosevelt's Compliment

"The cat's whiskers" is the way Governor Roosevelt described the fleet of sound trucks placed at his disposal in the current campaign by Sam Kaplan, president of M. P. Machine Operators' Local 306.

Operators Supply 8 Sound Trucks For Roosevelt

Eight trucks, equipped with sound projection apparatus, are being used in New York State in the interest of the Democratic campaign. These were built at the instigation of Sam Kaplan, president of M. P. Machine Operators Local 306, working in co-operation with officers of the union. Various equipments were tested before the trucks were equipped.

Kaplan met Governor Roosevelt at the Democratic convention at Syracuse and informed him that the union was placing the trucks at the disposal of the party. Since that time, the trucks have been working day and night, manned by specially-trained operators.

The trucks will be kept in commission after close of the campaign and be utilized for private showings.

Nan Cochrane Gets Leon Abrams "U" Post

Hollywood—Leon Abrams, former story editor at Universal studios, has been supplanted by Nan Cochrane who previously was head reader at Universal. Just what Abrams plans to do has not been announced as yet.

DeMilles Coming East

Hollywood—William deMille, who completed his directorial contract with M-G-M several months ago, but remained to make "Passion Flower" is en route to New York accompanied by Mrs. deMille (Clara Beranger).

The trip is a vacation and he does not contemplate engaging in any work while away. Miss Beranger however, will devote herself to the production of her play which is to be produced in New York this season.

Lab to Be Ready Nov. 15

Hollywood—Multicolor is to have its new $1,000,000 laboratory completed by Nov. 15, according to Howard B. Lewis, manager. It will have a capacity of 3,000,000 feet of Multicolor film per week, he says. Two hundred men will be employed.

"Outward Bound" Moves

With opening of "Kismet" at the Hollywood, New York, Warners have moved "Outward Bound" to the Warner, across the street. "Outward Bound" has run ten weeks at the Hollywood.

Oldknow Speeds Fox West Coast Expansion Plan

Los Angeles—Fox West Coast Theatres is rounding out its expansion program, with construction at a new peak, indicating, the company says, the return of business to normalcy. Oscar Oldknow is in charge of the circuit.

Oscar Oldknow

The theatre and office building at Pomona is under way, as are the Bakersfield and Santa Barbara houses. The Fox, Anaheim and the Mission at Fullerton have let contracts for extensive remodeling. The nex Fox at Calexico was opened recently.

In Los Angeles, the Stadium is nearing completion and ground has been broken for the theatre at Westwood. Construction is under way on the Spokane, Phoenix and Billings theatres.

In the Middle West, a number of houses are to be opened soon. These include theatres at Hutchison and Salina in Kansas and at Joplin, Mo.

Legit at Film Prices Offered at Frisco

San Francisco—Giving San Francisco a total of six downtown legitimate theatres, the Tivoli, Eddy Street near Mason, will be opened Friday, offering stage productions at "motion picture prices."

This was announced by Richard Marshal, who will operate the house jointly with Irving Ackerman, of the theatrical firm of Ackerman and Harris, owners of the Casino.

Comerford First Run At Rochester Reopening

Rochester—Completely rebuilt after a $39,000 fire forced it to close last January, Comerford's Capitol, downtown house seating 1,200, reopens Saturday under management of Albert P. Kaufman and Milton Korock, assistant. The theatre was operated by Edward Fay of Providence at the time of the fire.

Famous Division Post For Montreal Showman

Montreal—Harry S. Dahn, for six years manager of the Capitol here, has been appointed division manager of Famous Players Canadian Corp. L. I. Bearg, of Boston, recently was appointed supervisor of company theatres here.

Dussler Now Exhibitor

Memphis, Mo.—W. H. Dussler of Atlantic, Ia., has bought the theatre here from W. A. Collins. Dussler has been interested in the mechanical end of the theatre business and this is his first investment as a theatre manager.

With a Moral

Hollywood—Not so very long ago one of the coast theatre chains invested in a few miniature golf courses for "experimental" purposes. Lately business has fallen off at one of these courses to such an extent it was dismantled and the material put up for sale.

In the same city a rival theatre operator was building a new theatre. Passing the golf course he saw a nice pile of bricks and asked the man standing around if they were for sale. The reply was in the affirmative and immediately the deal was closed and the bricks are now being used in the new theatre. A feature of the deal was that neither fellow knew the other was manager of a rival house.

Brookline to Vote On Sunday Shows

Brookline, Mass.—"Do you want moving picture theatres in Brookline?'

This is a question which will appear on the state election ballot in this town at the election Nov. 4. It will be the second time that the entire electorate of the town has been called upon to vote upon the question. In 1923 it was defeated 5,634 to 1,619.

The matter has also come up in town meetings on several occasions, each time being defeated but by a smaller margin.

This year nobody has any pecuniary interest in the matter, nobody is trying to get a theatre permit. It is merely to be an expression of opinion on the general question.

Brookline adjoins Boston and is within easy distance of all Boston theatres.

RCA Files Counter Claim In De Forest Patent Suit

Wilmington—RCA Photophone has filed answer and counter claim in the suit brought against it by the General Talking Pictures and DeForest Phonofilm in the United States Court here, denying patent infringements.

The defendant company contends that the patents in question that involve improvements in recording and reproducing pulsations or variations in sound and other phenomena had not been issued to any one prior to patents granted John D. Myers in October, 1916, acquired by the defendant company.

The plaintiff set forth in the bill of complaint that they owned the patents and that they had been the victims of infringement.

Multi-Linguals to Be Resumed by Roach

Hollywood—After dropping foreign versions for several months, Hal Roach has decided to make more of them, this time in French and Spanish only. Laurel and Hardy comedies will be in both tongues while the Charley Chase two-reelers will be produced in Spanish only.

Howard with Sono Art

Cleveland—M. C. Howard has joined the local Sono Art-World Wide sales force.

Open Door Policy For Songsters Is Witmark Policy

Open door policy for all song writers will characterize operation of Red Star Music Co., Fox subsidiary under the new regime headed by Jay Witmark who has succeeded Pat J. Flaherty as general manager. Flaherty resigned after a difference over the allotting to another company of publication of a number of songs in forthcoming Fox pictures contending that Red Star should have exclusive publication rights.

Jay Whitmark

Realignment of the catalogue and reorganization of Red Star already is under way by Witmark, who was one of the founders of M. Witmark & Sons, Warner subsidiary. Jack Richmond who for more than 15 years was associated with Leo Feist, Inc. has replaced Charles Harrison resigned. Other changes are contemplated.

At least 75 per cent of Red Star's catalogue will be popular songs, Witmark says.

Hymer and Tracy to Be Permanent Team

Hollywood—Warren Hymer and Spencer Tracy have been designated as a permanent comedy team as a result of their performance in "Up The River." Until Tracy returns to Hollywood, following his Broadway and road engagements with "The Last Mile," Hymer will perform individually in Fox pictures. At present he and Marjorie White are enacting comedy roles in "Oh, for a Man!"

"Judge" Saef to Wed

Boston—Announcement is made of the engagement of Jack "Judge" Saef of the executive staff of the Publix theatres here to Miss Ann Eisenberg of Mattapan. Miss Eisenberg is formerly of Cleveland. "Judge" Saef was associated with Harry Browning in theatre exploitation work.

Badger's Next Set

Hollywood—"A Lady for Love" is another stage play to be made into a talker. The story is by Alan Brunner Schultze, Clarence Badger will direct for First National and Loretta Young will have the leading role.

Farley Joins Independent

Omaha—Fred Farley, former assistant manager of the State (Publix), has resigned to become manager of the Muse here, one of the Popular Amusement Co. houses. Farley has been with Paramount-Publix for the past three years.

$50 Tax Proposed

Sunbury, Pa.—Tax of $50 per year on miniature golf courses is provided in a bill introduced in the city council.

Editor Lambasts Censors; Calls on Hays to Stop 'Em

Kansas City—Several weeks ago A. B. McDonald, foremost of the feature writers on the Kansas City Star, wrote an article dealing with the influence of motion pictures on modern youth. By quoting several judges and magistrates, McDonald indirectly laid the blame for much delinquency on the films, which aroused the ire of J. C. Moffitt, motion picture editor of the Star. Moffitt took it upon himself to answer the charges of McDonald in a series of articles under the title of "To See or Not to See," which were published for four consecutive Sundays and which created considerable interest in Kansas City and throughout the territory. The essence of the features centered on censorship and pointed out its influences pro and con.

In argument against the attack upon underworld pictures and their alleged effects on juvenile crime, Moffitt pointed out that some of the most notorious bandits of history were youths who flourished long before motion pictures were heard of, and that many of these culprits never had read a book or story which might have given any suggestion of a bandit profession.

The inconsistency and inadequacy of censorship as it stands today is the subject of many columns of Moffitt's discussion. Four examples illustrate his meaning. In Kansas, history in connection with Henry VIII had to be altered to conform with the censors' views of propriety. This happened with the picture "Deception," starring Emil Jannings. The censor board caused a subtitle to be inserted when the king was shown with Anne Boleyn on his lap, reading, "They Secretly Had Been Married." Since Henry was already married to some one else, the censorship board thus made the famous king a bigamist, and Kansas got its history diluted, but pure. Again, in the case of "Sonny," starring Richard Barthelmess, a harmless picture was panned insistently and had a great struggle with the censor board because, as it seems, it gave a suggestion that clubwomen were busybodies. On the other hand, in the case of the easily detected hoax, "Ingagi," an earnest effort was made in Kansas City to have a special screening of the picture for school children for its "instructive scientific features."

In Moffitt's words, "The most censorable picture that has appeared in Kansas City in the last five years was passed without a ripple of protest from official headquarters." Likewise in the case of "Montana Moon," where some justified censoring might have been done in connection with the scene in which Joan Crawford gets off a train, sees a cowpuncher and goes to bed with him, there was not a stir of protest from the board and the critic got himself called down for suggesting that the scene might not hold up as the Perfect Behavior for Decorous Young Ladies.

Stupidity of Censors

Moffitt comments upon these examples as follows:

"These anecdotes, taken at random from the leaves of a critic's notebook, illustrate several important phases of censorship. The stupidity of the censors keeps the thoughtful theatregoer in constant fear of the institution they represent; the stupidity of the producers makes censorship an even more pressing menace.

"Censorship of the screen came into being at a time when many conscientious persons thought it necessary to protect their children from the violence and the sensuousness of the early nickelodeons. That child attendance of the movies should be regulated is a subject on which we offer no debate. We believe many fine books are unfit for child readers, that many works of art will not improve adolescent minds, and we hope, we piously hope, that a few pictures shall be made every now and then that are not designed exclusively for mentalities of ten years.

"Relationships between the child and the movies are adequately supervised in most cities by the better films committee of the parent-teacher association. This committee sees many films each week and each week prepares a list of films approved for children. Child attendance of questionable films does not always indicate that parents take advantage of this service, but is being performed faithfully and very well for those parents who consider the movies a problem. If other parents disregard the approved list it may be taken as an indication of the fact they are not as alarmed over Hollywood's plot to corrupt our babies as others might make out.

Maternity a Qualification

"The astonishing thing about the work of this committee is that every week it issues a list of films 'approved for adults.' Just how maternity should indicate an ability to censor films for adults is hard to explain. How does the fact a woman who has had three children qualify her as a judge of entertainment for a Harvard graduate, a truck driver, or a newspaper reporter? What right has she to assume an air of superiority and decide that persons who are older (and younger) than she, and perhaps wiser, may look at and what they may not."

Moffitt points out that nine out of every ten persons who are asked about juvenile delinquency talk about parental neglect, bridge, golf, dancing, and the movies, and that the facts do not bear this out. He quotes Judge Ralph S. Latshaw of Kansas City as saying that he does not believe there is a larger percentage of boy criminals now than there ever was, and that the majority of our boy criminals are mentally and physically below normal to begin with. Moffitt draws this conclusion:

"The big point is this: Golf, dancing, bridge, religion, Billy Sunday, and the movies are made for normal people. All of these factors in modern life are keyed to the reactions of the normal. Civilization will retrograde if we key things to the subnormal. If we must make movies with no public in mind, save one that is criminal and mentally deficient, where will the movies be? The idea is too ridiculous to think of. It never would be thought of but for the American habit of thoughtlessly giving expert testimony on any subject whatever.

"The state of the motion picture would be improved greatly if Mr. Hays, instead of spending millions of dollars trying to curry the turnkeys, the deputy sheriffs, the judges, the reformers and all the other sacred cows, would hire a few good lawyers, whenever any of the aforementioned gentry brought serious charges against the screen, and would make him prove it. We have laws that cover drunken and careless driving. It is general careless talking that is running down the country's fourth largest industry."

Swank

Another blonde has come to the end of her contract in Hollywood without the producers evincing any particular interest in her cinema future. She is beautiful and how she knows it; can dance a little, sing a little, and got the wonderful breaks of being cast opposite very important stars and in the best directorial vehicles. All this, however, didn't help her to make any particular impression on the fans, and by this time next year, unless she's taken up by one of the smaller companies, she'll be one of the New Yorkers who'll be panning Hollywood. They always do that when they can't get a good job out there.

It's her own fault this time. After her first picture, she put on so much swank that wise ones even then said it was only a matter of time. The men stars in each production passed on word to their successors about her bad disposition and temperament. She was engaged to be married to some rich man who made the same fatal error of butting into his girl friend's career. He even visited the New York offices of the company which employed her and complained about the size type used on her name in the advertisements. She never stopped complaining, which is one of the reasons why, when her contract expires next month, the studio executives will have no regrets in bidding her a none-too-sad farewell.

Indoor Golf Socks Business at Albany

Albany—Indoor miniature golf courses, many of which are constructed on an elaborate scale, are being opened in this city and seriously threaten the picture theatres in the way of patronage. During the past week two large indoor courses opened with several already in operation and a half dozen or more in sight.

Two of these have opened in a large downtown block formerly housing a printing concern and within a short block of two theatres. These are equipped with refreshment booths and other attractive features. One indoor course is advertising the attendance of two well known "pros." Up to a month or so ago, exhibitors in Albany were under the impression that there would be no competition from miniature golf during the late fall and winter season.

Wayne a 'Peach' To Hempel; Opera Waning, Says Diva

Chicago—"He's so big and handsome! I think he's a peach."

That was the verdict of Frieda Hempel, famous diva, on her arrival here from the Coast in the company of John Wayne, whose first feature role came with "The Big Trail." Madam Hempel's pleased ejaculations referred to Wayne, but, lest romance be suspected, her interest was only a maternal one. The discrepancy in ages, you know.

Madam Hempel was here for the Civic Opera opening, and soon undertakes a concert tour of Wisconsin cities.

"Opera," she said, "is definitely on the wane. Pictures are the only form of popular entertainment which can look forward to progress."

Wayne, a six-foot-three cowboy, in the approved high-heeled boots and sombrero, was something of a shock to State Street, which found the paradox of a he-man on a high heel hard to take. Wayne is here for personal appearances at McVickers, where "Big Trail" opened in mid-week.

Unions Demand 3 Men in Booth For Spoor Device

Chicago—New labor difficulties are foreseen here with the introduction of Spoor-Berggren projection equipment at the RKO State-Lake. Claiming that the new equipment is highly complicated in operation and requires unusual attention, the operators' union, through Tom Maloy, business manager, is prepared to demand that three men be employed in the booth where the Spoor machines are used. Mort Singer, RKO executive here, has asked Jack Miller, president of the Chicago Exhibitors' Association, to confer with Maloy on the subject at once. RKO is prepared to use the Spoor equipment with the radio picture, "Danger Lights," which is set to follow "Check and Double Check" at the State-Lake.

CHICAGO.

COSTON office, now the Warner theatre department for this section, moves to the Warner Exchange building this week-end. This definite association with the Warner interests will mark the end of the Coston Booking Circuit, which has been on the decline since the affiliation was first made. Operation of Warner Theatres is to be the sole function of the office in the future, it is believed, with the bulk of the former Coston subscribers being inherited by Midwest Theatres.

State-Lake reduced its weekly nut $7,500 when the can was tied to vaude. The same move doubled the house's gross for the first two weeks following the change, and this week ("Check and Double Check") the gross was tripled. For the three weeks' period the gross of the State-Lake exceeds that of the Chicago during the same period. The public may still want flesh, but it looks like it prefers to have it on the dinner table rather than the stage.

They had too much.

Balaban & Katz Slated to Win Wide Film Race

Chicago—It looks like RKO is being beaten to the draw by Publix-B. & K. on that wide-screen angle. With McVickers opening Tuesday night after a day's work putting in the equipment, the Publix house has at least a three weeks' advantage—and possibly longer—over RKO.

The Radio production, "Danger Lights," filmed on Spoor-Berggren 70 mm. film, and slated some time ago to go into the State-Lake with the already installed Spoor projection equipment, was held back on two different occasions by RKO. With the Amos and Andy picture now in the State-Lake, and good, conservatively, for three more weeks, "Danger Lights" is put well in the background by the B. & K. coup. The Spoor equipment may not be ready for use by that time even, it was learned this week, with the tentative spotting of Pathe's "Her Man" to follow "Check and Double Check" at the State-Lake.

The explanation appears to be that technical adjustments of the Spoor equipment remain to be made, and these will require some time to complete. RKO technicians and executives, it is now learned, at successive screenings of "Danger Lights" at the State-Lake left the theatre dissatisfied, not so much with the results achieved by the Spoor equipment as by its mechanical performance. Adjustments to conform with their ideas are now being made at the Spoor laboratories, and it is difficult to determine how much time these will require.

B. & K. is reported also to be readying the Chicago for installation of the wide screen equipment. All of which, having been done on the quiet, hit Chicago as a surprise. It was generally believed here that RKO would be first in the Loop with the wide screen, with time to spare.

Goetz, Dezel On Own

Chicago—Leon Goetz and Albert Dezel are in New York producing a new drama to be released under the title of "Over the Great Divide," from the original story, "Exodus," purchased recently by Goetz. Ben Lyon and Marie Prevost will be starred in a popular cast which also includes Russell Simpson. Talking and sound sequences will be recorded on Western Electric. The working title of the production, which will be distributed by Road-Show Pictures of Chicago (Goetz), is "All Faces West."

Showmen Ignore Dialogue Cuts By Chi Censors

Chicago—New trouble between the Chicago board of censors and local distributors is brewing here over dialogue which has been ordered out by the board but which exhibitors, with increasing frequency, are failing to eliminate at showings.

Legally the censors here have no authority to order deletions of dialogue or to censor it in any way, as the audible lines are given the same legal status as spoken lines on the stage, and no ordinance exists for the censoring of these. Distributors, however, have not made an issue of the matter, taking the attitude that if they did protest the censoring of dialogue it would be a simple matter for the censor board to get the required ordinance placed in the books. With this authority behind them, distributors believe, orders for dialogue cuts would soon become a far more serious problem than it is at present.

Use Fader on Cuts

Under the present system, when the censors ask a dialogue deletion the distributors send a registered letter to the exhibitor playing the picture advising him of the disapproved dialogue, and asking him to comply. The letter relieves the exchange of responsibility for what happens thereafter. Exhibs who comply with the censors' demands use the "fader" at the objectionable points, so that, while the picture continues, the spoken lines are made inaudible. Some exhibs also "varnish over" the sound track at the objectionable points, but inaccuracies in computing their position on the film, and comparable difficulties encountered with discs, result in slips which the censors are beginning to regard as deliberate. Many exhibs, too, ignore the exchange's instructions entirely.

Complaints against exhibs who are playing pictures without the necessary permits are also increasing and result in plenty of aggravation over at the police building.

Universal May Get New Building

Chicago—Tentative plans for the completion of the Film Exchange building at Thirteenth St. and Wabash Ave. now indicate that the owners of the Universal Exchange building may take over the construction and operation of the proposed new building in the near future. This is indicated in a lease recently signed by the Universal exchange here, which stipulates that Universal will retain its present quarters until completion of the new exchange building, at which time it will move to the Thirteenth St. location. The lease implies that completion of the new exchange building is to be undertaken by the owners of the present Universal exchange building.

Chi Being Shot Up Some More

Chicago—The townspeople are getting a few of their infrequent glimpses of pictures in the factory stage this week. Sidney Lanfield, Fox director, arrived early in the week with cameramen and technicians to shoot exteriors for "Three Girls Lost," authored in three weeks by the youthful Bob Andrews of the Chi Daily News, in which paper the story ran serially. Shortly after, George Hill, M-G-M director, arrived to spot locales for a picture which will go into work here in the near future. Hill refused to disclose any information concerning the production other than that the scenario was by Frances Marion, his wife.

Stars Palling on Chi Reporters; Want Leg Poses

Chicago—"Movie folks," observed a reporter at the La Salle Street station the other day, "are altogether too numerous around here. They get in your hair." He glanced a little dejectedly at an assignment slip bearing an even dozen picture names. "If I was a guy without no imagination," he remarked, "the sheet wouldn't get a story out of the batch of them. Hey, Harry," he yelled at a photographer who was preparing to shoot a smiling actress posed on the steps of a Pullman coach, "lay off that. If she won't climb up on a baggage truck and cross her legs she can wait till the fan mags come around for her picture."

Among the transient luminaries this week were John Wayne of Fox's "Big Trail" cast, here for an opening day appearance at the Roosevelt; Alexander Gray and Bernice Claire, former musical comedy folks, now of the films and here for a week at the Palace; Irene Bordoni, just completing a week at the same theatre; Stanley Smith, former juvenile support for Nancy Carroll, here to do a week's turn at the Oriental.

Hollywood-bound was a group of foreign stars who will make German and French versions of "The Boudoir Diplomat" for Universal. They are Olga Tschechova, Tala Birrell, Ivan Petrovich, Andre Nicolle and Marcel de Garcin, and Mr. and Mrs. Johannes Riemann.

Adolph Zukor was here to attend the seventh conference of Major Industries at the University of Chicago in mid-week, and Harry M. Warner also spent a few days in Chicago en route from the Coast to New York.

Maurice Hi-Hat Sighs Irene, But Buddy Says Nay

Chicago—France is accusing Maurice Chevalier of having donned the Hollywood high-hat, and is now declaring that one hundred million Americans can't be right about him, so Ashton Stevens, drama critic of the Herald-Examiner, quotes Irene Bordoni as tattling. Bordoni, Stevens says, now refers to Chevalier as her "one-time" favorite gamin.

In the same breath the critic hastens to add a defense of the Frenchman contributed by his pal, Ben Bernie, orchestra pet of the Byfield's democratic dance room—the College Inn at the Hotel Sherman.

"Bernie," relates Stevens, "recently gave Chevalier a 'bon voyage' night in Hollywood with a $10 cover charge and half a thousand applicants turned away. More than $6,000 was turned over to Chevalier after ful deductions for expense, breakage, and interest on the bonds."

"But the high-hatter," Bernie's story goes, "wouldn't take a cent for himself."

The Embellishments of Moorish Motif Add Beauty of Tone to the Interior of the Granada, Walthamstow, England

Errors and Blunders

IN WHICH AN AUTHORITY TRACES THE HISTORY OF MOORISH AND SPANISH ARCHITECTURE

By THEODORE KOMISARJEVSKY
Formerly Director, Moscow Art Theatre

I HAVE decorated the interior of the Granada Theatre, Walthamstow, England, in Moorish style, or, as the man in the street calls it, "Spanish" style. That "Moorish" style of which so many restaurants, Turkish baths, casinos, etc., are nefarious examples, is no more Moorish than the so-called Spanish style.

The style of architecture and decoration of the Alhambra Palace at the Spanish town of Granada was imported into Spain by the Moors or Arabs who conquered the country and who, in mentality and religion, had nothing in common with the original Spanish inhabitants. About 1,200 years ago the Moors, Musselmans of the North African desert, overran a good part of the World, reaching the Indies in the East, West Africa in the West and in Southeastern Europe, stopping at the Gates of Vienna. They established themselves particularly firmly in Spain, which has never since been so prosperous, happy and well governed as it was under the Moorish invaders. Wherever the Moors came they brought with them a culture dating from the ancient Persian Kings, a literature and an art which was specially rich in the sphere of architecture.

The monuments of architecture which were left by the Arabs in Spain after their expulsion are what are known today as examples of the "Moorish" style.

Probably on account of its picturesque qualities, its whimsicality and multi-colored character it was so much favored in the nineteenth century for restaurants, night haunts, etc. We can call to mind places the world over known as the "Alhambra," "Mauritania," etc., which, however, do no justice to the originals. Those responsible for the exterior and interior of those places of amusement usually tried the "Moorish experiment" by merely imitating or copying the genuine article. Apart from the fact, if I may venture to say so, that they were not people of any great taste or discernment, it is not possible to reproduce faithfully Moorish decoration without using the same materials as the Moors, who worked, one might say, like jewellers on a large scale when embellishing their Mosques and Palaces.

Paint and Plaster Unused

Paint they used but seldom, and of plaster they knew nothing, but stones of various kinds and colors, marbles, carved woods, and a variety of metals were the materials utilized by a people who were not only architects in the matter of building, but sculptors, carvers and metalsmiths as well. They did not add color by daubing or painting the walls, but by glazed tiles and a clever combination of different materials. They relied, for the full effects of their work to be manifest, on light and shade, on sun and moonlight.

But that sunlight was of the South and that moon of the Arabian Nights! So the effects achieved by the Moors in their buildings in the Iberian Peninsula cannot be reproduced without the Southern heavens even if the same materials were to be used. Thus, the Moors, relying on the assistance of Nature, left wide openings in the walls to admit light, and even small rooms, usually plain in decoration, had fantastically shaped grilles over numerous windows whereby the sun rays and moonbeams might make decorative shadows on the walls!

Copying the Spanish buildings of the Arabs in order to give an impression of Moorish architecture is out of the question, in a northern country. Firstly, because the materials used in the original would be prohibitive for any commercial undertaking and, secondly, because even by faithfully substituting paint and plaster for those materials the resulting impression would be one of cheapness and disharmony. Beside this, there is another consideration and probably the most important, i. e., the proportions of modern buildings and the arrangement of the rooms are directly antagonistic to the Moorish plans of construction. In order to convince oneself of this fact, it is quite sufficient to look at the Court of the Lions of the Alhambra Palace at Granada and to compare it with the entrance hall of any of the modern palatial luxury hotels. No less convincing would it be to compare a modern kitchen fitted with electric cooking apparatus, American sinks, refrigerators, patent dish-washing machines, etc., with the beautiful, simple

Small Sculptural Pieces In Panels Predominate Interior of RKO'S Downtown

Dethroning the Orient and Its Idols

CHARM AND WARMTH SUCCEED THE GROTESQUE AND CONVEY A TRUE SPIRIT OF CHEERY, HOME-LIKE ATMOSPHERE

DETROIT—Taking its place among the de luxe houses of Detroit, the new and transformed R-K-O occupies a unique place among playhouses of the automobile city. For charm and intimacy, for warmth of coloring and decorative effects as well as comfort, the Downtown has already won the plaudits of picturegoers. Through almost complete remodeling of the interior, John Eberson, architect, has attained that effect so earnestly striven for, of a theater that, immediately upon entering, gives the impression of cheery, homelike atmosphere.

This intimacy has not been sacrificed to ornate splendor although the house has achieved the effect of massive gorgeousness in its every detail.

The Downtown was formerly known as the Oriental. It is located on West Adams at Grand Circus Park, the hub of Detroit's business and night life. The Oriental, true to its name, was garish in its decorative schemes with a riotous blend of colors as the motif of wall and ceiling decorations and ugly Chinese idols in various niches and recesses along walls and corridors.

Now this is completely changed. Artistic in the extreme, every detail of decoration has been carefully blended so that the entire interior is as cheerful as a living room in the finest home.

As one enters the main door they find a large lobby, the high ceiling giving an impression of baronial vastness. In fact one could well imagine that they were in the reception hall of a medievial king. Costly paintings line the outer wall, all the work of a famous Detroit artist. These paintings lighted with soft amber tints are found along the grand staircases on each side of the lobby and the mezzanine as well.

Where formerly the many, blinking Chinese idols overlooked in grotesque fashion the lobby and foyer, there are now replicas of the most famous sculptural pieces in the world of art.

On the walls are light fixtures that probably have no counterpart in any theater. These rise from an illuminated base and then are carried by velvet upright to an artistically shaped spread of 20 amber lights set between artistic brass supports. Topping this is a horseshoe of a dozen or more small ball-shaped lights, old rose in color and giving an effect that is most unique. Two large chandeliers of amber art glass with crystal hangings and surmounted by rows of small decorative lamps throw a soft amber glow that is both restful and affords plenty of light without glare.

The foyer has been treated in similar fashion but here the use of numerous wall brackets has added to the brilliance of illumination. In the center of the foyer a huge crystal chandelier surrounded by art glass of varied colors gives an impression of solidity and ornate dignity. All the colorings, the hangings, the tapestried walls, the carpets have been carefully designed so as to perfectly match the splendor of Italian rose-colored marble used for the base and columns that are found in the lobby, the main foyer and the mezzanine.

Another touch of comfort is found in the profusion of luxurious divans, arm chairs, and period furniture that has been placed in all vantage points in foyers and lobbies. This idea has been carried out to the main lobby where people can relax while waiting for seats.

Carpets throughout are all specially woven and match perfectly with the decorative scheme. Especially eye compelling is the huge seamless carpet in the lobby, deep red in color with black figure and black border which carries into the stair coverings of plain rich red and black. The lobby and stairs were formerly bare and the contrast of the new covering is especially noticeable.

Entering the theatre through oddly shaped Oriental doors, hand carved and of artistic design, one finds an auditorium that is a delight. The new chairs of red velour back and wine colored leather seats are both inviting and extremely comfortable. The soft rays of amber and blue lights set in recessed panels illumin-

East India Moves to California

ORIENTAL MOTIF ENHANCED BY SUBDUED LIGHTING IN AUDITORIUM AND SPANISH ARCHITECTURE HIGHLIGHTS OF FOX THEATRE AT VISALIA

VISALIA, Cal. — Acoustical plaster and subdued lighting are combined to assure the best in acoustics with maximum beauty in the new Fox here, recently completed. The house is economically built, but without sacrifice of any features of beauty, comfort or practical sound and film projection. The unusual prominence of the box-office also is a feature of this new house.

The entire ceiling and side walls of the auditorium are treated with acoustical plaster. The material is artistic and decorative as well as fireproof.

Subdued lighting removes the effect of the rough plaster finish, giving it a smooth appearance, which greatly enhances the beauty and effectiveness of the East India motif of this atmospheric theatre. All lighting is concealed in the side walls, so that no shadows are cast upon the ceiling, which gives patrons the illusion of the outdoors. Doors are provided at the ends of the aisles, to prevent any noise from the foyer from interfering with the presentation.

The organ is concealed in shrines on either side of the proscenium opening, with the grille opening taken care of in novel manner, as the photograph below shows. The proscenium arch ties in with the general effect of the ornamentation, carrying out the style of the old temples found in the Far East.

An innovation is introduced in the treatment of the box office, which serves as the base for the tower, which is visible for miles in all directions. Thus, the cashier's window commands the most important position in the lobby, ticket sales being handled from both streets of the intersection. A large clock serves as a magnet in attracting attention, with the name Fox below it on either side.

Spanish architecture is used for the exterior, the exterior walls being of reinforced concrete. This harmonizes with the architecture predominant in the town. The roof is supported by steel trusses with a steel deck and composition roof covering more than one-half inch of insulation.

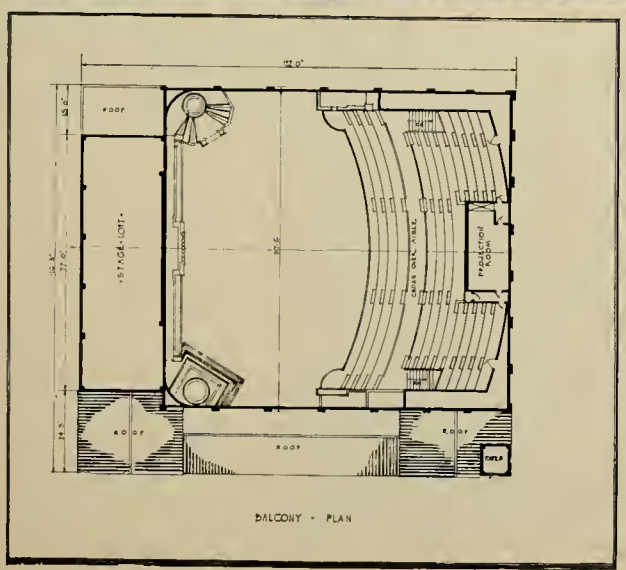
This Spanish motif is carried into the lobby but in the foyer the design changes to East Indian, which gives a massive effect. On one side of the foyer stairs ascend in both directions to the small mezzanine landing which serves the balcony. On the other side is the entrance to the main floor of the auditorium. At the end opposite the entrance is located the manager's office.

The architect here has developed an ingenious arrangement to conceal the safe, thus minimizing robbery hazard. A special closet arrangement hides the safe from view. (Complete blue-print description of this unique safe layout appeared in the last Showman, Oct. 4.)

The ceiling of the foyer is supported by large beams, which contribute to the effect of massiveness, with the highly colorful decorations and design of the carpet creating a feeling of warmth and luxury.

One side of the mezzanine landing in the foyer is provided with rest rooms and cosmetic room, artistically decorated. The cosmetic room is modern in treatment.

Visalia is a city of about 10,000 inhabitants. The theatre was constructed at an estimated cost of $134,163.



The new Visalia Fox theatre was designed by Balch & Stanbery, Los Angeles architects. Adoption of a Spanish design for the exterior is in line with the policy of Fox West Coast Theatres, in making theatre designs conform to the architectural scheme of the community, wherever such course is feasible.

Left—Spanish in design and deliberately so in order to make the Visalia conform with the architecture of the community.

Below — Avoiding the danger of overdressing, this view of the attractive lobby gives a splendid idea of the good taste used in decoration.

Richly colored carpeting, in perfect harmony with surrounding tapestry and objets d'art, combine to make the interior of this Fox house one of beauty.

FOR THE NEEDS OF TODAY AND TOMORROW

The motor-generator, like all other important inventions and developments, has its background of research and experiment, accumulated during those formative years when projection of motion pictures presented, almost daily, new and puzzling problems.

Today the electric current needs of the modern picture machine lamp are definitely charted and understood by experts engaged in these researches and experiments.

General Electric engineers have penetrated and carefully examined the problem of current supply to the picture lamp and have produced the highly efficient G-E motor-generator as the answer not only to present-day demands but also to the probable call of tomorrow for much higher amperage.

As exclusive distributor in the United States of G-E motor-generator sets in the theatre field, the E. E. Fulton Company will gladly furnish complete information on this line. Or, if more convenient, address your inquiry to the nearest G-E office.

"This Man, the Architect" — His Code of Ethics and Modus Operandi

An Intimate Close Up of the Building Tailor in Which Many Old Beliefs Involving His Connection With Drafts, Plans and Specifications Are Permanently Thrown Into the Discard

THE question, "Shall I employ an architect?" is easily answered if the man about to build will ask himself, instead, "Do I want a stock house (or church or store or what not) or do I want something designed for me personally—something that meets the special needs of my family (or congregation or business) and affords a proper setting for it? In a word, do I want that which is fitted particularly to me, to my needs and my ideals?"

If the former alternative will satisfy you, do not bother with an architect. If you do want a building tailor-made to the measure of your particular needs and desires, the architect's function is the only known means of getting it.

One of the most prevalent misconceptions regarding the architect is that he is a maker of plans. Those who visualize the architect in this light also believe that, once having secured a "set of plans," they are fully equipped to carry the building project to a successful conclusion. Nothing could be much further from the truth. The making of plans is often the smallest and most insignificant part of the architect's work. It is the part that he can and does relegate to his draftsmen, since his other activities are of so much greater importance. The older and more experienced of the architects will tell you that the further they advance in their profession the less do they become dependent upon plans.

The Insignificance of "Plans"

To conceive of the architect as a mere producer of plans is like regarding a physician as a mere producer of prescriptions, or a lawyer as a mere compiler of briefs. "Plans," by which we mean drawings, specifications, memoranda, are but partial means to an end; they are mere fragmentary records of instruction to others regarding what the architect wants done. If you have ever had the opportunity to see a building erected by a builder who was guided solely by a set of plans, and then to see what the architect himself produced from that same set of plans before they were stolen for misuse, the real futility of plans alone would be quite apparent to you. Building merely from a "set of plans" is a great deal like picking up a doctor's prescription on the street and trying it out to see what it will do to you.

Architecture is properly numbered among the learned professions. The qualifications of one who practices it are perhaps more diverse than those required in any other professional activity. He must have a background of general culture and the liberal arts, an instinctive feeling for design, a highly developed technical skill in construction, a broad familiarity with materials that range from the delicacy of fine fabrics to the rugged strength of stone, steel and concrete, and, in addition to all this, he must be a business man familiar with the varied contractual and legal relationships occurring in the complex business of building. He must know intimately the intricacies of structure, strength and durabilities of materials, sanitation, plumbing, hydraulics, heating, ventilation, acoustics, electricity, and many other minor branches of science and engineering. It is obvious that such an equipment is not to be had excepting through a long and arduous period of study and training. Most of the states now recognize this fact—and the rest are rapidly falling into line—in requiring that one who calls himself an architect shall be registered or licensed by the state after satisfying a properly qualified board of examiners that his qualifications are really adequate. In some states it is again the law for a man even to call himself an architect without such registration, and many cities protect the public by requiring in that any building put up within its boundaries shall be designed and supervised by one so registered or licensed.

What Is the Architect?

THIS close-up of the architect was conceived and published by Charles Scribner's Sons for the following reason:

"The architect, like the doctor and the lawyer, has a code of ethics which prevents his telling the public what he is and does. We think the public is entitled to know, so, as interested bystanders, we are setting forth herein some of the facts."

THE SHOWMAN, believing the information to be of interest to exhibitors and all those interested in the advancement of the theatre, therefore publishes the text in full, with permission of the authors.

What the Architect Is Not

The architect, of course, is not a building contractor. He does not buy materials, he does not guarantee costs, nor has he any financial interest in the building operation or in the materials that go into it. He is your professional adviser and advocate, paid by you and looking out for your interests in an operation that is far more technical and complex than the average case in court. And yet, with all this, the position he occupies is a curiously judicial one, as between you, the client, and your building contractor. The courts recognize him as a sort of umpire: in questions at issue between owner and builder he is the judge as to what is fair to both.

The relationship of a man and his architect is similar to that between a man and his physician. You retain the practitioner of your choice, telling him as much as possible of your aims, needs, mode of life (or business), and seek his diagnosis.

It will be well to realize the fact that you can tell him how large a building and what quality you want, allowing him to ascertain what it will cost; or else you can bind him as to quality and cost, allowing him to tell you how much building you can secure for that amount; or, again, you can bind him as to size and cost, in which case he will tell you what quality is obtainable. Manifestly it is not possible for you to specify all three of these governing factors—size, quality and cost—since any two of them will necessarily determine the third.

Selecting the Right Man

Select an architect as you would select a physician or a lawyer. In this age of specialization many architects, though not all, confine themselves rather closely to certain kinds of work. A man whose practice consists for the most part of banks, for example, may not be the one you would select to do a country house. Many architects refuse to do country house work, either large or small. Others whose practice consists mainly of ecclesiastical work may decline a commission to design a hospital, just as a throat specialist would send you elsewhere for an appendix operation. If the project is a large and complicated one, it will probably be well to choose an architect familiar with that particular kind of work. If, on the other hand, the project is small, you will probably secure much more personal attention by engaging one of the younger men who still has his reputation to make.

There are advantages, of course, in the services of a nationally known established practitioner. There are other advantages in the services of the younger man whose reputation is as yet unmade.

One of the worst ways of selecting an architect is by inviting several to present sketches. The one who happens to be the best salesman, or who appears with the prettiest pictures (which he may have had someone else prepare) may win the commission. The better architects will not descend to such a way of getting business, just as the better lawyers or physicians will not compete for a case on the basis of tentative briefs or competitive prescriptions.

Competitions

In some instances, where public work seems to require the final choice of an architect in a manner free from any suggestion of personal preference, competitions are held, but these will be entered by reputable practitioners only when conducted under approved methods of procedure, and usually when each competitor is paid for the study and work that these preliminary drawings necessitate. Details of such competition

H-W PUBLIX DE LUXE THEATRE CHAIR

THE PUBLIX THEATRE CORPORATION has awarded its 3rd successive contract for theatre seats to the Heywood-Wakefield Company! In the past 3 years, this world-famous organization of showmen has installed more than one-quarter of a million H-W chairs in their houses throughout the United States. It is a distinct pleasure to receive the third straight contract from Publix not alone because of the large amount of business involved but because of the definite stamp of approval given to Heywood-Wakefield chairs by Publix officials and by the Publix Engineering and Maintenance Staffs.

During the recent years in which we have been working with Publix, many changes have occurred in theatre seating designs. Sound pictures, for instance, created a demand for new acoustical properties in theatre chairs. Guided by and cooperating with Publix engineers and technicians, Heywood-Wakefield has developed theatre chairs which accurately and perfectly meet sound requirements—chairs which are so modern, so luxuriously comfortable that Publix patrons everywhere have gone out of their way to praise the excellence of the seating accommodations provided for them.

Personnel In Some Ways Seen As More Important Than Attraction

"Cabinet Rule" Produces Best Results for Balaban & Katz—Executive Office Maintains Close Contact with House Managers in Co-ordinating Efforts

CHICAGO.—Administration of the Publix-Balaban & Katz circuit is based not on the authority of one man or office but on the co-ordinated workings of many. The organization contains no office corresponding to that of a general manager. Its various operating departments are closely linked together; the heads of these departments working as a committee of the whole, combine to create the administrative authority commonly endowed with a general manager. Thus there is no "line and staff" organization but, rather, a committee proposition composed of the man in charge of stage shows, he who heads the booking department, the chief of personnel, the director of publicity and advertising—all separate and distinctly operated departments but co-ordinated for the purpose of working out details of administration in each and evolving a harmoniously working whole.

The benefits of this administrative policy are to be found in the opportunity it provides a greater number of minds to work in individual ways toward a common objective—the success of the theatre enterprise. It provides department heads with greater range and freedom in the administration of their own departments, while at the same time, the familiarity with the workings of allied departments which it affords them avoids the danger of bureaucratic tendencies. It teaches that no single department is more or less important to the whole than another.

This committee rule likewise contributes significantly to the successful operation of the individual theatre and the circuit as a whole. It does this not only through the efficient administration of single departments but directly—by virtue of the close co-ordination of all department heads, who contribute their knowledge, experience and departmental resources to other departments.

How Personnel Department Works

This is best illustrated in the functioning of the department of personnel which, in a sense, is perhaps the closest link between the executive offices and the theatres. This organization has from its inception stressed the importance of the right type of man for its theatre staff. From house manager on down the men are picked with exactitude and with certain requirements in mind. It is these house men who, after all, contact the public and from whom the public's opinions of the organization are formed. The company's goodwill is in their hands to a certain important extent. The gruff, hardboiled, old-time manager, with a derby hat and an offensive cigar is outmoded by the neat, affable, polite manager who has the comfort of his patrons and their entertainment always in mind. The large size of most of the theatres presents him, in addition, with a multitude of other problems and considerations, all of which are of vital importance inasmuch as the prosperity of every house is founded on its "return" patronage. In this respect, there is not one product, but 52 to sell patrons annually. No house problem is ever permanently disposed of. It is present from week to week and if mishandled once, means not the loss of one sale so much as the loss of many. A patron disappointed in a program will return hopefully to view the new one, but a disgruntled patron may never come back. In this respect the personnel of a house is more important, even, than the picture showing.

"Publix Service"

BALABAN & KATZ is generally credited with introducing new standards of courtesy, comfort and convenience in picture theatres. The standards are exemplified in "Publix Service," put into effect by Sam Katz.

Here is an outline of the B. & K.'s views toward personnel, the carrying out of which has been a big factor in the circuit's success.

Some Requisites

The new house manager begins where the old left off. The sole stock in trade of the old manager was "showmanship sense." That is still a requisite, but the new man must have, in addition, greater education—or its mind-broadening equivalent. He must be a shrewd and efficient business man who knows costs in their relation to income, he must be a diplomat, capable of handling people, he must be thoughtful and observing, as such things as audience reaction to a certain type of film are significant and valuable knowledge for the executive office.

Different neighborhoods react differently to certain types of pictures. These sectional variations in taste, obviously vital to the health of the box office, must be watched for closely. One neighborhood will never tire of comedies, another of mysteries, and so on. These preferences must be known and catered to, and anything counter to them avoided as far as possible. The manager must be relied upon for that information. To assist him, ushers in all houses are supplied with "comment cards" on the opening day of each week. Copies of these cards are sent to the house managers' department, to the booking, publicity and production departments. They not only aid in determining neighborhood preferences, but show how exploitation should be handled in that and subsequent neighborhoods.

Sometimes, if adverse comments are weighty enough, they result in the withdrawal of a picture or act. Occasionally, these "comment cards" are a guide to run pictures and the circuit is prepared by them in advance to make their arrangements accordingly when, perhaps, prior to a picture's opening, its chances of being a "hit" were hardly considered. Comments, in addition, are a guide to whether or not they are to receive the benefits of that most valuable advertising medium—word-of-mouth advertising.

Obviously, a house manager is an important cog in the organization. He must be trained and selected with care. The Publix managers' training school has furnished some creditable managerial talent.

However, survey of our present personnel shows that 26 managers or assistants came up from the ranks, having started as ushers, five began as doormen and nine as "specials" (those having had some sort of allied experience and 12 weeks of training).

There are executive positions waiting for managers who prove themselves too valuable to be kept in charge of a house. Such inducements tend to supply with unusual calibre even in the ushers' ranks, and in addition they keep alive ambition in the managers themselves. Managers are aided and encouraged in other ways as well.

Weekly managers' meetings are held with the chief of personnel, at which every one of them has a full opportunity to express himself, to solicit and receive the advice and aid of other managers in the solution of his individual theatre's problems. It is the executive committee of the organization over again in miniature, with a union of interests for the solution of common problems.

Publicity Men Kept in Field

Publicity men are kept continually in the field, visiting theatres, conferring with neighborhood managers. They are thus familiarized with local situations and know what type of exploitation is most effective for certain pictures when they come to certain neighborhoods.

Further encouragement is offered house managers by the posting of cash awards for production and improvement. Quarterly business drives are engaged in, during which a $300 prize is offered the house manager showing the greatest profit at its conclusion, and a similar prize is offered the house showing the greatest improvement during the period of the drive.

Thus, it may be seen that the efficiency of the managerial machine, vital in itself, is dependent upon the harmonious functioning of the executive committee of department heads. The department of personnel, for instance, does not insist that a manager and his staff concern themselves solely with proper deportment in their relations with the public. He sees to it that they furnish vital information and aid to all other departments wherever possible. In return, this and other information and resources are employed by the various departments to contribute to the successful functioning not only of their own departments but of others and the theatres as well.

This MODIFIER is instantly adjusted to any screening surface

NOW you can remove the temporory, stationary, makeshift modifiers fram the screen and definitely solve all screen modifying problems by installing the Vallen Automotic Screen Modifier, which is oll the proscenium equipment needed to show Widescope, Magnascope, Grondeur or any size film.

The Vallen Autamatic Screen Modifier is a complete unit with metal screen frame, modifying travel control, modifying curtains and push button aperated electrical driving equipment, extremely flexible in installation and aperation. Can be installed for use with small size screens or mammoth screens; ar readily changed when the small screen is replaced. It requires no additional space beyond the present screen frome. In fact, provision is made for lacing the screen to the metal frame of the modifier.

The modifying curtoins are instontly contracted or expanded to exactly conform with the screening surface of the film, simply by pushing an electric cantrol button. These contral buttons can be located at the most canvenient positions in the theatre; on the stage or in the projectian room. The modifying curtains are always taut, without unsightly folds and assure a straight picture line on oll sides.

The Vallen Screen Modifier is efficient, practical and a necessory proscenium unit. It has been demonstrated to owners of many of the country's leading theatres who hove acclaimed it a necessity and backed their approval with purchases.

Half Tone or Line Engraving? And How To Determine Which To Use

Each Has a Particular Function Which the Manager Should Know—
Publix Experts Explain How to Select

"THE right picture is worth 10,000 words" is a phrase that has been used more often in the motion picture field than in any other. No wonder. Illiterates, foreigners, and children have been able to read from pictures the stories and messages that could not have been brought to them any other way. Their money has helped make the industry what it is today, and their constant attendance is ample proof that the picture language is a universal language.

Pictures have been used to sell photoplays since the early days when lurid and blood-thirsty posters served to draw patrons into the nickelodeons. Many felt that the pictures were not used wisely then—many feel that they are not being used wisely today. One of the reasons for this is the lack of knowledge among exhibitors of picture-printing technique. Pictures are made in many ways, they are reproduced in many ways. In the following discussion, we will treat of those things the theatre manager should know about the printing of illustrations, and touch on the various kinds of illustrations with which he will come in contact.

Different Media

All of us have used rubber nameplate stamps. The letters that print stand out in relief from the surrounding rubber. It is the raised surface that prints.

If we had a picture of wood or metal that stood out in relief from the surrounding solid, we could print from it. But our commercial artists do not work on wood blocks as a rule, nor do they spend precious time making etchings on metal. They draw on paper and it is our problem to convert the rendering into a relief plate. What complicates the matter still more is the fact that artists use various media in which to express themselves. Let us consider some of those first.

We wish our artist to reproduce the head of an actress. He may use pen and ink and give us a likeness in which all the blacks are of equal intensity and all the whites are the color of the paper. He may use crayon on rough paper and his drawing will seem to be made up of lots of fine lines. Or he may use charcoal and have a softness and gradation of tones that is very pleasing.

On the other hand, if he is skillful in the use of paints and colors he may paint the head. Oil paints will give one result. Wash drawings (a mixture of paints and water in contradistinction to body pigments) will give another. If he is a photographic artist he may decide to use the camera.

For all these types of pictures there are only two general forms of engraving. For some a line engraving would be best, for others a halftone.

What is a line cut? (Engravings ready for printing are spoken of as cuts.)

It is an engraving in which all the solid elements of the picture are reproduced on a zinc plate as solid elements in relief. It is done in the following way:

A photographic negative of the picture is made by the engraver and put on the metal. This is covered with a chemical that resists acid. The plate is then put into an acid bath and all unprotected parts are etched or eaten away, leaving a reversed outline of the original in relief. The plate is next mounted on a wooden block that is type high (so that the printing surface is of the same height as the printing surface of the type) and it is ready for the press.

Involved Process

In actual practice, there are many steps to the making of an engraving, but this brief description is more than sufficient for our purposes.

A halftone presents a problem that is slightly different. Examine a photograph carefully. You will notice high lights and

Half Tone or Line?

EVEN though it is not as rich in detail as a fine screen reproduction, a coarse screen is best for newspaper cuts, it is pointed out by "Publix Opinion," in which was published the accompanying article. An engraving with too many dots, it is pointed out, will smudge on news stock.

The accompanying article stresses the difference between line engravings and half tones, and gives the theatre manager valuable pointers as to which to use to guarantee the best results.

Buying Printing and How to Do It

WITH the trend of showmanship toward a better type of advertising, it seems strange that more of those entrusted with this phase of work have not given it more study.

By study we mean basically the mechanical phases of this profession. We wonder just how many men know what a pica is . . . that there are six picas to the inch . . . that there are 72 points to the inch and consequently 12 points to the pica.

When dealing with points you will have discovered that this relates mostly to type size. When you talk of space in width and heights in the printing parlance you refer to it in picas.

A pica rule is perhaps the easiest thing in the world to obtain. You are dealing with engravers and printers who usually have a supply of them on hand with their ads on them. Get one, if it is merely for your education. take this pica rule and analyze a good looking ad with it. Determine the indentions by picas . . . measure the step ins by the pica system . . . familiarize yourself with the terms of the printing trade.

This is suggested to you as a first step. You will find in studying along this direction you will become interested in type and the different faces. Cheltenham and Caslon are the two most commonly used in newspapers. Study the value of bold face . . . the value of italics . . . and don't think when you use bold face type you must use the biggest type the space will permit . . . that you must throw it up into the largest point and that you must use all caps.

You cannot be taught this business of lay-outs, type values and type sizes excepting through study on your part.

The suggestions of study given you here will lead you to ask your printer or newspaper man questions. Don't be afraid to ask . . . you'll learn more by being a human question mark.

You are buying a lot of type . . . a lot of white paper . . . and a lot of black ink . . . learn how to use them . . . to use them intelligently and effectively.—From "Now."

"Go Slow, Take It Easy and Don't Rush," Is A. H. Schwartz's Advice

Eastern Chain Executive Uses the Unusual Method of Body-Building to Mould a Successfully Strong Organization and Gives the Lowdown in Ten Short Paragraphs

By "CHICK" LEWIS

Chairman, "Managers' Round Table Club" of Motion Picture News

HOW a theatre executive, famous for his ability to accomplish great things, keeps himself in fit condition, both physically and mentally, should be of interest to every man in this industry.

Frequently referred to as the most powerful independent in the east, A. H. Schwartz stands head and shoulders above the other, so-called, independents operating various sized chains in the vicinity of New York.

From a start, dating back many years ago, when building a theatre was a real pioneering venture, Schwartz invoked a rule which, today, represents an outstanding feat in any business. "Go Slow, Take It Easy and Don't Rush" is what he both practiced and preached, not to himself alone, but to every one connected with his organization.

Still a young man (he is in his early forties), Schwartz has constructed an organization of such strength, built on such a sensible and financial foundation, that opposition, business depression, or anything else coming under the heading of adverse conditions, can not budge him or his various enterprises a fraction of an inch.

Old Stuff in Schwartz's Outfit

The many things which the big chains of today boast about, whenever they start some reform, have been in vogue for over ten years in the Schwartz outfit. Days off regularly each week for the managers. Vacations every summer. Home office co-operation. These and numerous other details have been part of his method of doing things and encouraging his many employees to give their best.

But, according to A. H. Schwartz, if you want to make a success of what you are doing, and then have the health to enjoy that success, you must adhere to certain rules in your method of living, tempered only by conditions and circumstances. By which we want to convey that, while many of the ideals he has lived up to so religiously may be impossible to others, you can still follow the fundamental rules with whatever slight alterations necessary to fit your individual requirements.

A. H. Schwartz

"Chick" Lewis herewith reveals the little-known factors responsible for the success of A. H. Schwartz in the latter's operation of one of the biggest independent theatre circuits in the East. Basing his intimate knowledge of the chain executive on a former close association as "right-hand man," Lewis tells the details of an unusual modus operandi in the theatre field.

A. H. Schwartz' ten rules for success and health—for without health your chances for success are almost nil—are based on good common sense. Read them over carefully and see if you don't agree that we can all benefit by what he has to say.

Ten "Golden" Rules to Success

1—Exercise. A healthy body means a keen and active mind. Getting out into the woods as often as circumstances permit, spend an hour chopping wood. Don't allow your body to accumulate unnecessary fat and your muscles to get stale.

2—Rise Early. Lying in bed late mornings will leave a tired body the balance of the day. Try getting to bed at a reasonable hour each night and rise early, but be sure of at least eight hours of sleep. If you get the right amount of exercise each day you will encounter no difficulty falling into a deep, healthy sleep.

3—Walking. This is the cheapest form of exercise and is available to all. Indulge this habit for all it is worth. If you must get to a point within a mile or two, walk—don't hop a taxi or trolley car. And, above all, get a brisk 15-minute walk in before retiring.

4—No Coffee. Avoid this particular beverage at all times, and even pass up tea if you can. Cultivate the habit of drinking milk.

5—Watch Your Diet. Sensible eating, like sensible living, constitutes one of the most important rules for health. Indulging yourself with too much meat, an excess of canned foods, and packing away big, heavy meals whenever the clock tells you it is eating time, will positively ruin your body. Proper eating should not call for meat more than three times a week. Fried food should also be passed up in all its forms. Well cooked, or broiled, foods are the healthiest at all times. And never eat unless you are hungry.

6—Relaxation. (This rule is perhaps the most difficult of all to follow. Mr. Schwartz himself realized it, so while digesting his views on this subject, remember, you can get your share of relaxation if you will but take the trouble of figuring out the ways and means best suited to your employment and working time.) Try to arrange your affairs so that you can take, at least, three days a month away from all business. But make sure that whatever time you take away should be used for mental relaxation. Forget all business. Don't dissipate or spend your holiday, or brief vacation, staying out late nights and drinking a lot of rotten whiskey. If your mind and your body are to benefit by these short periods of rest, they must be spent in a healthy and sensible manner.

7—Don't Dissipate. After a hard day's work, don't expect your body to be ## a new nation-wide air-conditioning

• HOW THE NEW THEATRE DIVISION WAS FORMED •

ON October 8, the new Carrier Corporation was established. It consists of the Carrier Engineering Corporation, makers of Manufactured Weather, the Brunswick-Kroeschell Company, and the York Heating and Ventilating Company (Philadelphia).

As a result of this merger, the engineers who had been specializing in air-conditioning of theatres in the Carrier Engineering Corporation and the Brunswick-Kroeschell Company were grouped in a new unit, the Theatre Division of the Carrier Engineering Corporation. In this new Theatre Division are combined the two decades of experience in theatre air-conditioning of the two leaders in this field. Between them they can offer to every theatre any type of air-conditioning equipment on an unbiased basis of most economical performance in the theatre, whether it seats 500 or 5,000.

• WHAT IT MEANS TO YOUR THEATRE •

TEN years ago, theatre air-conditioning was just beginning. Today its influence on box-office receipts is fully recognized. Customers do come back to a comfortable theatre.

The only question is, "How much will it cost?"

That's where the new Theatre Division of the Carrier Engineering Corporation comes into the picture. And comes in strong.

Here you will find the practical money-saving discoveries and developments of the two decade-old leaders in successful theatre air-conditioning.

In the Theatre Division itself, there will be new economies in research work, in installation, in offering a 24-hour-a-day maintenance service in principal cities. The merged service and expediting departments will be on the spot almost as quickly as your own maintenance men. There will be new improvements in theatre air-conditioning similar in importance to the elimination of the slightest disturbing noise from the apparatus when sound houses came in.

Can the Old Theatre Be Modernized Successfully?

Further Discussion of a Timely Subject with Supporting Facts in Substantiation by An Authority

By J. HARRY TOLER

In Collaboration with ELMER F. BEHRENS, Theatre Architect, Chicago

LOOKING back over a span of only a few years, one may notice a gradual but decided change in the style of theatres. Theatre styles change, perhaps not so rapidly as that of personal habits, clothing, automobiles and radios, but there has been and probably always will be a constant transfiguration in the architecture, practical arrangement and operative practices of the theatre.

The theatre owner who persistently ignores these cyclic style changes and passively avoids modernity in the appearance and operation of his house is certainly not giving his business the consideration to which it is entitled. The corner grocery, the neighborhood drug store, the self-satisfied business man in practically every form of trade, who allowed his business to become out of style and out of step with progress was suddenly faced with mail order competition and later the chain store. They came as a natural consequence, because there was an unrequited demand for better service and the refinements of a present generation which the neglectful tradesman could not, or would not, recognize.

The progressive theatre owner, however, naturally more alert than the average business man, and with more of the sportive element in his makeup, saw what was coming and with whatever available means he had at hand, wagered that he could meet and satisfy the public demand for the new styles and modes in moving picture entertainment. These progressives need have no fear as to future trade demands. They know how to meet such situations when they arise. To many others, however, the problem remains untackled and unsolved.

A Need for Careful Planning

How may the present theatre owner, with limited means, go about fixing up his theatre? No cut-and-dried plan of procedure is available and if obtainable would not apply economically. Every project must be treated individually because no two such problems are identical and local conditions vary. Let us assume a case that will probably fit the average condition: An exhibitor is operating a theatre which he built and opened back in 1925 and which has until the last few years been a rather consistent money maker, notwithstanding the fact (and he admits it) that just about everything imaginable is wrong with his house as compared to present standards; bad sight lines, poor projection, terrible acoustics, drabby stage settings, uncomfortable seating facilities, and worse than all, an antiquated front. His business has been gradually slipping away during the last few years, and the steady depression has almost depleted his surplus. He owns the building and the leasehold on the site, which is still in the circle of patronage, but his house is unattractive, dull and consequently not inviting to the modern age of theatre-goers.

He has often considered tearing down the old structure and promoting a new theatre. But he has found that consideration beyond his means and the required amount of capital difficult to raise, and if it were possible to finance the project with outside capital, it would, perhaps, mean loss of controlling interest in his business. He must do something for self

Elmer Behrns Joins The Toler Discussions

IN a preceding article, certain views were expressed on what, if anything, was wrong with the motion picture show business from the mechanical angle. But they were personal opinions and, after all, a diversity of ideas is always more to be relied on than merely one individual's convictions. Consequently, to add more thunder to the argument for better equipment and more modern houses in which to show pictures, Elmer F. Behrns, a Chicago theatre architect, was prevailed on to assist.

The Basis of Authority

Mr. Behrns is a busy man. That alone explains one plausible reason why he was selected to collaborate with the writer in this series of articles on Equipment and Its Relation to the Successful Operation of the Theatre. An architect who has successfully engineered the construction and reconstruction of so many theatres of all classes certainly is qualified to lend authority to the discussion, not merely from the standpoint of architecture, but from other angles as well.

A more widely or nationally known designer of theatres might possibly have been selected. That is usually done when an article on theatre architecture and construction is to be composed. But world-wide reputation and eminence was not essentially a requirement in this instance. Our collaborator was selected because of his familiarity with the problems of the rank and file of theatre owners; not the leaders, but the progressive runners-up in the industry.

Elaborating the Series

Elmer Behrns is not yet a celebrity, but he is building an enviable reputation among theatre owners of the Middle West. He has been steadily adding to that reputation during the past 12 years of intensive work and research among that class of theatre owners who are progressive and ambitious and have been willing to provide adequately, and withal economically, those things which have subsequently brought them success. Mr. Behrns will furnish facts and figures on which this instalment and others to follow will be based.

In this installment of the series, which appears regularly each month in THE SHOWMAN, there is a continuance of that timely discussion: modernizing the old theatre successfully.

J. H. TOLER

protection. New construction is at present out of the question, but a most satisfactory alternative is found in remodeling which will enable him to correct the inherent faults of the old house, fix it up generally and place it back on a profitable basis.

Any Change Stimulates Business

A foundation, four good walls, a roof, a good sized stage and reasonably good floors afford a good basis to work from. Through consultation with an experienced architect he can quite readily budget the expense of reconstruction to include an eye-catching, attractive front and a modernized interior that will fairly re-convert the natives and bring them back to the box-office in droves. The human element grows tired of seeing the same sights continuously, week in and week out. A frequent change in decoration and color effects, arrangement and general atmosphere always has an alluring effect on public sentiment. Remodeling to some extent should therefore be a regular seasonal practice among theatre owners, particularly those who are located in smaller towns or communities contiguous to the metropolitan centers.

Lighting, color, and the modernistic trend toward novelty effects should predominate in the re-decoration of the theatre, exterior and interior. The theatre to be remodeled is usually susceptible to such treatment if the architect selected is one who knows his business.

Can most old theatres be successfully remodeled? Generally, yes; and we shall in the course of this series of articles offer actual examples of completed remodeling assignments, with illustrations—before and after—for comparison, with certain cost data to show that most old theatres can be successfully renovated, modernized architecturally and re-equipped at astonishingly low cost as compared to new construction.

The remodeled interior of the Park Theatre, now a popular neighborhood house in Chicago, illustrates the possibilities existent in most theatres on which time has made its mark.

To the lay mind it is sometimes difficult to visualize the transformation of a ramshackle old theatre into a modern structure, and the question naturally arises: Will it look like a patched up job when it's finished? An architect who specializes in theatre work can quite easily and satisfactorily answer that question on paper. He knows theatre construction, and can usually pilot the job through to completion most economically.

Shaving Too Close Is Not Economy

It is unfortunate that in too many cases a theatre architect is not consulted in the remodeling of structures in smaller towns. And, too, many times, where such consultations are made the recommendations of the architect are disregarded, and final results are disappointing. Every remodeling job should be predesigned and carried through to completion in the same careful manner as a new project. The designer's budget should be spared as much "shaving down" as possible, because a preconceived plan for a well-balanced finished product can be seriously thrown out of balance by the omission of even minor details "to save expenses."

An example of this kind is brought to mind by a recent occurrence. The original design for a revamped theatre in the vicinity of Chicago was carefully worked out to preserve the sight lines and make every seat in the remodeled house one from which the patron could view the screen without discomforture. That part of the proposal calling for the removal of certain obstacles and the re-arrangement of seating was forced to yield to false economy and two of the most grievous faults of the old house were left uncorrected to "save expenses" and while the theatre front and foyer were admirably treated and the auditorium corrected acoustically, the final result was somewhat of a "bust." The designer knew that an attractive stage setting was needed to sell the projected picture to the audience, so he presented an attractive design as a part of his budget; but that too was "kicked out" as a sacrifice to economy and the architect's appeal to reason was of no avail. It is an unfortunate break of the business that such as that happens too frequently.

Design in Next Discussion

Seating capacity is always an important consideration in the process of remodeling. Unfortunately too many other equally important factors have in the past been sacrificed to greater capacity and crampiness, eyestrain and other physical discomfortures have been the portion of the patron. Remodeling, when properly designed and engineered can be relied upon to correct the inherent faults of the old house and many times an increase in seats may be realized without sacrificing comfort or convenience—two all-important considerations in the theatre's appeal for public favor.

Theatre front and entrance design, exterior decoration and other eye-catching refinements adaptable to practically every type of old theatre construction will be outlined in an article to follow in an early issue of the SHOWMAN. Arrangements are being made to reproduce actual photographs and other interesting statistical data and facts in support of the argument that it pays to change the atmosphere as well as the picture, and that a remodeled theatre can generally be relied on to effect an increase in box-office revenue.

Stronger Protection for Inventors By Keeping Patent Applications Pending

Quicker Disposition of Inventor's Rights When Patent Is in the Application Stage, Which Enables Purchasers to More Readily Effect Changes and Corrections

By RAY BELMONT WHITMAN
Motion Picture Patents Authority

WHILE, of course, circumstances alter cases, it is usually wise not to allow a patent application to issue into a patent immediately, but rather to keep it pending as long as possible, and until the time that the patent is really needed, according to Ray Belmont Whitman, noted authority on patents, who continues in this article a discussion on involved patent problems, which appears regularly every month in THE SHOWMAN.

Of course, in following out this plan, it is suggested that the inventor bear in mind the fact that he has no right to sue for infringement until after the patent has issued, and he cannot collect profits and damages for any infringement before the date of issue of the patent.

The common practice of many large corporations, as well as of experienced and successful inventors, is to prepare and file the patent application as soon as possible after the inventor's conception of the idea, and then to quite vigorously "prosecute" the case, through the prompt filing of amendments in answer to each office action, until an appreciable amount of the total protection in claims belonging to the inventor has been granted by the Examiner. Thereafter, on receipt of each Patent Office action, nearly all of the six months, now allowed by law, is permitted to elapse before an amendment answering the action is filed. In this and other ways, the case may be delayed and the application held pending in the Patent Office for a number of years; but after a total of some three years, the office may request a prompt conclusion to the prosecution so as to get the patent issued.

The Forfeit a Renewal Factor

Another and additional means of delaying the issue of the patent is to prosecute the case to an allowed condition and then not to pay the final fee of $20 within the six months permitted. The case then becomes forfeited, but can be renewed within one year from the end of this time. Thus it may be again prevented from issuing for an appreciably longer interval.

As long as the application is pending, it is held in secrecy in the files of the Patent Office, and the inventor is in position to watch the activities of his competitors and issue it only when he needs it to protect his rights. By means of this strategy, the seventeen-year term of the patent monopoly is arranged to begin more nearly on the date that the patent is really needed. Once issued, it can only be extended beyond that term by an Act of Congress; but such extension has never yet been granted on any mechanical patent. However, as a partial substitute, the inventor may sometimes keep his protection alive by filing other patents from time to time on improvements of the original invention.

Still another advantage of delaying the issue of a patent is that it often enables the inventor to better dispose of his rights by sale or license, since most large corporations or other purchasers have been taught by their attorneys to give preference to the purchase of patent rights as yet in the application stage. For it enables these attorneys to correct or augment the work of the inventor by revision or by adding new claims during the original prosecution. Otherwise, if this is not done, the purchaser must either be content with the protection of the original patent, or else try to broaden it by filing an application for "reissue."

Patent Problems

RAY BELMONT WHITMAN'S department on patents, which appears every month in THE SHOWMAN, embraces a discussion of highly important problems involving that field, a question and answer service for readers, and a resume of current patent activities as gleaned directly from the office of the patent authorities at Washington.

The question and answer column imposes no obligation on the reader. All queries on the subjects of patents, trademarks, designs and copyrights fall within the scope of this service. If a personal answer is desired, a stamped envelope should be enclosed with the question. If not, the answer will appear in this department in the first available issue after receipt.

Write on one side of the paper only, giving full name, address and business affiliation. Only initials will be published if so requested. All inquiries should be addressed to Patent Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Question and Answer Service

This department places at the disposal of inventors a question and answer service conducted by Whitman, who will reply to any

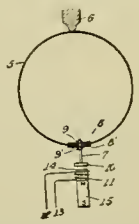
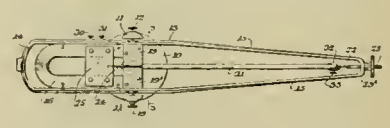
THE New Patents Department, conducted by Ray Belmont Whitman, not only embraces patents on motion picture equipment of all types, but also includes material on trade-marks and designs, reports of which are obtained regularly from the Patent Office at Washington.



Copies of any of the patents cited below may be obtained by sending 15 cents (15c) to the Patent Editor of this publication for each copy desired.

The current group of new devices for which patents have been granted follows:

1,773,974. FILM. Carleton Ellis, Montclair, N. J. Filed Sept. 23, 1926. Serial No. 137,380. 16 Claims. (Cl. 91—68.)



1. A stratified film, a stratum of which contains pigment and another stratum devoid of pigment and substantially transparent which comprises nitrocellulose and a synthetic resin compatible therewith.

1,776,223. ACOUSTIC DEVICE. John V. L. Hogan, Forest Hills, N. Y., assignor to Radio Inventions, Inc., a Corporation of New York. Filed Jan. 30, 1926. Serial No. 85,069. 8 Claims. (Cl. 181-31.)

1. An acoustic device comprising a substantially spherical non-metallic wall of paper-like material, the polar dimension of which is adapted to increase and decrease simultaneously with equatorial contraction and expansion in combination with a support at one point of said wall and an electromagnetic system comprising a movable element connected mechanically to another point of said wall in combination with a support for said device at one pole thereof and vibrating means connected to the opposite pole.

1,776,045. ELECTRICAL RECORDER REPRODUCER. Harrison W. Rogers, New York, N. Y. Filed Mar. 10, 1927. Serial No. 174,182. Renewed Mar. 4, 1930. 4 Claims. (Cl. 179—100.41.)

1. An electric recorder-reproducer, including a swinging support, a magnet carried thereby, a rod, a stylus carried thereby, spring supports for the rod and for connecting the rod to the frame and permitting the rod limited oscillatory movement, and an armature provided with coils carried by the rod, said armature being disposed between the poles of the magnet.

1,776,148. TELEVISION APPARATUS. Paul Loveridge Clark, Brooklyn, N. Y. Filed May 29, 1928. Serial No. 281,567. 15 Claims. (Cl. 178—6.)

1. In a signalling system, the method of operation, which consists in producing at a high rate of speed

TO obtain that "Snap" and "Pep" so necessary to a perfectly projected "Sound," "Silent" or a "Magnafilm" picture, it is absolutely necessary to deliver to the screen the utmost in "LPA" (Light Per Ampere).

From an economy standpoint the utmost in "LPA" is also vital.

Peerless High Intensity Reflector Arc Lamps are a necessity for the perfect projection of Sound Pictures. Its distinctive features are many, their ability to deliver uncomplainingly is an inbuilt quality.

Correct engineering principles and precision standards employed in their manufacture have personified in the name "PEERLESS" unapproachable leadership in its field.

The first cost of Peerless High Intensity Reflector Arc Lamps is no more than what can be paid for less and as for maintenance expense?—far less than any.

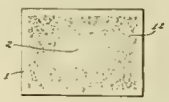
1. In combination with a motion picture reel having a hollow core, an audible signal mounted in said core, means for effecting a continuous sounding of the signal, a spring actuated slide comprised in said sounding means, and a tongue for insertion between adjacent convolutions of film, said tongue having a hinge connection with said slide.



1,773,436. POLARIZATION PHOTOMETER. Wilbur B. Rayton and Henry F. Kurtz, Rochester, N. Y., assignors to Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed Oct. 23, 1926. Serial No. 143,554. 7 Claims. (Cl. 88—23.)

1. A polarization photometer comprising a polarizing element, an analyzing element and co-operating beam separating and lens elements, the said separating and lens elements being arranged at the side of said analyzing element which is farther from said polarizing element, means for effecting relative adjustment between said polarizing and analyzing elements, said means being provided with scale means for indicating said adjustment directly in terms of light transmission.

PATENTS

1,773,335. IMAGE MODIFIERS. Adelbert Ames, Jr., and Charles A. Proctor, Hanover, N. H. Filed June 21, 1922. Serial No. 569,992. 4 Claims. (Cl. 05—81.)

1. An image modifier screen having a central clear spot not adapted to irregularly refract incident light, and a surrounding region containing refractive surfaces irregularly oriented in all directions, the said screen having an increasing refractive effect toward the margin of the screen.

Flame-Proofing Wood Bests Metal in Test

A FLAME-PROOFING WOOD which held back smoke and flame six times as long as did a metal-covered door carrying the label of the Fire Underwriters' Ass'n at a test conducted by Columbia University, is a development of Henry Klein and Company of Elmhurst, L. I.

The immunity of the wood to the ravages of fire is brought about by impregnating lumber under high pressure with a secret chemical preparation. When attacked by fire, it is said this chemical throws off a gas which kills fire on the same principal as a fire extinguisher.

In each row of cells of the wood are deposited minute chemical crystals. As one row of cells comes in contact with the flame it offers temporary resistance to the fire and is in turn supported by the millions of rows of cells behind it.

The test was conducted for Klein. The metal-covered and the wooden doors were set in the sides of a large furnace, the flames sweeping their interior faces.

The metal-covered door quickly became untouchably hot, passing 120 degrees in about three minutes, and in fifteen minutes passing 660 degrees. The wood door's exterior reached 100 degrees after thirty minutes and at the end of forty-five minutes was still under 150 degrees. It did not go over 200 degrees at any time.

In the metal-covered door, after ten minutes smoke poured through the joints in heavy clouds and flames appeared. The wooden door held back both smoke and flames for a full hour until it was less than one-eighth of an inch thick.

and all queries involving patents, trademarks, designs, etc.

The current group of questions and their answers, in detail, follow:

Q.—A neighbor has offered to back me to finance patenting and marketing my invention providing I include his name as co-inventor. Is it all right to do this?—Allan Dagnan, Albany, N. Y.

A.—No. If your neighbor is not in truth a co-inventor and an unfriendly party learns of the arrangement, the patent can be declared invalid. You can doubtless satisfy your neighbor by giving him a 50% interest in the proceeds made out of the invention. (Be on your guard not to assign outright any portion of your title to your patent.)

Q.—My employer insists I must assign my patent to him on the ground that it was developed on his time and the patent filed at his expense. The patent has since proven of great value and I wonder if the law requires me to do this?—M. Granville, Harrisburgh, Pa.

A.—No. The employer may only obtain from you a shop right or license to use the invention, unless there has been previous specific understandings.

Q.—Please advise if there is any way to protect my invention from some one getting ahead of me to the Patent Office while I am still experimenting on it. I am told by a local attorney about a paper called a Caveat which can be prepared and signed, and which is much less expensive than filing an extra patent application.—J. Davidson, New York City, N. Y.

The Caveat Law

A.—There is no way now to prevent some one getting ahead of you to the Patent Office with an application for a patent on an invention without filing your application first. The law of Caveat was repealed July 1, 1910. It provided for an inventor giving notice to the Patent Office of incomplete inventions by a signed paper called a Caveat, which explained the purpose of the invention or discovery and its distinguishing characteristics and asked protection of the inventor's rights until he should have matured his invention. It was required to be filed in the confidential archives of the office and to be kept in secrecy and it had to be renewed from year to year to keep it enforced. The person filing it was entitled to be notified of any application for a patent made during the lifetime of the Caveat, which application, if granted, would interfere with the invention claimed therein, and was entitled to priority by reason thereof.

The next best thing to do, in the absence of your ability to file the application as soon as possible, is to prepare a description and sketch of your invention known as an "Evidence of Conception" and sign and date it before a notary and retain such papers in the event of an interference proceeding later. This might prove priority of conception and entitle you to the patent over a claimant.

Giving Dimmers Their Proper Place In the Picture

C-H "Simplicity" Dimmer Plates are supplied by leading switchboard manufacturers with the board they install. Fig. 1 shows the front of a typical board. Fig. 2 the rear view showing C-H Dimmer plates and Fig. 3 a single plate. Dimmer plates are the heart of any lighting control board. Make sure the C-H trademark is on your plates for long life, smooth lighting control and low maintenance.

DIMMER plates—hidden as they are behind the switchboard—too often fail to receive the proper amount of attention when lighting equipment is selected. The board which throws lights into full brilliance for a burst of color must also be able to wipe them quickly, smoothly into "black out." This is the test of the dimmer plates behind the switchboard.

Cutler-Hammer "Simplicity" Dimmers were providing flickerless light control in leading show houses over a quarter of a century ago. Their superior construction, their freedom from burnouts and other dimmer faults have made C-H Dimmers the choice of theater owners ever since. Constant improvement in C-H dimmer design has kept pace with modern electrical requirements. Today the mark of Cutler-Hammer on the dimmer plates behind the switchboard assures careful showmen that their lighting control is correct as well as modern.

Long experience in theatrical lighting problems, improved dimmer plate design and construction—these are the advantages which Cutler-Hammer offers you when you specify C-H Dimmers. They can be had on any board you install . . . and be enlarged with the growth of your requirements.

Your architect or electrician can tell you more about C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers. Ask for the C-H Booklet "Illumination Control for Modern Theaters." It shows many typical C-H Dimmer installations in leading theaters throughout the country.

Problems of Sound in The Projection Booth

Thoroughly covering that all-important topic: sound projection by means of an easily understood self-quiz for theatre managers, compiled by the Sound and Projection Department of Paramount-Publix Corp., Harry Rubin, managing director.

Q. If, with a universal base there was no sound on disc, one machine okay, other machine and both movietones okay, and charging reproducer did not help, where might the trouble be and what could you do to keep the show running?

A. Look for loose connection on 700-A apparatus unit or dirty connections on the film disc switch and disconnect 7-inch equalizer.

Q. If, with two units, one unit blows out, and sound from the other is not enough to fill the house—what adjustments would you make to obtain additional volume?

A. Raise the horn setting on the horn control panel to zero for the remaining unit to restore unity impedance until defective unit is replaced. More volume could be obtained by running fader at higher point.

Q. Suppose volume on Red movietone had been slowly getting bad, and then suddenly went very low and noisy, where might the trouble be and what could you to do to keep the show running?

A. Change P. E. cell and change tubes in film amplifier. Change "B" batteries or a poor exciting lamp.

Q. Sound seems distorted. Sustained notes irregular. What is the trouble and where would you look for it? On disc? On film? What could you do to repair it?

A. Flutter. On disc—rubber connector holding rings loose or Bristo set screws holding connecting shaft loose. On film—take-up out of adjustment. Take-up chain too loose, or leather disc on take-up worn. Loose tension holding film to sprocket or guide rollers, or defective projector fly-wheel. Accumulated dirt on face of sprocket in sound gate.

Avoiding a Jam

WHAT would you do if sound stopped suddenly on your disc sound machine while the other remained okay? Or if your motor went badly off the proper speed?

Would either of these emergency situations jeopardize business, or have you a sufficient knowledge of the minor mechanics of sound apparatus to safely bridge the "jam" until arrival of a repairman?

Every theatre owner and operator in the country should be fitted with a "surface" knowledge of projection apparatus to assure continuance of programs when trouble arises. A close study of the accompanying article will give to exhibitors the fundamentals necessary.

Q. Light of exciting lamp as seen on paper when used for focusing, is yellow all over, focus apparently correct. Changing exciting lamp doesn't help. What is the trouble?

A. Dirt or oil on optical assembly.

Q. If while playing, disc sound stopped suddenly on one machine, while the other machine remained okay, what could you do to keep the show running?

A. Look for a loose connection in 29-A connecting block or at Fader and change reproducer. After show it will be well to replace reproducer and test to see whether same is O. K.

Q. If there was a bad hum in the movietone on one machine only and you could not hear in your monitor—what might the trouble be and how could you eliminate it while the other machine was running?

A. The only noise that cannot be heard in the monitor as well as in the stage horns is pick-up of the noise made by the projector. This is a mechanical pick-up which can usually be eliminated by clearing the movietone amplifier where it is touching some portion of the casing. Check to see there is no bind in floating shaft.

Q. If your 42-A amplifier read 60 and one 43-A read 120 and the other 43-A read 100, would you suspect any trouble, and, if so, what would you do to prevent interruption to the show?

A. Replace 211-E vacuum tube in 43-A amplifier that had reading of 100. Test is made by removing one tube at a time and noting meter reading.

Q. If your motor went badly off the proper speed, how would you remedy the trouble?

A. Replace V-3 or V-4 with 205-D vacuum tube in control cabinet.

Q. If your 702 type fader went bad on both sides, at all settings and every key position, and you could not repair it or get a new one immediately, what could you do quickly to keep the show running?

A. Use a double-pole double-throw switch for the fader connecting the fader output to the blades of the switch and connecting a pair of head phones in series with switch blade as a compensating resistance. The output from each projector is connected to opposite ends of switch.

Q. If sound stopped suddenly on movietone, meter on movietone amplifier read zero, what would you do to keep show running?

A. Replace 239-A tubes in 49-A movietone amplifier or fuse on charging panel. Check for loose connection in F battery line.

Schooling the Manager

USED extensively by one of the biggest theatre chains in the country, the accompanying questions and answers on sound projection offer to every exhibitor an easy route to a thorough knowledge of every-day problems concerning successful operation of talking devices.

Minor breakdowns or slight interference in the mechanics of reproducing need not command the services of outside sound engineers if exhibitors thoroughly acquaint themselves with the material presented herewith. It is suggested that the chart be constantly kept in the projection room so that ready reference may be made to it as occasion arises.

Q. If 43-A amplifier meter needle dropped to zero and smoke issued from amplifier, what would you do to keep show running? A.—With only one 43-A in system? B.—With two 43-A system?

A. Strap output of 43-A on input of 43-A. Raise fader to 15 and gain control on 43-A amplifier to 23.

Q. If needle was constantly skipping the groove, what would you do to keep the show running?

A. Start reel again with new needle and record on another projector and check level of reproducer arm and turntable before starting another reel on projector causing the trouble.

Q. If a noise like a motorboat exhaust developed in movietone, how might you get it out while the show was running?

A. Turn set-screw and upper guide roller first one way and then the other until sound is eliminated as this is caused in most cases by either frame lines or sprocket holes running where sound track should be.

Q. If sound stopped suddenly and both meters on the 41-A amplifier read zero, what would you do to keep the show running?

A. Replace three new tubes in 41 amplifier. If this does not correct above condition, replace film supply fuse with six-ampere fuse. This is located in the charging panel.

Q. Suppose a crackling noise heard on both film and disc in one machine, but not heard at all on the other machine, what could you do to clear it while the show was running?

A. Throw fader key to cut out fader, and clean fader.

Leather Seats, Minus Wood, To Deaden Sound

Spokane, Wash.—J. Knox Strachan, manager of the RKO Orpheum, states the house will be entirely remodeled and renovated. The house will be reseated with a new type of leather seats, especially built without wood to clarify sound projection. Heywood-Wakefield are designing the seats for all RKO houses.

New Simplex projection machines are to be installed, with high intensity lamp houses and a larger screen, which will insure greatly improved visibility and sound. The new marquee recently put in place is to have a change of lighting effects. The work will in no way interfere with operation.

Suggested Programs for Saturday Kiddie Shows

The month of November offers an unusually large number of opportunities for successfully staging Saturday morning matinees for youngsters. Real showmen who take full advantage of National Book Week, Armistice Day, the celebration of Lincoln's famous Gettysburg speech of 1863, Thanksgiving Day, and a dozen other important events, will undoubtedly find immediate reaction at the box-office window. Suggested programs for Nov. 15 and 22 appear below:

Sat., Nov. 15—Suggestion No. 1

MARTINMAS (Nov. 11)

Feast of Saint Martin, patron saint of the husbandmen (the end of the harvest) and beggars (he divided his cloak with one).

Many seasonal and weather traditions have grown around this date; "If Saint Martin's Day be bright and sunshiny, there will be a cold winter or if the trees and vines still retain their foliage, the same will follow. But if there be frost before Martinmas, the winter will be mild. . . . An old proverb warns people against using up more than half of their provisions before Candlemas (February 2nd), Martinmas being considered the beginning of winter and Candlemas about the middle of it. The French say, 'A la Saint-Martin l'hiver en chemin.'"

INDIAN SUMMER (Nov. 11)

Called Saint Martin's summer in England and France. "That mellow time in November which follows the first or even the second cold snap or period. The return of summer for a season characterized by a hazy atmosphere and a mellow air and coloring."

A legend tells that after Saint Martin had divided his cloak with a beggar on a wintry day in November, on account of his kind deed summer came back again. The origin of the term, "Indian Summer," is given in "New International Encyclopaedia Americana" and "Monthly Bulletin" Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh October 1920, p-359-60.

Poems: "Saint Martin's Summer" by Whittier. "Indian Summer" by Emily Dickinson, J. R. Lowell, Father Tabb and Henry Van Dyke.

(a) Guests of honor:
1. Officers of Garden Club.
2. Representatives of School Garden Club.

(b) Story teller from the library or school to use the above material in a story with juvenile appeal.

(c) Teacher of music from public school to present autumn songs by group of children.

(d) Encourage children to attend matinee in paper costumes representing autumn; prizes for best costume might be copy of poems suggested in above outline.

(e) Get photograph of children in costume for local newspaper.

A Box-Office Bromo

Theatre owners in widely scattered sectors have found gold in the good will of children. The word-of-mouth publicity plugs for pictures of their liking have on more than one occasion brought added dollars to the box office window.

Youngsters, too, usually lend themselves to exploitation stunts for pictures which depend on intimate community tieups for a successful run, and, recognizing this important asset, hundreds of theatre owners stage special Saturday morning matinees for kiddies.

These shows, in many localities, have become an institution and the good will which they create for the show-house has proven of priceless value. Women's clubs and parent-teachers' associations give considerable thought to these programs, and, therefore, it is of high importance that intelligence be used in the selection of suitable material.

Ryllis Hemington, Fox West Coast public relations director, with the aid of various women's club authorities, herewith offers another in the series of "Suggested Shows for Kiddies," which appears regularly in Motion Picture News. Exhibitors are urged to study them carefully and adapt the suggested showmanship ideas to their Saturday programs.

Lobby Vending Machine Source of Big Revenue for Chicago Houses

All Types of Windy City Theatres Cashing in on Lobby Vendors—Usual Tie-up Is Lease of Machines with Commission on Sales—$40,000 Annual B. & K. Net

CHICAGO—Theatres here—from the least pretentious neighborhood houses to the proudest Loop palaces—are cashing in on unused lobby space with the installation of vending machines. The practice was originally confined to only a few neighborhood spots, but reports of the not insignificant revenue to be derived from the machines spread rapidly, with the result that, today, there are approximately 100 theatres in the city with one or more vending machines placed in lobbies, smoking lounges or rest rooms. The monthly income from them is variously estimated at from $40,000 to $60,000.

One year ago there were less than 35 machines in use in Chicago theatres. Their acceptance as a theatre fixture rapidly followed their installation in Publix-Balaban & Katz Loop and outlying de luxe houses. Other circuits and houses quickly followed suit, with the number of machines in theatres having been more than doubled during the past six months.

The revenue to be derived from hitherto unused theatre space has been the primary factor in the growth in popularity of the vending machines here. Publix has estimated that installation of the machines in its houses nationally will net the circuit $500,000 annually. This figure was based on surveys conducted in representative theatres throughout the country in which the machines were given their initial tryout by the circuit. It was shown in these houses that an average of one out of every 15 patrons spends seven cents in the machines. In addition, little or no objection to the machines was found in either their appearance or the amount of space which they occupied.

As many as five machines are now in use in a single Publix-B. & K. house here. Applying Publix's own earning estimates to the number of machines in use, it is apparent that the circuit can net a minimum of $40,000 annually from the vending machines in use in its theatres here.

Some Monthly Profits

Additional earning possibilities in neighborhood theatres of various classifications are afforded by the following report on machine earnings in use in the houses. The Metropole, a 300-seat house, one of the first in the city to install a machine, nets between $50 and $75 per month on one machine; the Halsted (700 seats), $150-$200 per month on three machines; Milford (1,200 seats), $125 per month on one machine; Haymarket (1,400 seats), $100 to $125 per month; Lexington (450), $40 to $50 monthly; New Wonderland (400), $75 to $100; Avalon (600), nets $40 to $50; Gem (400), nets $60, and Casino (600), $50.

There are about 75 additional small, neighborhood theatres whose average revenue from one machine is $50 per month.

The machines are built in various models with selection afforded for almost any type of theatre. Those in use in the de luxe houses here are built, ordinarily, according to the circuits' specifications. Most of them are elaborate in metal and glass trimmings, and having illuminated colored tops or bases. The neighborhood house type in popular use is smaller in proportions and uses a single white light to illuminate the merchandise partitions of the machine.

Lobby corners appear to be the most popular locations for the machines in all houses. They utilize odd space without contributing unsightliness to their surroundings. They must be prominently placed at locations adjacent to the greatest prospective patronage in order to obtain the maximum revenue, but they need not be obstructions in even the smallest lobbies or public rooms. A conspicuous design or unusual lighting effect will give them prominence even in out of the way corners. In the de luxe houses, they are frequently placed in lounging and smoking rooms as well as on main floor lobbies. The larger Loop houses have also placed them on mezzanine and balcony approaches and on converging staircase landings.

The majority of the machines merchandise confectionery exclusively. They offer a variety of candies and nuts at prices ranging from five to 25 cents. Revolving containers display as many as 12 varieties of confections in as many sections of the machine.

Most of the machines in use here are leased from the manufacturer on the basis of commission on actual sales. The manufacturer also services the machine and supplies the stock. Machines, too, may be bought outright, with the entire revenue thereby going to the owner. This is the policy on which the Publix houses here operate the machines.

Film Entertainment Via Radio, Is Plan

Formation of an American company to handle the Fultograph, portable device used for radio broadcasting of photographs, is declared under way by Capt. Otho Fulton, inventor of the instrument. The captain now is in New York demonstrating the device. He is showing the reception of radio pictures on a motion picture screen, in what is declared to presage development of radio picture transmission as entertainment.

In Europe, the Fultograph is being used by Scotland Yard to transmit photographs of fingerprints for identification, weather maps from Berlin to airplanes of the German lines and photographs to home receiving sets.

Gas for Cooling

Ideal Electric, of Mansfield, Ohio, has developed a line of gas compressors for cooling and ventilating theatres. The company, also manufactures power apparatus for direct and "a.c." current.

Grain Elimination on Wide Film Aim of Stern Device

Ernest Stern, motion picture engineer, this week gave a demonstration of a printing process whereby granulation of standard film is reduced to a minimum when projected on a Magnascope screen. His invention, he asserts, practically eliminates the grain on the negative, will be of particular value in the using of close-ups via Magnascope.

Home-Made Idea to Air the B. O. Works

Baltimore—What is claimed as a new idea in box office ventilation has been incorporated in the box-office of the Bridge, residential house recently opened by R. B. Werkmeister and Frederick Auman on the site of the old house of the same name and that of the Edmondson next door.

The roof of the box office is arranged on hinges so that it can be lifted and propped up in the summer and this causes fresh air to rush continually through it.

Its location is directly on the corner with doors on either side and with the lobby back of it. During winter the trap door can be lowered and locked down, and the door can be closed thus making it warm inside for the ticket seller.

New Changeover on Market

Chicago—Golde Manufacturing Co. is introducing a new changeover device, called the "Manumatic," which, it is claimed, simplifies work in the projection booth.

Televisors for Theatre First?

USE of television will first be practical only from the standpoint of the theatre, with home television at least four or five years distant, in the opinion of J. E. Ferguson, secretary of the American Radio and Television Corp. He believes theatre television will make its commercial bow in about two years.

The chief value of television, so far as the theatre is concerned, "will lie in the possibility of sitting in a playhouse in New York and hearing and seeing the World's Series played in Chicago."

"In the case of television for the theatres," he says, "it is our belief it will come into general use about two years hence, but even then it will resemble largely the old-fashioned flickering film of 25 years ago."

The recent Schenectady theatre demonstration, where televised pictures were shown on a screen six by seven feet, is being interpreted by many that home television is at hand. This, in the opinion of radio dealers, is wrong, according to Ferguson.

The present-day television set, relatively speaking, is a rather crude piece of apparatus and resembles somewhat the old fashioned crystal detector wireless set of primitive radio days, except that it is many times larger. Nor has the broadcasting of television signals been perfected. Until that occurs, practical home television receivers cannot be made.

It is possible to do a great many things in television from the standpoint of the engineer who has every facility at his command and laboratories in which to work, but the building of a practical image receiver for the home is something else again.

The present-day experimental models of television receivers show the image or the artist on a relatively small screen, approximately three inches by three inches and then only in silhouette, so that the artist must of necessity stand with his or her profile to the transmitting apparatus in order to present on the receiving screen a rather poor likeness of themselves.

De Forest's View

TELEVISION brought into the home by wire and paid for at a specified rate per month is visualized by Dr. Lee De Forest as a development of the future. Thus, the listener-in, or looker-in, will phone the telephone or electric light company and ask for a connection with the network carrying the city and program desired.

Performances on six foot screens he believes, will be offered and the pictures shown in colors. Producers of televised entertainment will receive a percentage of the amount paid for the service by subscribers.

The veteran inventor, on January I, will transfer his activities to the Coast for research and experiment on television and sound reproducing equipment.

Errors, Blunders In Architecture

and spacious tiled kitchen with its colored pottery in the house of the Spanish painter el Greco at Toledo.

Even the streets and public places which form the environment of modern edifices have nothing in common with the surroundings of Spanish buildings.

Bearing the foregoing in mind, I have not attempted to copy any particular Moorish building when decorating the Granada Theatre, Walthamstow. Besides I have been reminded daily by a score of the most modern of engineers, electricians and numerous technical experts, of the absolute necessity for the most up-to-date ventilation, sanitation, fire exits, etc. They informed me that "special noiseless fans, pumps and motors mounted on vibration absorbers and housed in chambers insulated with sound-absorbing material were being designed for the purpose of ventilation on a lavish scale." Six million cubic feet of fresh air were to be admitted every hour, or, they explained to me, as I listened in respectful silence, "one-and-a-half-hundred weight per person!" Nay, I was told more, that this fresh air was first going to be "tempered, then drawn through a finely atomized water spray similar to a mountain mist which coats all particles of dirt with moisture and then separates them with the air stream by means of special moisture-eliminating plates at the rate of 2,000 cubic feet of air per person per hour!"

I have endeavored to give an impression of old Moorish architecture under modern conditions and surroundings. From my knowledge of the art of the Moors I have evolved in my modern imagination a new Alhambra for the auditorium and foyer ceiling, not true in detail to that of Granada, but which seems to me to give at least an impression of the decorative art of the Conquerors of Spain. For the large entrance hall foyer I chose decorations in the seventeenth century Spanish Baroque style inspired by the work of the architects Juan de Toledo, Juan de Herrera and Mora, who, under Philip II, built the royal palace of Aranjuez.

I am fully aware that learned specialists in matters architectural may no doubt claim to find in "my Alhambra" traces of the palace at Cordoba or even greater "inaccuracies" and "blunders," but I can assure these gentlemen that what they are pointing out I am already only too well aware of.

These "errors" have therefore been committed with the sole intention of creating the atmosphere of Moorish Spain in the up-to-date Granada Theatre auditorium, not in a vain effort to reproduce mediaeval Spanish architecture for a museum, but for the interior of a twentieth century theatre structure.

Is Your Theatre Up To Date and Ready for the Future?

Modern Motion Pictures need, for their most successful presentation, a screen of various picture sizes, automatically adjustable by the operator, to effectively portray the outstanding scenes of the picture. This new type of screen control is an absolute necessity for the showing of Magnascope, Grandeur, Spoor and Real-Life films, and will play an even more important role in the film developments of the future.

The PETER CLARK AUTOMATIC SCREEN ADJUSTOR fulfills all the demands of the present Motion Picture and has anticipated the needs of the future.

With over 200 successful installations to their credit, Peter Clark, Inc., are prepared to serve any theatre owner or manager who sees the trend of the times and desires to install a screen that will not only serve for the projection of any of the enlarged picture systems, but will also lend itself to almost instantaneous reduction to standard size pictures projected from 35 mm. film.

Training of Theatre Managers By Correspondence Under New System

Home Study Course Contains Wide Variety of Subjects for Student-Managers Covering Many Phases of Operation—More Than 300 Enrolled

By D. M. BALTIMORE

Founder and Director, Moving Picture Theatre Managers' Institute

FIVE years ago if it were said that men in the business could be trained in the modern theatre business methods through home-study methods, while employed at the theatre, it would have been called theory. Today, however, the theatre field has hundreds of men who have been so trained.

This method of theatre instruction is a development of an idea suggested by the industry's need for manpower, which resulted in the Moving Picture Theatre Managers' Institute. The Institute, originally a resident school for managers in New York City, is now located at Elmira, N. Y. It was soon found that resident school training was too expensive for the theatre employee who could not give up the many months of time required for such training. To overcome the limitations of a resident school, the lectures and data were prepared for home-study training, with the result that 36 text-books on all phases of the theatre business form the foundation for the Institute's medium of training.

73 Colleges Use Home Study

Before preparing the text material for the course, an investigation of home-study training was made. It was found that 73 colleges and universities in the United States were successfully using the home-study methods in teaching hundreds of college subjects. The methods as used in these schools were adapted to the Institute's training. The curriculum as well as the text-books of the Institute's course were presented to the New York State's department of education for approval, which was granted.

The home-study method of instruction differs from the class-room in one major respect. In the class-room the student hears the instructor lecture the instructions and makes notes accordingly, whereas in the home-study method the student reads from the printed word the lecture or instruction. The home-study method often is the only method in which many subjects can be learned. English composition, for instance, cannot be taught in any other way than by home-study methods.

Wide Range of Students

Through a system of examinations, the student is regularly checked as to his progress. For example, the student must prepare advertising campaigns on current subjects, just as if he were preparing them for his theatre. These campaigns are prepared as to copy, layout, and size for certain specified cities, and are sent to the Institute for constructive criticism. If satisfactory, the student is so informed, and if not, he is shown where he is at fault and why and how to correct his deficiencies. In such cases he must prepare a new campaign and continues until he is proficient.

The institute reports that it has now enrolled more than 300 students, residing in most of the states and connected with all the major chains and many of the smaller chains, as well as students in Canada and other countries.

The scope and magnitude of the course can be readily realized from the curriculum of the course which is as follows:

National Screen Splits Ohio in Two

Cleveland.—National Screen Service has divided Ohio into two districts instead of handling it as one. Evan G. Roberts, who handled the entire territory with headquarters in Cleveland, is now covering the southern part of Ohio, Kentucky, West Virginia.

Arthur Ehrlich, at one time local M-G-M branch manager, is Northern Ohio representative with headquarters in Cleveland.

After Auto Trade

Toledo—Manager Jack O'Connell of the Vita-Temple is stimulating hot weather attendance at his house by the offer of free parking to his patrons. Through a tie-up with the Richardson garage, which is in the same block as the theatre, the customers' claim checks are stamped "paid" at the box-office when seats are purchased.

Tulsa Ritz Installs Huge Electric Sign

Tulsa, Okla.—The Ritz here has installed a new electric sign. More than 3,000 lamps are used. Four and one-half foot letters spell Ritz in the display, which weighs three and one-half tons, is 52 feet long and 11 feet wide. Twelve miles of wire connections were used to connect the lamps and switchboard. There are 52 individual contacts working a flasher and steady light system. The sign is bordered with Neon tubes.

New Fox Slogan

"THE Last Word" has been selected as slogan of all Fox theatres. Its adoption will mean scrapping of existing trademarks.

Warner Theatre Heads Switched

Milwaukee—Lineup of theatre managers on the Warner Wisconsin circuit has been revamped following resignation of Owen McKivett as manager of the circuit's Venetian, Racine.

He is replaced in that city by F. M. Westphal, formerly manager of the circuit's Kenosha theatre. Westphal in turn is succeeded by Harold Janecky, formerly manager of Warner Bros. Appleton theatre. Lon Ramsdell, a newcomer, succeeds Janecky at Appleton.

In Milwaukee the managers have been reassigned in several instances, Jack Pfeiffer, formerly of the Lake, has succeeded Robert Gross at the Riviera, while Gross has been transferred to the Lake, succeeding Lucien Hull.

Retaining Individuality In Transformed Theatres

A UNIQUE AND STRIKING FEATURE OF THIS UNIT IS A DOUBLE MARQUEE

RKO's Twin Theatres, Separate Edifices With Double Marquee

TOLEDO — Twin theatres completely transformed, eminently comfortable and sumptuously decorated, were presented to this city's amusement seekers with the completion of RKO's $350,000 remodeling program on the Rivoli and Palace.

Featuring the finished project is a huge double marquee extending completely across the facades of the two theatres, which are adjoining structures in the heart of Toledo's theatrical district.

Although the twin theatres are coupled as an RKO unit, they retain their separate identities as to box offices, lobbies and interior decoration schemes. Extensive alterations in both houses have made them, to all intents and purposes, entirely new edifices. The Rivoli, which seats 2,800, has a vaudeville and picture policy; the Palace, with a capacity of 1,200, plays films only.

An innovation in carpeting is one of the first improvements to be noticed on entering the Rivoli lobby. This distinctly novel idea in floor covering for the marble lobby and its two staircases is credited to W. A. Hartman, art director for John Eberson, architect who handled the remodeling. Hartman originated a rubber carpeting with a net, or mesh, of hexagonal design. The mesh not only adds greatly to the attractiveness of the carpet but also increases its resilience.

Polychrome Treatment in Lobby

A polychrome treatment of Italian style was used in the lobby decorations. The ceiling, formerly of plain plaster, now is of antique walnut paneling. Bas relief placques mounted on a Venetian red background adorn the side walls. This frieze represents the triumphal entry of Alexander into Babylon and is a copy of that executed in 1812 for one of the apartments of the Palace of the Quirinal in Rome. The beauty of the work may be measured by the fact that another reproduction of it, in marble, is among the prized pieces in the Museum of Copenhagen in Denmark.

Creating Warm Hospitality Spirit

In the foyer, which is reached through curtained glass doors, occasional pieces of furniture in walnut and subdued gold, together with soft carpeting in a red, taupe and black design, and artistically placed lamps create an atmosphere of warm hospitality. Home-like appeal and comfort, rather than staggering magnificence, predominate in the appointments of both theatres and the color schemes are in harmony with that laudable aim. Elaborate use has been made of fabric in decorating the side walls, a damask of henna shade being employed in the paneling of the Rivoli. Ornamental bracket busts of famous figures in history, art and science stud the walls. The double series of upper boxes which formerly jutted into the auditorium have been removed to make way for a gigantic, cleverly illuminated niche on either side of the house. In one of these is a seven-foot copy of the Apollo Belvedere, in the other a similarly imposing replica of the classic Diana. Solid walls have supplanted the rest of the old box-seat sections, the result being a singularly impressive effect, its charm heightened by the simplicity of the whole decorative scheme and a sharp contrast to old motifs.

Off the Rivoli mezzanine, occupying space formerly taken up by offices, is the women's lounge, with windows overlooking the street. A modernistic motif prevails here, cerise, green, apricot, silver and black being prominent in the color combinations. An elaborately equipped cosmetic rooms, with specially designed mirror tables, adjourns the lounge.

Hugh Arches Supplant Rows of Boxes Which Jutted Over Orchestra

Also readily accessible from the mezzanine are the men's lounge, with inviting, richly upholstered chairs and divans, and the offices of the two theatres' executives.

Above, at the top of the spacious balcony is the new and commodious projection booth, boasting the very latest in equipment and safety devices.

Even greater architectural ingenuinty was required in transforming the Palace into a modern cinema house, as the theater had undergone several prior remodel-

Upper Tiers of Boxes Here Were Converted Into Arched Balconies

ing programs in the course of its checkered career as a burlesque emporium, stock company theater and flicker palace. An ornate series of upper and lower boxes had been partially removed during earlier alterations, leaving the upper rows of them, although they were neither useful nor ornamental. This problem was met by building sturdy arches in beneath the remaining boxes and uniting them into an arched balcony.

Damask paneling also adorns the side walls of the Palace and the same material conceals the unused orchestra pit. The fabric color scheme is grav and gold, while the same tones are repeated in the painting and other decorations of the house. The general scheme is French in flavor, as contrasted with the Italianate characteristics of the Rivoli's interior.

In both theatres the extensive use of fabric wall coverings has been found to make a tremendous improvement in the acoustics, the sound reproduction being flawless in both instances.

Both houses now are operated by RKO under management of Howard Feigley, who held a similar post when the Sourbier interests owned the properties.

Personality Is Showman's Key

By S. L. ROTHAFEL

Successful showmanship is in no small measure a matter of personality. Give thought to your appearance, your clothes, your manners and your speech. Maintain the respect of your staff without losing a touch of kinship with them. As you are so your theatre will be. Become a good mixer. I have always placed great value on my associations outside of my theatre. Join clubs, join trade associations, mix with business men, establish contacts with public characters.

Forget tradition; don't overlook the value of novelty. Don't be afraid to make mistakes. I have found that impulse is a great asset; first thoughts are generally best thoughts. If you have been born with the instinct of a showman you are fortunate. There is no way that this instinct can be taught. Avoid bad taste. Good taste is never wrong, never out of place, never a detriment to yourself or your house.

Be modest personally and be modest about your house and its attractions. In your advertising it is better to understate than to overstate. People will learn to have confidence in you and having that confidence will value your sincerity. When they know you are sincere they will take everything you say for granted. This will save you the trouble of shouting from the housetops.

A good showman should be in position to allow his staff to run his theatre without a hitch during his absence. Be sure you place enough responsibility on your subordinates. Insist on responsibility from them. On my staff there are always many men who have grown up with the theatre and they are the greatest asset I have. I have always made it my maxim that responsibility makes men.

You ask me how to be sure of giving successful shows. I will first ask you to remember that you cannot give the public what it wants for the good reason that neither the public nor you know what it wants. All you can do is to build as good as you know how, taking nothing for granted. It is necessary to please yourself.

In every audience, in every gathering of men, there is a potential leader. In every one of your audiences there is some one who knows all you know; if not technically, at least with regard to what makes enjoyable entertainment. When you are building a show, keep this mythical leader in mind; build your show to please one man. The rest will follow like sheep. Don't worry about shooting over the heads of your public. It takes more than genius to know the level of the public head. If you don't try to please a mythical leader in your audience you will find the odds against you. Mathematically these odds are the seating capacity of your house against yourself.

Be humble. You are not as great as your audience. Humility is the basis of greatness. Humility and the courage to take a chance are tremendous assets.

The good will of your public is of untold value. It will carry you over the weeks when your show isn't right. I have always noted that two or three weeks with good shows can give me at least another week of good business even though the quality of my show may let down.

New Eyemo Camera Is Placed on Market

Chicago — Bell & Howell have made available a new Eyemo camera, which uses standard-size film. The new device embodies major features of the Filmo 70-D camera, having seven film speeds (4, 6, 8, 12, 16, 24 and 32), a built-in turret head accommodating three lenses, a variable area viewfinder and a relative exposure indicator.

In addition to these features, the new Eyemo has an integral crank which permits hand cranking when desired—for instance, when an exceptionally long scene is encountered which runs beyond the spring capacity of the camera, or when single frame exposures are to be taken. For hand cranking, the speed indicator may be set at the speed desired. The governor then acts as a brake and makes it impossible to turn faster than the previously established speed.

The new Eyemo can be held in the hand or used on a light portable tripod, such as the new B. & H. all-metal tripod. The Eyemo is designed especially for use of newsreel cameramen.

General Register Starts Operations in Midwest

Chicago—Launching sales activities in the Midwest through a newly established branch office at 1018 S. Wabash Ave., Charles Clark, district manager, is lining up his staff here for General Register Corp. of New York. Complete service staff, warehouse and sales unit are included in the new local department, which will cover the Midwest zone.

shadows in it. You will notice that some spots are completely black, while others are gray. The lighter gray parts are the half tones.

Now we know that all ink prints a surface with the same intensity. How are we going to get the halftones on paper, then, if we can do nothing to change our methods of printing?

Let us consider a photograph first. Why do we have tones on an ordinary snapshot?

Light sensitive silver salts are used as a basis for photography. These salts are fine grains or particles. When many of them appear close together, the eye, unable to distinguish between them, sees a solid mass of color. When these grains are more widely separated the tone appears lighter. It is thus an optical illusion with many fine dots appearing like solids that causes us to see lighter and darker colors in a photograph.

Optical Illusion

Now let us consider certain kinds of drawings and paintings in which we find tones. How are they obtained?

Ink and paint consist of many fine particles of ground pigment mixed with a "binder" which holds them together. Like the photographic salts, these grains are too fine to be seen with the naked eye, but when many of them appear on paper, the effect is that of a solid mass. When diluted with water, the particles spread out so that the paper shows through and gives the effect of gray.

Obviously, if we could apply the same principle of optical illusion to engravings, we would be able to reproduce tones. It is just this which has been done.

The halftone plate consists of dots which are mechanically made substitutes for the grains in the tones of the original. These dots are produced by photographing the original through a fine mesh or grating called a halftone screen. As in the line process, the photograph is transferred to the metal, the acid resisting cover is placed over it, and it is then put into its acid bath. The metal surrounding the dots is then etched away so that the dots stand out from the plate in relief. When printed, these dots cause the same optical illusion that the grains of salt or the particles of pigment did.

Look for Dots

The explanation just given is not an attempt to reproduce in detail the manufacturing technique of the halftone. But if you will pick up a newspaper and examine some of the reproductions of photographs you will be able to see the dots if you use a reading glass, or if you carefully scrutinize the picture with the naked eye. It is enough for our purpose just at present to remember the difference between a line cut and a halftone.

All printing is done on paper. Papers vary from the coarse, crude news print to the smooth-coated surface of "The Ladies' Home Journal" or "The Saturday Evening Post." How will the dots of the halftone reproduce on different kinds of paper?

The printing we know is done by the dots. On smooth paper the very fine dots should leave an impression that is clear because all parts of the paper come in contact with the dots. Newspaper stock, however, does not present an even surface to the printing plate. Some of the dots will not print unless the paper is forced into the plate. And in that case, if there are too many dots to the square inch, some of the ink which is in the space between the dots will be printed and the result will be a smudgy reproduction. Obviously, if we had fewer dots, and larger ones, the increased space between dots would prevent the ink from smudging. Thus, we need plates with different number of dots for different kinds of paper. How do engravers meet this requirement?

Size of Screens

Screens produce dots because of the criss-crossing lines that form the mesh through which the original is photographed. The number of lines vary from 55 lines to the inch to 400 lines to the inch in the following division: 55, 65, 85, 100, 110, 120, 133, 150, 175, 200, 300, and 400. The number of dots produced by the crossing lines is the square of the number of lines to the inch. In other words, a 100 line screen produces 10,000 dots to the inch. No wonder they can not be seen by the naked eye!

The screens producing the least number of dots are the best for the coarsest paper. Newspaper halftones should be engraved through screens containing from 110 to 133. Screens above 133 are used for special kinds of printing requiring unusually accurate reproduction.

Why must the advertiser know all this? Because in ordering an engraving it is necessary to specify the screen in which it is to be made if it is a halftone. All publications list their screen requirements on their advertising rate cards, but a theatre manager making up special heralds, a theatre program, etc., will have to find out just what paper he is going to use before he has any engravings made. The engraver will tell him the necessary screen if he is shown a sample of the paper.

In his daily routine, the theatre manager rarely orders engravings. Instead he uses "mats" and electros which he obtains from the exchange. How are these made and what is their nature?

Making a cut is an expensive process. In large advertising campaigns, or in a business like this in which the same ad may appear in hundreds of newspapers, the cost of engraving would run into thousands of dollars for one picture. In addition, the cuts are heavy and mailing costs would be great. For these reasons, mats are used.

A matrix or mat is made of a paper substance which is extremely strong and tough. The original engraving is pressed into this under great pressure and the result is a mould of the original in the paper composition. This is light and flexible and lends itself to easy handling.

In the newspaper office, the mat is put into a casting machine and molten lead is poured over it. The lead hardens in the mould, forming a reproduction of the original engraving, which is suitable for printing. The reproduction is called a stereotype or a "stereo." Practically all newspaper plants are equipped for casting stereos.

Altering Mats

The theatre manager must rely to a great extent on the mats sent him from the exchanges because he does not as a rule employ an artist nor would he care to go to the expense of making original engravings. Fortunately, however, mats can be altered very easily to suit individual requirements. The moulds can not be changed, but it is very easy to cut away part of the mat, leaving only the portions desired. Cutting should be done at the newspaper office, where a jigsaw will be used, giving a product of greater accuracy and neatness.

In preparing his layout, the theatre advertiser should clip the picture he desires from the press book, alter it by cutting with a pair of shears, and paste on the layout. He should then send the mat with the layout and instruct the compositor to change the mat according to the picture on the layout.

An electrotype or "electro" is a metal duplicate of the original which is used just as the original would be. Like a mat, it is made when many copies of the original are desired, but it gives a more faithful reproduction than a stereo. It is more expensive than a mat.

About Ben Day

The Ben Day process, named after the printer Benjamin Day, is a mechanical device for making dot and stipple patterns. The process finds constant application in all kinds of printing.

Sometimes a black mass would appear too heavy in an ordinary line engraving. It is very simple for the engraver to substitute some Ben Day pattern for the solid black so that the reproduction appears an even gray often much more pleasing than the original.

Ben Day designs are also used to fill in certain areas which to an artist would present a difficult problem.

Sometimes type must be set into an engraving. To do that, the engraving is cut or mortised, leaving an open space of the appropriate shape. The type slugs are set into this and printed as part of the plate.

New Effects Manual

DETROIT.—A variety of new lighting effects for screen, stage and proscenium lighting recently developed in connection with the Brenkert F7 Master Brenograph are described in detail in a projectionist's operating manual issued this week by the Brenkert Light Projection Co., of Detroit.

In addition to a complete study of the apparatus the operating manual illustrates lighting designs for special presentations by the use of slides and slide effects, both positive and negative, stationary and mobile.

ready for another hard day by spending the night raising hell. Spend more time with your family, cultivate some of their pleasures. Out of the seven nights in a week, five should be spent in a healthy, restful manner. "Stepping out" more than two nights a week, even for friendly visits with others, is as much as your body can safely stand. Aside from actual sleep, restful evenings are your best bet. Pass up some of those so-called parties.

8—Don't Bite Off Too Much. Avoid taking on too much of anything at one time. If you assume the right amount of work, you are more certain of seeing that amount through to a successful conclusion than if you attempt to do too much. Biting off more than you can chew is bad for the health and for the undertaking. It's a handicap that is rarely overcome.

9—Good Company. Cultivate good company and friends. Especially those who can provide you with many opportunities to laugh. If you travel with the right kind of people you will be travelling on the right road to health and success. When away from business—forget business. Your after-business friends and company should, preferably, be people disassociated from your own work.

10—Take It Easy. This last rule is perhaps the most important of all regardless of how seriously you may take the other nine. "Go Slow, Take It Easy and Don't Rush," we have already told you, constitutes one of the greatest rules in all walks of life. If you can train yourself to take things easy, to think over all matters carefully and sensibly before acting, to avoid those deals where you are asked to "rush," then you will be laying the foundation for a successful career and a healthy future.

Theme Perfumes

HOLLYWOOD—and now theatre perfume to provide atmosphere for pictures. Odors cued to various types of pictures are to be manufactured and distributed by West Coast Perfume Co. The idea is not particularly a sequence odor, but rather a thematic perfume for the entire picture. The Fox at San Bernandino recently experimented with "Three French Girls." However, only a sequence experiment was conducted. The smell of stored clover was distributed through the ventilating system to enhance a scene showing the cast in a haymow set.

Proper Degrees Of Illumination

Proper degrees of illumination for all sections of the theatre should be made the subject of studious consideration. This can be aided by borrowing a footcandle meter, simple instrument for measuring intensity of illumination, from any light or power company. These utilities will readily assist or instruct theatre managers in making tests of theatre illumination.

Managers should preserve an easy gradation of lighting intensity over the route the patron travels in finding a seat, avoiding abrupt changes. Considerable latitude is allowed, but a maximum at one point and a minimum at another are undesirable in the public portions of the house.

The figures given in the table below show proper readings for night illumination. Readings should be made at a height of 30 or 36 inches from the floor, and should be as follows:

Marquee—30 footcandles up.
Outer Lobby—20 to 30 fc.
Inner Lobby—5 to 10 fc.
Foyer—3 to 6 fc.
Promenades, Ramps—2 to 5 fc.
Auditorium—4 fc. in rear, 2 fc. in front.
Lounges, Rest Rooms—3 to 6 fc.
Stairways—2 to 4 fc.
Elevators—3 to 6 fc.
Dressing Rooms—5 to 10 fc.
Booth—5 to 10 fc.
Engine Rooms—5 to 10 fc.
Sign Shop—5 to 10 fc.
Alleyways, Fire Escapes—1 to 2 fc.

Light is an Attraction *Inside the Theater also—

People can be thrilled with light as well as attracted by light. Hundreds of successful showmen realize this and are using the FA Major System for stage and auditorium lighting control because it pays profits at the box office.

MAYFLOWER COMPACT SIGNED, NOV. 21, 1620.

When the little band of Separatists (later called the Pilgrim Fathers) embarked from Plymouth, England, to found a colony in the new world (see Sept. 16) "the necessity of some mode of civil government was enjoined upon them in the farewell letter from their pastor. . . . On the very day when the Mayflower anchored in what is now Cape Cod Harbor, they wisely organized a government for their colony for they drew up and signed the famous paper known as the 'Mayflower Compact,' a short constitution providing a form of government 'in which they agreed to be governed by such rules and regulations as should be made by common consent for the good of all.' This compact has often been eulogized as the first written constitution in the world and as the forerunner of the Declaration of Independence."

This day is now frequently honored by the descendants of the Pilgrims since the date of their landing at Plymouth, December 21st, known as Forefathers Day, is so near the Christmas holidays that its observance is not always easily arranged.

The Tercentenary of the Pilgrims, 1620-1920, was celebrated throughout the United States, Canada and Great Britain, "commemorating all that the Pilgrims stood for, representing as they did not only the freedom to which this nation is dedicated, religious, political and personal, but also the pioneer spirit.

The celebrations began in England in May 1920; they were continued in Leyden in Holland and later in the United States. There was a second sailing of the Mayflower and a distinguished company embarked from England following the route of the Pilgrims to Leyden, from there to Provincetown, Mass., thence to Plymouth itself."

Boosting the Roxy

ALL Fox houses four times yearly are to run a trailer boosting the Roxy under a plan adopted by Harry C. Arthur, general manager of the circuit. The Fox executive figures that calling attention to the Roxy affiliation builds prestige for other theatres of the chain.

The idea is easily adaptable to chain operators who figure they have an "ace" house suitable for the boost.

Straits Settlements to Get Occidental Theatre

Washington—Modern features of occidental theatres are to be brought to Bangkok in the Straits Settlements, according to advices to the M. P. Section of the Department of Commerce from Warren S. Lockwood and Donald W. Smith, assistant trade commissioners at Singapore.

The new theatre is to be completed in April, 1932, in time for the 150th anniversary of the capital's founding. It is being built at the request of the king and queen and the site has been visited and approved by their majesties. The house is to seat 2,000.

Gov't Device to Study Acoustics

WASHINGTON — Accurate measurement of the intensity of noise is made possible by an instrument developed by the Sound Section, Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce, according to V. L. Chrisler, engineer. The apparatus is similar in appearance to the pick-up equipment of a broadcasting station and is compact and portable. Measurements are obtained quickly, it is stated.

Clothing worn by the audience is an important factor in reproduction, the audience absorbing more sound in winter than in summer, because people wear more and heavier clothing in winter, the department's tests show.

The Sound Section of the Bureau of Standards has for some time been carrying on experiments with sound reverberation and acoustical materials. These experiments have been conducted in a specially constructed building housing a large empty room having no sound absorption and no acoustical properties. A loud speaker is placed in the empty room and the length of time required for the sound to decay after the source has been shut off is measured.

These experiments are carried on in the empty room and then with various types of materials having acoustic properties placed in the room. In this way, practically every kind of acoustical material now made has been tested with the cooperation of the company manufacturing it. The effects and sound absorption qualities of the acoustical materials are measured and the Bureau of Standards advises the manufacturer on the improvement of his product.

Eye and Ear Tests

The experiments are conducted both by ear and by visual indication. In the former method, the length of time required for the sound to spend itself is timed by individuals by ear. In the second method, which is thought to be more accurate, a microphone is placed in the room and the effects of the sound are transmitted by electric current through an amplifier and into a tube volt meter. This gives a visual indication of the time required for the sound to decay. Success has been obtained with both methods.

An interesting instrument for accurately measuring intensity of noise has been developed by Bureau af Standards, Washington. The apparatus resembles the "pick up" equipment of a broadcasting station, and is easily portable. In operation a calibrated variable shunt is connected across the input to the set and by observing deflection of a meter, measurements are quickly and accurately obtaind. Dr. V. L. Chrisler, of the Bureau Staff, is shown operating the instrument.

Among the more common substances from which acoustical materials are made are plaster and hair felt, sugar cane fiber, pumice and rock wool, the latter being the result of molten rock blown through exceedingly fine jets. Some of the materials were found to have higher coefficients of sound absorption than others. In general those of higher coefficients seem to be more costly.

While the use of sound-absorbing material has been most prominent in theatres and particularly the talking picture houses, their use in business buildings has progressed at a rapid rate during the past three or four years. It has been found that this material, which is most often placed in the ceiling, is very effective in softening and toning down such office noises as originate from typewriters, persons speaking and various business machines.

Difference in Reverberation

Considerably more acoustical material is required in the talking picture houses than ordinary legitimate theatres, due to the fact that while the human voice is somewhat limited in volume, the loud speakers used in sound reproduction have virtually unlimited volume. Consequently, most talking picture houses have a reverberation period of about one-half the duration the ordinary theatre has.

In the theatres the acoustical material is commonly placed in the ceiling and side walls while curtains and drapes are also used. In many theatres, the soft seats and spring padding in the backs of the chairs serve to absorb much sound.

An Essential to Proper Presentation of Sound

REHEARSALS have become a necessity since the odvent of sound pictures. The projectionist needs rehearsals because his point of vantage usually does not enable him to determine the proper sound levels for the program, so that an observer in the auditorium is needed to gauge volume of the sound reproduced. The two co-operating is the most efficient system, each being provided with pad and pencil. This enables careful cueing and checking of the comparative volume throughout the program.

Maintenance of the sound at normal level is essential to the proper enjoyment of the program. In addition, too-loud or too-soft tonal reproduction produces fatigue. The change-over factor also is one which must be considered, and a rehearsal enables accurate cueing of them.

To obtain the desired effect, it is necessary to maintain the volume of sound at a normal level, which means the level of naturalness for all reproductions. Too often there is the jarring effect of a pistol shot, which is barely audible, while a girl's voice comes through with a boom. These conditions cause sharp criticism and prove a real handicap to the subject being presented.

Rehearse every show you put on. A provision in the new "standard" contract calls for delivery of films to exhibitors in time for rehearsal, so failure to rehearse only can be laid at the door of slip-shod operation. The careful presentation of sound programs demands that every show be rehearsed. You'll find the rehearsal a good bet from the standpoint of pleased patrons.

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

WE HAVE referred to the wattage rating of transformer secondary windings. These figures function as guides to indicate the maximum current output of each winding and serve to limit the character of the load which may be imposed upon the transformer. At the same time the sum total of the wattage ratings of the output windings serve to indicate the power input requirements of the transformer. For 100 per cent efficiency, the input power would be equal to the output power. Such efficiency cannot be obtained in practice and the input power must at all times be greater than the output power. The exact difference is a matter of design, but one must remember to allow a certain amount of tolerance because of the losses in the transformer. Thus a 15 per cent increase is sufficient to indicate the approximate power input to the transformer at full load.

This power rating serves a definite purpose. The voltage rating is a matter of turn ratio. The current rating is also a matter of turn ratio but each winding is alloted a certain amount of current output when the transformer is designed. Thus it is possible to have two transformers operating upon the same input voltage, with like number of output windings, with like output voltage ratings yet different power ratings. Hence, the selection of a transformer is based upon several considerations. Output voltage is not the only quantity. This value of voltage is determined by the input voltage and the turn ratio, hence, the input voltage is also an item of importance. Thus a transformer which is designed for operation upon a 220 volt line will not ordinarily be satisfactory for application upon a 110 volt line despite the fact that the output voltages of the 220 volt unit are exactly those required.

It is possible to use the 220 volt upon a 110 volt line if the power output is satisfactory, by arranging to increase the input voltage to the transformer to 220 volts. Another transformer designed for a 110 volt input and with sufficient power rating to provide the correct current to the 220 unit makes this possible. The connection of transformer No. 1 to transformer No. 2 is shown in figure 78. Now, the transformer connected to the 110 volt line must fulfill two requirements. First, its output voltage must be 220 volts, that required by the 220 volt unit. Second, its output power rating must be such as to provide the required voltage at the current necessary in the primary winding of the 220 volt unit when the full load is applied to the 220 volt transformer.

The selection of the 110 volt transformer is independent of the output voltage rating of the 220 volt unit. Whether the secondary circuit of the 220 volt transformer consists of one, two or three windings and whether these output voltage are a decimal of the input or a multiple of the input is of no consequence, just so long as the power output of T2 is enough to supply the needs of T1 when the latter is being subjected to the full load.

Suppose that we reverse the condition. T1 is designed for a 110 volt line and the system available is rated at 220 volts. Two means of employing T1 are possible. One method makes use of a resistance, variable so as to provide satisfactory control which is inserted in series with the 110 volt winding when it is connected to the 220 volt line and serves to produce the required voltage drop so that the voltage impressed across the primary of T1 is 110 volts. This is shown in figure 79. The variable resistance R must cause a voltage drop of 110 volts at the current necessary to provide full load across the secondary windings. Thus if the wattage rating of the output winding is 200 watts, it means that about 2 amperes flows in the primary winding at full load. Hence, the resistance R must drop 110 volts at 2 amperes. By making the resistor variable, adjustment is possible to suit various needs. By making the maximum resistance of R greater than that required at full load satisfactory adjustment is possible during less than full load operation.

An alternative system, resembling that illustrated in figure 78, is the use of a step down transformer between the line and the 110 volt unit. This is shown in figure 80. The transformer T2 now acts as a step-down transformer and feeds T1. Once again the power output rating of T2 must be sufficient to fill the needs of T1 at full load.

Frequency Rating

During all of this discussion we have omitted mention of frequency. For any one design of a transformer the selection of the number of turns necessary for the primary winding is based upon a formula such as that shown herewith. (This formula is used merely as an illustration of a point and subsequent mathematical treatment shall be omitted.)

$$Tp = \frac{Ep \times 10^8}{4.44 \times a \times B \times F}$$

where Tp is the primary turns

Ep is the primary voltage

a is the cross section area of the core in square inches

B is the flux density of the core per square inch of core cross section.

F is the frequency of the power supply

Assuming the selection of a core of certain dimensions and of certain quality of material which item encompasses the flux density, the number of turns used in the primary depends entirely on the voltage of the primary and the frequency of the power supply. With any one voltage input, we note that the number of turns in the primary varies inversely as the frequency. In other words a transformer designed for 60 cycles will have fewer turns in in primary winding than a transformer designed for 25 cycles. This condition naturally influences the number of turns used for the secondary winding or windings as the case may be to produce a certain turn ratio and voltage output. Thus the frequency of the power supply bear a direct relation to the transformer used. As a matter of fact transformers bear definite frequency specifications. Customary practice is such that transformers are designed to cover a range of frequencies between 25 and 40 and between 50 and 60 cycles. According to the formula the number of primary turns required for a 25-40 cycle transformer exceeds that required for a 50-60 cycle unit, hence the 60 cycle transformer may be connected to the 25 cycle line without injury to the transformer. The reverse, however, is not true. A 50-60 cycle transformer when connected to a 25-40 cycle line will cause sufficient current to flow through the primary winding to injure that winding. Without entering upon a lengthy discussion concerning the reasons for this action, we can refer to the impedance of the primary winding at 60 cycles and the impedance of the same winding at 25 cycles. For example, with any one set of constants, the turns required at 60 cycles are 230 and for 25 cycles the turns required at 555. Recognizing the variation of inductance with varia-

Plan Simplifies Stage Lighting

LIGHTING of all Publix units is now being planned in accordance with a standardized stage layout, the result of months of study of equipment installations in many theatre by Francis M. Falge, James Orr and William Enes of the Publix production department. The newly adopted standard layout becomes effective immediately.

Advantages of stage standardization are apparent, among them the saving of time in hanging and setting a show, ease of operation, and elimination of bad first performances. With unit lighting planned for a standard layout, data sheets are standardized and unit lighting may be easily reproduced in each theatre.

Footlight circuits selected are red, white and blue White is included for high intensities of light, particularly for line girls' numbers If amber is desired a dimmed red and white without blue is a satisfactory substitute. Footlights should be of 100-watt size, diffusing type, in a double row on not larger than 5 in. centers, with the upper row of reflectors parallel with the stage floor and the filaments slightly above it.

New Type Spotlights

Borderlights are 200-watt chromium plated on 8 in. centers. The small size is seen as a big advantage, and desirable intensities are easily obtained in conjunction with accompanying equipment of the standard stage. Red, white and blue circuits are used in the first border, which should be as far downstage as possible and massed to light the apron but not the set. This border lights the line girls and the acting area. Other borders, at 5 ft. 6 in. intervals, are in red, green and blue. White is rarely used over a set, and may be obtained when necessry, since these three colors when mixed produce white. Green, too, is in frequent demand for unit lighting.

Spotlights are of the new type which were made up for the Metropolitan, Boston, and the Paramount, New Haven, where they have proved to be very successful. With exception of the balcony spots, all use 6 in. lenses of 10 to 12 in focal length. They have prefocussed base sockets and lamps, which automatically line the filaments up with the lenses. Mirrors have no focussing adjustments, because of the new base.

It is suggested that spotlights be hung on a piper with a small walk to get to them, or a catwalk be hung on another pipe and removed when the spotlights are adjusted, instead of the old ponderous steel bridge which handicapped direction of spots. Hung on yokes, adjustment of these spots is simple.

HUB

The Electrical Center for all Theatres

Hub Electric Company offers a service which is everything that the name implies—the center for all theatre electrical equipment and installation.

No theatre is too large or too small for the Hub organization. Our many years of experience and wide background of theatre work enable us to offer a service which stands supreme in the motion picture theatre field.

Many of the results of our extensive experience are gathered together in a new and comprehensive catalogue which we have just published. This book is of priceless value to every theatre executive. A copy will be cheerfully sent FREE on request.

3- Way Amplifying At Amusement Park

Rye, N. Y.—Broadcasting of voice, photograph or radio reproduction to any of three different points is made possible by the sound amplifying equipment at Playland, designed and installed by Hays-Griffin, Inc., New York.

The casino is used in the summer time as a huge dancehall. The floor measures about 240 feet in length and 120 feet in width. Around three sides the loudspeakers are built into recesses in the walls and are hidden by means of a decorative screen, in keeping with the design of the interior. At the extreme end of the casino there are two Wright - DeCoster dynamic reproducers, mounted on 24 by 48-inch baffle boards. Along one side are four individual units mounted on baffle boards of the same size. At each of these speakers a volume control and field switch is provided, in order that any combination of speakers may be used as desired. This control of the speakers is also provided in the main control room.

The amplifying equipment in the control room was manufactured by the Samson Electric Co., Canton, Mass., and consists of two PAM amplifiers mounted on separate iron racks, together with the control apparatus. Three sources of input are provided —radio, phonograph and microphone. A Capehart automatic record changing phonograph is used, capable of playing a continuous program of 112 selections over a period of eight hours.

Microphone outlets are installed at various points for the purpose of picking up the orchestra music and amplifying it to the volume required in this enormous dancehall. In the winter time, when the casino is used for ice skating, a microphone is used to make announcements to the skaters.

Remote control of the apparatus is provided in a small room at one end of the casino in order that the operator may cut in a microphone to make an announcement or to enable him to reject a record or to cut the apparatus off entirely. The installation in the restaurant, although similar in many respects to that in the casino, is separate and distinct from the latter.

tion of turns, more than doubling the turns increase the inductance by more than four times. With any one value of input voltage the current flow through the primary 60 cycles will be very much greater at 25 cycles and the usual result is burnout of the winding. Thus it is imperative to observe frequency stipulations.

It is possible to operate transformers in parallel too as to provide twice the normal output of either transformer or to combine the outputs of the two transformers. Such a combination is shown in figure 81A. Assuming two like transformers T1 and T2, their primaries are connected in parallel. Their secondary windings, assuming them to be alike may be connected in parallel as in figure 81A. The voltage output of S1 is equal to S2 and the two voltage sources are in tandem, hence the voltage output remains the same but the power rating of the combination is the sum of the power ratings of S1 and S2.

The series connection of the secondaries is shown in figure 81B. The primaries are connected in parallel and the secondaries in series. The voltage output of this combination now is the sum of the voltages from S1 and S2. The centre tap C need not be used unless it is necessary. This tap is common to both windings and is used when one half of the total voltage is required. Such tandem operation is to be found in sound systems, located in the rectifier power supply system.

Additional data pertaining to power transformers shall be discussed when we consider the application of the power transformer.

The actual heart of all electrical systems is the measuring or indicating instrument. It is equally important in a perfect system and in a system which has failed. In the former it indicates the operating conditions, shows them to be normal and provides a means of noting any change which might prove detrimental to normal operation. In the defective system, it indicates the ailing part unless the major source of power has been interrupted, in which case the measuring instrument is used to locate the defective point. No doubt the readers of these lines are by this time familiar with the use of the meters upon the control panels as guides to determine whether or not the tubes in the amplifier are in perfect condition or if the voltage sources are performing in correct manner. No matter what its immediate application, the voltage and current indicating instruments find their application in every electrical system. In fact, the abundant use of meters or general metering is the only means of rapidly locating a fault in an electrical system. No matter how expert the individual who is called upon to service a defective system, the time necessary to complete the repair would be appreciably reduced by abundant metering.

Generally speaking, there are two types of visual indicating instruments used in electrical circuits. Of course, there are various combinations of devices but substantially there are only two types of complete instruments completely self contained. One of these operates upon the action produced by heat generated in a conductor by passing current through that conductor. This type of meter is known as the "thermal" or hot wire type of instrument. The other type is known as the "magnetic" type of meter and depends upon the forces evoked by virtue of the magnetic fields created around the conductors which carry the current. Between these two types, the latter is far more popular in sound systems. However, a few words about the former will not be amiss.

If current is passed through a conductor heat is developed in that conductor. Just how much electrical energy is converted into heat and how readily one can detect that heat and its effects upon the conductor depends entirely upon the magnitude of the electrical current and the character of the conductor, such as its constituency, its cross section, etc. Certain conductors remain cool while carrying currents within certain limits and heat badly when the current is increased beyond these limits. Hence, physical contact with the conductor during the period that it carries the low value of current will not enable detection of current flow. On the other hand physical contact with the conductor during the time that it is carrying the high value of current will enable detection of the fact that current is flowing through the conductor by virtue of the heat generated. These simple statements should not lead one to believe that such manner of detecting electric current flow is quite satisfactory. In fact, it is just the contrary and apt to prove very devastating. Now, temperature has a definite effect upon the physical dimensions of metals, in fact, upon matter. Matter changes its state with different temperatures, thus solids, gases and liquids. Hence, when current is passed through a wire and sufficient heat is created in that wire, the metal will expand. The property of expansion and contraction is possessed by all metals no matter how small the variation in temperature. Naturally, the effect of expansion or contraction depends entirely upon how that metal is used. Its property of expansion is used in the "thermal" or "hotwire" type of meter, to actuate a pointer which moves across a graduated scale upon which have been marked the calibrations of the instrument representative of the current flowing through the wire.

Such a meter possesses advantages and disadvantages. Joule's law shows that the heat generated in a conductor is independent of the direction of current flow. Thus, this type of meter is equally suitable upon A.C. or D.C. circuits. Furthermore, it is practically independent of frequency, entirely so throughout the range of frequencies employed in sound systems but not completely so throughout the range of radio and ultra high frequencies. Hence, in sound systems, the meter may be used with equal facility upon 60,600 or 6,000 cycles.

Its disadvantage is that it is not very rapid in action. Since the heat generated does not reach its final value instantaneously, the movement of the meter pointer dependent upon the expansion of the current carrying conductor is quite sluggish in action.

The general structure of such a meter is shown in figure 82A. The solid line AB is the conductor in its normal position without any current flowing through its length. A junction at its midpoint is fastened to a thread which makes a spiral around the pointer support and then terminates in a spring. The normal tension of the wire is equal to the opposing tension of the spring and the meter point remains at the 0 position. When current is passed through the wire it expands and stretches into the shape illustrated by the dotted line. This allows the thread to be pulled by the spring and thus move the pointer into the new position indicating the current through AB.

Since the operation of the meter is dependent upon the heat generated in a conductor and this heat is proportional to the square of the current, the indications upon the meter are proportional to the square of the current through AB. Furthermore, the meter indicates effective values of A.C.

The second type of meter, employed in various combinations of measuring systems depends upon the magnetic effect of current flow. Just how this effect is employed depends entirely upon the meter. We know that like poles of a magnet will repel. Whether these magnets are of the permanent type or electromagnets is of no consequence. The fact remains that as long as the polarity of the poles is alike, the poles will exert a repelling action upon each other. If we arrange two pieces of soft iron which can be magnetized within a coil of wire as in figure 83A, and one piece of metal is fastened into place and the other is suspended from a string and both bars are adjacent to each other, they shall remain in that position as long as they are not magnetized. If we now pass current through the circuit, say direct current in one direction so that the top ends of the iron bars becomes the N pole, both bars will have N poles in the same position. The result will be a repelling action or force between the two iron bars, now electromagnets. Since one is fixed, the suspended magnet will move away from the fixed magnet as in figure 83B.

If we now interrupt the current the suspended bar will again assume its position of rest as in figure 83A. If we now reverse the current so that it enter at the bottom of the coil, the polarity of the coil is changed, but the polarity of the magnetized bars is also changed and the bottom ends of both bars are now N poles and the top ends are S poles. Once again the force between the two pole ends is repelling and the bars assume the position shown in figure 83B.

Were it possible to interpret the separation between the two bars in current flowing through the coil, the arrangement would be the equivalent of a measuring instrument suitable for use upon D.C. circuits to indicate the current flowing in the circuit and therefore through the coil. Now, we found that the same repelling action is existant regardless of the direction of the current flow, hence the same deflection is possible with alternating current or direct current through the winding. If we arrange a certain amount of inertia for the suspended bar and apply an alternating current of such frequency that the suspended bar cannot return to its zero position when the current momentarily passes through the zero point, we have an A.C. meter with a constant separation between the bars and which will indicate the effective value of alternating current flowing through the coil. Such is the principle of the moving iron or moving vane type of A.C. and D.C. type of measuring instrument. In this type of meter, that is in the commercial form, the stationary electromagnet assumes a semi-circular shape. The same is true of the moving electromagnet or moving bar. The latter is suspended upon jewel bearings and so located that the repelling force existing between the two electromagnets within the meter forces the moving bar to pivot on its bearings in such manner as to describe a part of a circle. The meter pointer is attached to this bar and moves across the scale when the bars are magnetized by the current. An idea of the arrangement of these two electromagnets may be had from figure 84. SB is the stationary bar. MB is the moving bar, P is the pivot and N is the meter pointer. Springs and a van are employed to properly damp the motion of the moving elements so that they come to rest and do not oscillate when the meter is placed into operation.

In view of possible residual magnetism in the bars, it is customary to take to readings when the meter is applied to a D.C. circuit. One reading with the current flowing through one coil in one direction and the other reading with the meter connections reversed. The mean of these two readings is accepted as the correct D.C. quantity. As to A.C. measurements, one form of connection is sufficient.

There are many other items of importance connected with such meters. To measure the current in a circuit it is necessary to insert the measuring device in such fashion that the current flowing in the circuit also flows through the measuring device. This means a series connection of the current indicating instrument. Now, current flowing through the coil of this meter must find the least opposition to its flow in order

The Newest Wrinkle

WESTERN Electric's salesmen in the sound equipment field will no longer confine their activities to theatres. Commencing this week, each man will call on radio broadcasting stations in his respective territory, handling a complete line of broadcasting accessories.

Narrowing down of the sound market is understood to have prompted this decision by the electric officials.

The company manufactures majority of equipment used in the field of ether waves.

that the measured current be the current in the circuit without the meter in the system. In other words, the effect of introducing the meter into the system should not alter the characteristics of the system. If the resistance of the coil is great, and this resistance is inserted in series with the system being measured, the additional resistance is apt to reduce the current in the circuit and the measured current would not be the actual current after the removal of the meter. Now, this is actually the case in all instances, but the general construction of a current meter intended for direct insertion into a circuit is such that its insertion will not materially influence the constants of that circuit and the reduction in current by increasing the resistance of the complete circuit is entirely negligible.

The resistance of the meter cannot be avoided, because no matter how low the resistance of the coil within the meter, there is at all times that much additional resistance in the complete circuit. However, the drop across this resistance is usually very small and entirely negligible. As a matter of fact, current meters are generally of very low resistance; the higher the range of the instrument, the lower is its internal resistance.

Returning to the basic structure of this meter, we note that the movement of the pivoted bar depends upon the forces evoked by the magnetizing current flowing through the coil. In order that the greatest action take place for the minimum amount of current, the resistance of this coil must be low. At the same time, we must always have a certain amount of current through the coil in order that the proper separation be created between the two bars because operation is dependent entirely upon the current through the coil for the magnetizing force.

Since deflection of the meter needle is caused by the forces evoked when current flows through the coil, this same meter may be employed to measure voltage. If we assume that the coil surrounding the moving and stationary elements has a resistance of 20 ohms and the current necessary to give full scale deflection is 10 milliamperes or .01 ampere, a voltage drop equal to .01 × 20 takes place across the meter coil. In other words a voltage drop of .2 volts takes place across the meter coil. If we illustrate the internal resistance of this meter is a resistance R in figure 85 and we apply a voltage E of .2 volt a current of .01 ampere will flow in the circuit and the meter will function as a current meter indicating full scale and as a voltmeter indicating a voltage of .2 volt.

If we so desire we can measure 100 volts with this meter. However, we note that the full scale deflection exists for a voltage of .2 volts and a current flow of .01 ampere. We cannot connect this meter as it is across a 100 volt line because the current flow through the meter would be 5 amperes, far in excess of that required for full scale de-flection, which means that the meter would deflect off the scale and furthermore the meter would be ruined beyond repair because of the very high current. But if we arrange a means whereby the current flowing through the meter is limited to .01 ampere maximum and this value of current represents 100 volts, the full scale deflection upon the meter can be interpreted as being the equivalent of 100 volts.

The Lowdown on the Architect

procedure may be had from reputable architects or from The American Institute of Architects, The Octagon, Washington.

Dismiss from your mind the thought that entrance into an architect's office inevitably means that you are committing yourself to the spending of a lot of money. A certain architect in one of the large cities is retained on an annual fixed fee just to keep his client from foolish spending. The client is a big department store. Its directors call in this architect and tell him they are thinking of buying another half block to extend their store. His reply, after a study of the problem, is that they should do nothing of the kind; an alteration here, a readjustment of departments there, the addition of a floor or two on the present building, with better elevator service, will achieve the expansion required at one-tenth the cost. Like the Chinese doctors, such men are employed primarily to keep the patient well, and only secondarily to heal him when he is ill. Your architect is a professional adviser first, and a means to achieve your building afterwards, when, as, and if that becomes advisable.

There are those who hesitate to employ an architect because of an uncertainty as to whether the particular man selected will be able to satisfy them with a design. Apparently these people do not know that an architect may be retained and dismissed at any point of the proceedings. It is not necessary that one who cannot satisfy the client with his design be retained to the bitter end. If, after having the architect of your choice make preliminary sketches in accordance with his understanding of your needs, the results are not to your satisfaction, and repeated trials fail to make them so, you are at perfect liberty to terminate the connection, pay him for the work that has been done, and engage another man.

Some Things the Architect Does

In additio nto his work of diagnosing your needs and having this diagnosis translated into building materials and construction, the architect is your professional adviser in such matters as the following: The drawing up of proper contracts; the taking out of necessary permits; the proper time and amounts of payments to contractors; the covering of the work by insurance while under construction, not only against fire but against personal liability for accidents to workmen or to passers-by; the provision for connection with public utilities, such as electrical current, gas, sewer; the proper guarantees from contractors as to durability, tightness against weather; the innumerable questions as to which sub-contractor's province covers certain work; as to who pays for water, heat and light used during the contruction of the building; the placing of responsibility for protecting adjoining buildings. It is easy to see how, without the architect's aid in such unfamiliar matters as these, it would be inevitable that the layman should find himself involved in a veritable morass of technical and legal entanglements. The fee that one pays an architect to conduct him through this maze of technical procedure becomes an insignificant sum for the peace of mind it provides.

Roughly speaking, the function of the architect is twofold. Through his own abilities as a diagnostician and through conferences with his client, he establishes in general terms the size, arrangement and character of the building. This may, and usually does, take considerable time and progressive checking back and forth with preliminary sketches, but at this stage of the proceedings the dealing is between architect and client. One great difficulty here is the inability of most laymen to visualize what the preliminary sketches indicate. Drawings remain Greek to the client, just as does the tailor's crude patterns. It is hard indeed to picture the finished result to which they are leading. It is of the utmost importance, however, that the client should realize their general significance, the sizes of rooms contemplated, the matters of communication and inter-relationships involved. Comparison of the tentative rooms with existing rooms—rooms that can be inspected and measured—frequently helps. Careful study of early drawings is the client's duty and responsibility.

Where the Client Cannot Help

This achieved, the architect's second function comes into play. His work henceforth consists of refining and improving the general scheme and in having it executed. In this phase of his work the client cannot be of much help, but he can too easily be a real hindrance to the efficient and economical progress of the work. It is the wise client who, having really satisfied himself that he understands what he is to get—or, having enough faith in the architect of his choice to believe that the latter understands his needs and desires—goes abroad or elsewhere while the highly complex process of building is in progress.

How Architects Are Paid

The client who insists upon seeing every nail driven, and who presumes to tell the plumber, electrician and mason how to ply their respective trades, is no more likely to improve the desired result than he who attempts to tell the pharmacist a better way to make up the doctor's prescription.

Architects, like those rendering any other professional service, are paid for their work. There are all sorts of arrangements under which the fee is established and paid. In some cases it is a fixed sum, in others, a sum established as a certain percentage of the building's cost. The latter method is most common, having become so established by long custom. It is not an ideal arrangement by any means, since it permits the suspicion that the architect may increase his own fee in the degree to which he persuades his client to spend money on the building. On the other hand, it has a fairly sound basis for existence in the fact that generally the greater the cost of the building, the greater amount of work he has to do.

Architects' fees on the percentage basis vary in accordance with the type of building. A monument, for example, or some special furniture might not cost very much for the structure in proportion to the great amount of work devolving upon the architect. The small house also entails an amount of work on the architect's part that is at least as much as, and sometimes more than, required for a house of larger size and greater cost. Alteration work, also, involves more work on the architect's part, partly because he has to measure up everything that has been done.

An Explanation of His Duties

The architectural fee, therefore, is entirely a matter for agreement in advance between you and your architect. The establishment of an understanding as to its details in advance will prevent the possibility of misunderstandings and uncertainties.

The American Institute of Architects, which is a national organization working for the highest ideals and the highest standards of practice in the profession, is fairly specific in the matter of what should constitute a minimum fee. It says:

"1. The architect's professional services consist of the necessary conferences, the preparation of preliminary studies, working drawings, specifications, large-scale and full-size detail drawings: the drafting of forms of proposals and contracts; the issuance of certificates of payment; the keeping of accounts, the general administration of the business and supervision of the work, for which, except as hereinafter mentioned, a proper minimum charge, based upon the total cost of the work complete, is six per cent.

"2. On residential work, alterations to existing buildings, monuments, furniture, decorative and cabinet work, and landscape architecture, it is proper to make a higher charge than above indicated.

"3. The architect is entitled to compensation for articles purchased under his direction, even though not designed by him.

"4. Where the architect is not otherwise retained, consultation fees for professional advice are to be paid in proportion to the importance of the question involved and services rendered.

"5. The architect is to be reimbursed the costs of transportation and living incurred by him and his assistants while traveling in discharge of duties connected with the work."

It is also customary when an operation is carried forward under a number of separate contracts, rather than under one general contract, to charge a fee that is roughly half again the basic fee.

In this age of great specialization and extreme complexity of modern buildings, it is customary on large work to engage supplementary professional advice from heating, ventilating, mechanical, structural, electrical and sanitary engineers, and the fees for these consultants are not included in the architect's own fee.

Payments to the architect are due as his work progresses in the following order: Upon the completion of the preliminary studies, one-fifth of the entire fee; upon completion of specifications and general working drawings (exclusive of details), two-fifths additional, the remainder being due from time to time in proportion to the amount of service rendered. Until an actual estimate is received, charges are based upon the proposed cost of the work and payments received are on account of the entire fee.

In case of the abandonment or suspension of the work, the basis of settlement is usually as follows: For preliminary studies, a fee in accordance with the character and magnitude of the work; for preliminary studies, specifications and general working drawings (exclusive of details), three-fifths of the fee for complete services.

Keen Observer To Gauge Sound

By DR. N. M. LA PORTE

Director, Publix department of scientific research, sound and projection

IN sound picture projection it is of the utmost importance to maintain the proper sound level in the auditorium. By far the greatest criticism made of sound pictures is that directed against the excessive volume too commonly found in theatres today. While this condition exists we must admit that there is some justification in the use of such derogatory terms as "Squawkies" and such descriptive words as bellowing, harsh, blasting and shrieking. In reproducing synchronized sound and scene we are primarily concerned with realism, and realism has hardly been attained, if such terms apply.

Extreme care must be used in the selection of the observer who is to control the sound level in the auditorium by signaling changes in volume to the projectionists. The first requisite for such an observer is good hearing. Good hearing for this job, however, means more than is commonly accepted as satisfactory hearing for ordinary purposes. The observer should be able to hear all the frequencies that the system will reproduce.

To determine whether he can, it may be advisable for him to make a trip to the nearest division office of the Electrical Research Products, Inc., and have his hearing checked by an audiometer test. There are other qualities to consider outside of hearing when selecting this observer. The man should be a showman, ear-minded rather than eye-minded, and should be appreciative of music. If the observer is selected with these considerations in mind a great deal of the cause for criticism of sound pictures will be eliminated.

It is helpful to think of the sound leaving the horns as a fixed amount of power that must in some way be absorbed. This energy must be finally dissipated by setting in motion the particles making up the contents of the auditorium including the drapes, walls, carpets, seats, audience and so on. This fixed amount of power is doubled every time the fader setting is increased one step. This means that twice as much power pounding on the ear drums of the audience. Of course, as the audience increases, the absorptive power of the auditorium increases, but before you step the fader up just pause and recollect that you are doubling your power for every step.

At some time in the not too distant future we hope that all sound films will be recorded in such a manner that the need for volume control in the house will be greatly reduced. Production methods will be such that all the desired effects of loudness and softness will be recorded under studio direction and few changes will be necessary in the fader setting.

A few points for the present, however, must be borne in mind by the observer. Use conversational volume for ordinary conversational shots and greater volume for close-ups, shouting, screaming or desired loud effects. Orchestras in general should be loud to more nearly simulate actual conditions, while solos are for the same reasons generally reproduced softly. These settings of the fader will of course be predetermined at the rehearsal.

With the present almost universal advent of sound equipment to theatres, superiority of showmanship is now evidenced by higher quality of sound in one house than in another. Note the quality of sound in your house and, above all, keep it from being reproduced so loudly that the naturalness is destroyed.

THE AMERICAN PUBLIC HAS SPENT MORE MONEY THIS YEAR FOR AMUSEMENT THAN EVER BEFORE

If it's a contest in your locality as to how this amusement fund is being divided — there is only one ultimate answer—

"He who serves best profits most"
To serve best you NEED the TRANSVERTER

It is essential to good Projection. It improves projection as it reduces expense in current, in repairs, in the Projectionist's work.

Budgeting Ads Is Goldberg's Advice

By HARRY GOLDBURG

Western New York District Manager, Fax Theatres

Buffalo—An advertising budget.

What does this mean to you? To me, if I were operating a theatre, it would mean that I was being vested with the faith and confidence of my company. It would mean that I was entrusted with a certain sum of money to spend as I would see fit. It would mean that I would realize more than ever before the responsibility that I had. I would analyze every cent of the budget money that I would spend, and would not let one red penny go until I satisfied myself that it would bring results to the box office.

The budget system opens a new field of opportunity to you men in the field. Now, more than ever before, the success of your theatre depends upon you.

Newspaper advertising throughout the division has fallen into a rut. It is plain to see that not enough thought is being given to this important medium.

First of all, are we keeping in pace with the times? Take a look at automobile advertising. Haven't you noticed the improvements in it in the past year or so?

But the auto industry hasn't taken the rapid strides that our industry has in production. No developments have been made on cars that compare with the advent of pictures that talk, the improvements in color and the many other forward steps our industry has just taken.

The fact remains that we're not keeping in pace with this in our advertising.

Just because a mat service comes to you on every picture is no reason why you have to use those ideas exclusively. Use your own, too. Your new budget will permit it.

Wrong Acoustics in Most Houses

By VESPER A. SCHLENKER
Acoustical Engineer, Vitaphone Corp.

Few theatres constructed before the sound era are free from acoustical defects. No two houses have the same defects, even though they may have the same cubical content. Consequently, every theatre needs to be individually diagnosed to correctly determine the faults and decide upon the proper treatment.

This lack of proper diagnosis is the greatest obstacle to perfected talking pictures and to this end we have designed a special truck, which is really a laboratory on wheels. This travelling laboratory holds portable testing equipment with the necessary accessories to apply to any theatre.

The truck has been put into intensive service with tests and diagnosis resulting in successful cures for many theatres.

Using Short for Test

One of the many experiments used is the reproduction over the theatre horn is of a speech by H. M. Warner, notable for its clear enunciation. The speech is photographed as it comes out of the horn and simultaneously photographed at scattered spots in the theatre by means of microphones. The horn photograph is later used as a basis for comparison to determine how the quality of reception varies in the different locations.

Another trial is the reverberation test in which single tones are projected and suddenly interrupted electrically. During the short time in which the sound dies away it is photographed, the rapidity of its dying furnishing the measure of reverberation.

A third experiment is even more delicate. A single syllable is projected so that its path can be followed completely around the theatre and photographed through every reflection. This syllable serves as a basic test, for when one sound receives the proper acoustical reception, all others and all combinations of sounds will be similarly received.

Brighter Outlook Forecasts

With the results of initial tests on hand we foresee a brilliant future for the development of new methods for the correction of theatre acoustics. It is our belief that in all cases a proper diagnosis will lead to perfected sound and save money by using the right materials in the minimum amount, holding out hope for the many exhibitors facing a loss of patronage due to interior reproduction.

32. Making donations without authority from home office.

33. Locally purchasing supplies in improper manner. This should be done by requisition, giving local vendor's name. Instructions should be asked for if not clear.

34. Wasteful lithographing; not checking available locations before ordering paper; not checking after posting to see if proper showing has been given.

35. Managers smoking in foyers and lobbies, where patrons are not permitted to do the same thing.

36. Skylarking in theatre by ushers and other employees.

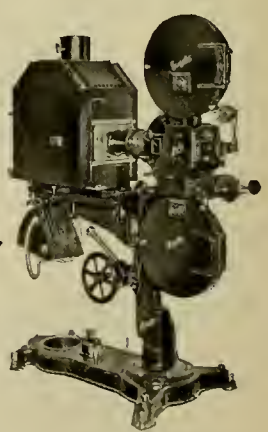
THE FINSBURY PARK ASTORIA is the fourth Theatre to be opened in the chain originally visualized by the Directorate two years ago. The Theatres already opened include the Brixton Astoria (August, 1929); the Old Kent Road Astoria (February, 1930); and the Streatham Astoria (June, 1930). To open four Theatres of the magnitude of the Astorias in just over twelve months is a record of which the Directorate are justifiably proud, while the success of the Theatres already opened is confirmation that the policy originally laid down and carried out was a wise one.



The policy of the Directorate is to provide:—

(1) Theatres of Unequalled Size and Magnificence in suburban areas.
(2) Entertainment unexcelled by even West End of London Houses.
(3) Music by picked Orchestras and Grand Organs.
(4) Comfort, Courtesy, and Service.
(5) Strictly suburban prices.

THE ASTORIAS have been acknowledged by the Press of this country—and America—to be real super Theatres presenting super Entertainment in Pictures, Vaudeville, Stage Production, and Music, and the ideals which have proved so successful and acceptable will be continued.

The Directorate and Management are sincere in their endeavours to raise the standard of Entertainment and Entertaining, and the maintenance of their declared policy is accepted as a duty to the public they serve.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

THE HIGH COST OF NEGLECT!

WHEN some member of your staff calls your attention to needed repairs around the theatre do you investigate and make those repairs immediately?

From close observation we are rather afraid that many managers are inclined to let these "little" things go until it is too late for repairs and replacements (sometimes very expensive) are necessary. And often such neglect results in accidents or breakdowns.

Those who stop to analyze the many responsibilities of a house manager soon learn that maintenance of the equipment represents an important part of the job. Yet we have thousands of showmen who cannot seem to realize that the cheapest way to maintain that equipment is to keep it in a good state of repair at all time. They try to avoid immediate expenditures and then pay plenty for replacements later.

A manager who is placed in charge of a theatre with its many items of equipment must show that he understands and appreciates the responsibility placed on his shoulders by keeping a careful check on each and every detail. This can only be accomplished by frequent inspections.

We doubt whether any chain or individual theatre owner would criticize an expenditure for repairing some necessary part of the theatre's equipment. Those who used to take such an attitude soon learned, that it was a pennywise and pound foolish policy. Therefore every theatre owner is now in favor of keeping the house in tip-top shape at all times and glad to pay for minor repairs rather than for expensive new equipment. They need not worry about accidents, breakdowns of shows and dissatisfied patrons.

Why not inaugurate a new system of house inspection check-up starting this week? Make up a series of charts according to the various members of your staff who are responsible for certain parts of the theatre. Let them handle their own portions in a systematic way and then you take that chart and go over the entire house, starting with the roofs, hanging ceiling, booth, seats, floor and floor coverings, rest rooms, toilets, mezzanine, orchestra, lobbies, foyer, front, marquee and marquee roof, closets, ushers' rooms, porter closets, sinks, cellars, boiler rooms, heating equipment, ventilating equipment, stage, stage gridiron, etc., etc., right down the line not overlooking a single detail.

You'll soon learn a lot more about your theatre than you ever knew before, and you'll be able to check waste and make necessary repairs while they are still small items.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Vending Machines Are Discussed by Some Live Showmen

Of all the subjects pertaining to theatre operation and its many modern twists the subject of vending machines has created the most peculiar kind of reaction.

For example, Harold Kopplin of the Capitol Theatre in Miami, Fla., insists that the first and last purpose of a theatre is to sell entertainment and not candy or chocolate bars or even cigarettes, cigars.

He backs up this statement with some mighty plausible arguments.

The selling of candies, etc., from vending machines in theatres or even from a candy confection counter located within the theatre or in the lobby or foyers will tend to clutter up the corners or the aisles and in fact every other part of the theatre which they strive to keep looking inviting and clean with all sorts of wrappers and papers and not infrequently a stray piece of chocolate which is ground into the carpet or the marble work or causes some other patron to register a healthy kick because they are walking around with a nice sticky chocolate bar all over their shoes.

He tells us many other interesting arguments against the vending machine angle and incidentally his claim that the patron is apt to develop a notion that the theatre is trying to get every dime out of them is not without good common horse sense.

Then we have the expression of B. L. Kearney of the Palace Theatre in Ashtabula, who insists that a nearby confectionery store answers the purpose of the patron when they so desire to take some candy into the theatre and it certainly is not the part or duty of a theatre to enter into this line of business in direct competition with one of the merchants whom they may some day want to tie up with on some promotion scheme.

Backing up Kopplin's opinion, we quote A. E. Warden of the Cortland Theatre in Cortland, N. Y., who says: "Personally, I feel that we are selling entertainment and not candies, chewing gum or what have you." Vending machines placed on the backs of the seats at a local theatre in his town were removed as the revenue was too small. However, he does concede that in some houses they might prove a good bet.

We could then jump into Eddie Landsborough's Capitol Theatre up in Gault, Ontario, Canada, wherein he puts himself on record by saying that he has had no experience whatsoever with any type of vending machine, but considers that it might turn out to be a good proposition. Since it is out of his jurisdiction he is leaving the decision whenever that may come up for action to his home office.

E. T. Mathes, in charge of the Mt. Baker, American and Avalon theatres in Bellingham, Wash., expresses the opinion of a great many other showmen in the Northwest when he says that they do not use any such machines in any of their theatres. He also is inclined to feel that it would be entering into competition with nearby confectionery or cigarette stores and would not help in the promotion of good-will or co-operation from such merchants.

Fred E. Johnson, an old standby of the Club, has the following to say on the same subject:

"Regarding the use of candy, cigarettes, gum and vending machines in the theatre, I cannot see this at all as they litter up your house and the kiddies have gum stuck everywhere. We allow smoking in our balcony or mezzanine foyer and rest rooms, but in a beautiful theatre like the Latonia, gum, etc., are out of place. Of course, they do it, but to have gum stuck on carpets, chairs, etc., is something I rebel at."

We are inclined to give a lot of serious thought to such expressions, especially coming from some of the boys we are quoting here and, when we stop to realize that these men have seen many a year of service in show business, they are certainly qualified to pass an opinion.

We are respecting the confidence of quite a few other showmen who express themselves and at whose theatres vending machines are apparently as important as the projection booth equipment because the circuit has decided to go into that line of business, but other than to tell you briefly that they are dead against this angle we will say nothing further about where or who they represent.

ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL!

OUR slogan takes on a new meaning once more with this issue in the Showman section in Motion Picture News.

WE'VE described how your brother managers have successfully executed all sorts of exploitation, ballyhoo and publicity stunts; and what's more important, you have contributed to those items yourself and helped make the Club pages tremendously valuable and interesting.

NOW once each month, the Club pages are being incorporated into The Showman section and particular emphasis and prominence will be given material pertaining to the proper maintenance of equipment in your theatre.

YOU MUST DO YOUR PART, TOO

THIS important phase of showmanship and theatre management has been sadly neglected in the past. Managers are faced with all sorts of new equipment problems while still struggling along with the problems of the old. They want to know more about the expensive apparatus they are responsible for.

SO the Managers' Round Table Club again establishes a distinct precedent and incorporates this vital feature as part of our Club activities and pages.

WE have got to have material for this monthly section. Just as you now send us the details of your various show-selling activities, so you must tell us how you are keeping your theatre's equipment in perfect condition all the time. How you prevent breakdowns and trouble by constantly watching every piece of equipment and furnishing in the house. How you promote cooperative goodwill between yourself and the booth, the ushers, the cleaners, etc., etc.

TELL US HOW YOU DO IT

THESE are all important factors in the proper maintenance and operation of your theatre. To broadcast how effectively and efficiently you handle this part of your job, is to let the whole world know that you are a capable manager, and besides, it will be immensely valuable and helpful to your brother members and showmen the world over.

"Sound Interference" Important Problem Says R. Mason Hall

A lot of folks in the show business who are anxious for a good ventilating system do a lot of crying until they finally get the boss or proprietor to install one; then, after they get it, they don't seem to know how to handle it to the best possible advantage with particular emphasis on "interference with the sound."

In this respect we must take off our hats to R. Mason Hall, manager of the Lyric Theatre in Norton, Va.

We feel qualified to say that, after visiting several hundred theatres on our recent coast-to-coast tour, not a few of them had plenty of interference with their sound apparatus from noisy or wind-sucking ventilating equipment.

Mr. Hall covers this phase of two important conditions in the following manner and we will quote from his letter: "I always sit through the first matinee showing and note the scenes and time that I can run the same with the least interference. I run it between shows and during the comedy, provided same is a musical one, and so, by looking after this particular phase of the business personally, I have so far had but few complaints, and those during the matinee, as the evenings here are always comfortable, but opening all windows and exits."

We can appreciate the question raised by Mr. Hall's letter when we say that only a short time ago we were looking at a feature in a Long Island theatre where the sound, the projection and the entire theatre, with the exception of the ventilation was 100%. When we say with the exception of the ventilation we do not mean the efficiency of the equipment, because that was not lacking, but rather the noise of a moaning sound created by an exhaust fan running at top speed and drawing the air through the opening in the ceiling.

It is deplorable that such a condition must exist, and upon questioning the manager we were told that he fully realized the handicap he was placing on his sound apparatus by operating the ventilating fan, but it was a one-speed proposition and to turn it off would create an atmosphere in the theatre that on warm days would be almost unbearable.

He had appealed, up to this time, without success to his superiors to make the slight alteration which would permit the operation of the fan at various speeds, in which case he could then cut down the speed of the motor and thereby cut down a great deal, if not all of the noise without impairing the ventilating of his theatre.

We hope that this frank opinion from Mr. Hall will prove beneficial to many other managers all over the country who are experiencing the same difficulty and will call to mind in many houses where they have a variable speed control that it ought to be put to use for just such a purpose.

We are very grateful to Mr. Hall and we know that in the near future we will be able to present some other views of his on the efficient operation of his equipment and theatre. These are the kind of items that we are particularly anxious to feature in the special Showman Editions of the Club pages.

Ben Cohen Supplied Dealers With Mats For Newspaper Ads

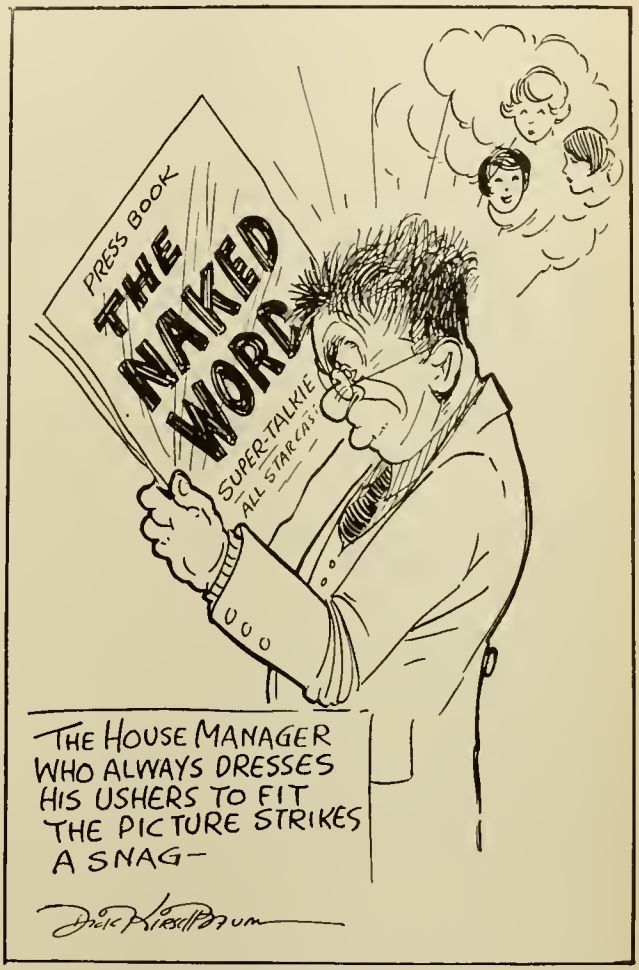
Ben Cohen of the Capitol Theatre, Hazelton, Pa., effected a tie-up with a radio dealer that netted a wide range of publicity for "Follow Thru."



Cohen supplied ad mats on "Follow Thru" for use in the dealer's newspaper ad. Copy in this ad read, "You can FOLLOW THRU the World Series and all other big events if you choose a Philco, etc."

The dealer also sent out 1,000 "Follow Thru" heralds with their ad on the back page—to all people on his mailing list. Six deluxe photos supplied by the theatre were on display for a week in advance in the Philco dealer's window.

Both local newspapers published a story on the picture which resolved itself into a contest on golf technical terms. There was nothing very difficult about it and it was primarily used to stir up interest in the picture which it did accomplish as was evidenced by the number of contestants sending in their answers.

Stage Sketch Prior To Trailer Helped Sell Coming Picture

T. W. Thompson enhanced the selling value of his trailer on "Raffles" by putting on a sketch just prior to the showing of the trailer. This stunt was used at the Avalon Theatre, Grand Junction, Col.

A safe was set on the left side of the stage right next to the proscenium. After the subject in the News just before the trailer, the screen goes dark and the beam of a flashlight appears at right stage. The faint form of a man is seen behind the flash as he moves across the stage—sweeps the house with a flashlight until finally it rests on the safe. He moves swiftly toward it and bending down, starts to work the combination.

At this moment, the Assistant Manager comes walking down the aisle to inquire what the man on the stage is doing. And then follows a conversation between these two men with the Assistant Manager stating upon learning the identity of the stranger that he (RAFFLES) isn't due until next Friday—so Raffles leaves the stage and states he'll be back Friday.

TOILET CLEANLINESS!

If there is any part of your theatre demanding close attention it is your toilets. Yet, you can walk into hundreds of theatres and find these rooms foul-smelling and an insult to your patrons.

Particularly on those days when the kiddies predominate, you must exercise extreme caution and make frequent trips to those rooms to make sure that they are fit for the use of your patrons.

Toilets, especially in the busy theatres, cannot wait until the following day for a mopping or cleaning. This is necessary every hour or two and be positive that the toilet paper holders are full too. In ladies rooms you should make doubly sure that everything is O.K. because nothing will chase away the ladies quicker than dirty lounge rooms and toilets.

There is nothing delicate about this subject. It's as important as any phase of your theatre's operation, so just check up a lot more in the future than you have in the past to be certain that your hired help is not overlooking or neglecting the toilets.

Mrs. Tommy Kane of Redwood - Sequoia Gives Her Suggestions

Just to be different I am handing you herewith an article by Mrs. Thomas J. Kane. So here goes:

Let us start at the ticket window. First impressions are lasting. Have a cashier and doorman who can smile and say "Thank You." Also a gracious voice and manner to answer telephone inquiries.

Personal touch means much, especially in a small town. The manager should be on the floor to greet his patrons from time to time during the evening and especially at the break of the show.

Ushers should be trained to treat customers with courtesy and not as if they were doing them a favor. Ushers should be in uniforms and uniforms should be well cleaned and pressed. It makes such a difference.

Noise is another serious problem. Don't let one or two wise guys make it uncomfortable for all your patrons by razzing heavy love scenes, etc. Crying babies are also a matter to be given immediate attention. The parent should be asked nicely to take the child out if they do not do so themselves.

Smoking should be confined to sections set aside for that purpose. Even in this day of much smoke there are still a few people wo do not care for it.

In case of complaint from patron, say, "I'll see that the matter is given attention." The patrons are always right. (Even if you know them to be cranks.) Even then make them think they are right. Be a good "yes" man. The dear public likes it.

"Believe it or not."

Heat is another angle which requires much attention. In winter be sure your house is warm and as cool as possible in the summer. Use ventilators intelligently. Have handy in all parts of the house fire extinguishers. They may only be needed once in a lifetime, but that once may be the means of saving life and property. A first aid kit should be on hand for comfort of patrons and employees.

Rest rooms are of paramount importance. There is nothing so disagreeable as toilets and washrooms that are not immaculate. See that all toilets are in working order. Above all else keep up minor repairs. These are only little things but after all it is the little things that count. Janitors and maintenance men are a very important part in running a house, although never seen by the people. Try to create in all employees a personal pride in his particclar post in the theatre.

Another pleasing thing is having nice fresh flowers in a prominent place as you enter. But be sure they are fresh.

This of course does not touch on pictures, projection and a number of other important things it takes to run an ideal house.

The Meyers, Senior And Junior, Certainly Know Show Game

Meet two of Milwaukee's showmen. One has already made a name for himself that means a lot in the theatrical history of the city. The other is well on the way to duplicating the record held by his father; for the gentleman at the top of this story is Fred S. Meyer, general manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. The young man at the bottom of this story, appearing in the football uniform, is Stanley Meyer, Fred's sixteen-year-old son.

Let's see what the boy has done so far in show business in Milwaukee. Several years ago he started as an usher in the local houses, working after school and on his days off. It wasn't long after he graduated from high school that he was promoted to the position of assistant manager at the Venetian Theatre, in Milwaukee, for the Warner outfit. He has held the job down very capably, and rates 100% with the circuit. He is six feet tall, weighs 175 pounds, and attends school at Marquette University. Last year he was selected as a candidate for the all-suburban football team, a local selection of great importance in the city. He bids fair to rival his dad's record should he desire to continue in the show game. We do not know anything about what he is going to do in the future—when Fred was in our office some time ago we never thought to ask him—but the pep he has shown should guarantee him a place in the show game any day in the week.

And now for Fred. He's been in the movies pretty near since the movies started, and as a result, there's little he doesn't know about the show game. He has been in every branch of it. The work he turns out in Milwaukee is great stuff, and with the added advantage of many years of sagacious showmanship behind it, it always clicks. Fred is going to pass along some of his future work to us, and we are sure that it will more than be welcomed by the rest of the showmen in the Managers' Round Table Club. We want to welcome the two Meyers into our organization and we believe they will prove very active.

And just to give you a line on Fred's ability towards newspaper lay-out, we are shawing a group of ads that he used when he played "All Quiet." The spectacular feature of the advertising was the fact that all of the ads carried testimoniols from civic personalities, thus insuring their being read and subsequent word-of-mouth talk following.

Harry D. Stearn Discusses Theatre Operation Angles

As is undoubtedly known by all people in business, regardless of type, a certain atmosphere must be created in order to establish a permanent and select patronage. With this aim in view, a trained staff must be maintained. Since the cashier is the first to greet the patrons, she must be congenial and pleasant at all times, regardless of what trying situations may arise. To further the effect of welcome, the doorman accepts each ticket with a cordial good evening and thank you. The ushers, who have been selected as to uniformity in size, stand at attention, always ready to direct the patrons to their preferred seats.

The people are very much impressed upon entering our lobby by the restful atmosphere obtained by soft lights, fresh flowers and plants. The barren effect of our rather large lobby is relieved by a frame with artistic posters of coming attractions displayed therein. The beauty is further enhanced by mirrors and soft draperies.

Our mezzanine floor is luxuriously appointed with upholstered lounges and easy chairs, charming lamps, oil paintings, and vases of freshly cut flowers dispersed at random. Again soft lights prevail.

The restrooms are neatly outfitted with several easy chairs, carpet and panelled walls of a harmonious shade, dressing table, and large gilded mirror.

A state of cleanliness is habitual throughout the theatre. We maintain a very capable staff of cleaners, who see that the house is well disinfected and aired daily, giving it a most thorough cleaning and airing over Saturday night and Sunday. The theatre is sprayed daily with a delightful perfume, the odor of which lingers faintly and fragrantly throughout the day.

The lighting effects inside the auditorium must not interefere with the photography. To this end, we use very bright lights in the rear of the theatre, then graduate to soft reds and blues, and finally to a quiet midnight blue near the stage. To relieve the monotony, we vary our color scheme occasionally, both in the auditorium, lobby, mezzanine floor, and also marquee and upright sign.

Our sound is watched at all times by someone on the floor. Due to some of the audience complaining about sound, we maintain ours at a moderate rate. As the house fills, we bring our fader up, and thus have the sound as perfect as possible at all times.

Our effects in producing and maintaining these comforts for our patrons are well repaid, as is evident in our ever increasing patronage since the advent of all these little niceties.

HARRY D. STEARN, Reading, Pa.

J. G. Hruby Crashed Dealers' Windows For Initial Tie - Up

It was a hard job but J. G. Hruby, manager of the local Publix house in Harvey, Ill., refused to be discouraged, and finally through his persistence managed to crash the windows of the local merchants for an advantageous tie-up on "The Social Lion."

He arranged with a store which caters to high school and college students, and propositioned them to put in a window display of felt hats, using several still illustrations that Hruby had among his advertising accessories for "The Social Lion." After much persuasion, the tie-up was made and a window display was made up to include photographs of Oakie, tie-up copy, cards, etc., about "The Social Lion," giving theatre name and play dates.

Hruby reports that the use of stills in this manner enabled him to break the resistance the merchants have shown to window displays, and reports that he is giving no little attention to furthering such tie-ups which for the very small amount of money involved gets ample attention from a great number of people.

A number of showmen have encountered similar situations but we know that just by shedding some light on the subject and showing the merchants the value of co-operation, they have, in the end, won out. Thanks, Hruby, for calling this one to our attention.

SILENCE—IS GOLDEN!

In this era of sound and talking screens no manager can afford to relax his vigilance on the floor of his theatre. If the patron is to enjoy the performance, silence must reign supreme at all times and the fader must be watched like a hawk.

Making up a batting average for 14 theatres visited within the last ten days would reveal that three of them were 100% on sound and silence. The balance seemed to be providing plenty of competition with numerous and sundry noises, contributed in many instances by the theatre employes themselves.

How the management of a theatre can expect the customers to be quiet when the theatre employees are raising a racket is a mystery still to be explained. But apparently such is the case.

The second great evil is the volume of sound which when not perfect always seems to be much too high. This is caused most of time by differences in the size of the audience. We are told, from reliable parties, that the larger the audience, the higher the fader must go due to absorption. Therefore, if this is correct, when the patrons start thinning out the fader must be cut down in proportion. Then again we have pictures where one character's voice records in deep, heavy tones. The opposite end of a conversation on the screen where such a condition prevails may be one whose voice records rather thin. Therefore you must arrive at a happy medium in adjusting the fader control.

Whether silent or sound no theatre should be left without anyone on the floor at all times, and with close attention necessary for sound volume it becomes a matter of vital importance.

These little pointers are meant just as suggestions. Maybe your house is being better handled than some of those 14 we visited, and then again, maybe you are taking your staff too much for granted. Better watch these things all the time and make sure that everything is as it should be.

250 Gas Stations Sold "Good News" To Autoists In Stunt

It meant good news at his box-office when Charles E. Couche, manager of United Artists Theatre, Portland, Oregon, set out to sell his show "Good News" recently.

He arranged a tie-up with the territorial distributor of gasoline and the company permitted him to place one sheet on 250 of the stations selling the gas. Since lithograph crayons were used to design the poster sketch, an opportunity presented itself for a tie-up with a local dealer in artist materials. And, oh yes, 5,000 heralds were distributed by the employees of the gas station.

A contest "Good News about Portland" was also run, and it did a lot towards putting the picture across. It was planted on the city page of one of the Portland papers. Contestants were invited to set down all the optimistic phases of the city from an industrial standpoint such as building programs, etc. Each day some prominent business man was interviewed for a good news about Portland comment which was used as an incentive for possible entrants.

Here's something that might also go over in your town. Figure it out. You know how local conditions shape up, and can best tell what will and will not click in your part of the country. Thanks, Charles, for letting us see this one. And we hope that you're going to be right out front in the Portland representation on our pages. How about it?

Harold C. Lee Is Always Prepared For Every Emergency

Ten minutes before the first show is out at night two of my ushers take positions at the center exit doors, which would be used the most in case of trouble. One usher takes his place with the doorman in the foyer to avoid crowding when the first show is out. All exit doors are opened before the first show opens at night to see that they are working perfectly.

Once a week the ushers and doorman are drilled in handling the fire extinguishers which are handy in all parts of the house.

The first thing my ushers are told to do in case of trouble is to open the nearest exit door and to prevent crowding. Keep cool is the most important thing that is impressed on them.

The hardware on my exit doors is inspected once a month as well as the fire inspection in all parts of the house, all conditions are reported to the Home Office once a month. On big crowds I make an inspection of the house, back stage and front at least twice during the evening. This keeps you in touch with the boiler room and also the temperature of the house, and sound conditions.

We are fortunate to have three sets of exit doors on each side of the house besides a stage exit.

(Mr. Lee manages the Fox Babcock Theatre in Bath, N. Y.)

Robert Soffer Was Alert To Cash In On His Kiddie Business

Right on time with his stunts, Robert (Bob) Soffer didn't let anything get by him when the schools opened recently and he saw an opportunity to boost the good-will of his house and grab off a flock of publicity for his kiddie business, at the Hollywood Theatre in New York City.

He announced that composition books would be presented free to all kids attending the Saturday matinee on the Saturday prior to the opening of school. Eleven hundred kids were on hand that day and with a seating capacity of 1200 you can see that the gag clicked for Soffer. The books cost him two cents each. The front cover was imprinted with an institutional plug. This medium, doubtless, will keep his house before the eyes of the kids for a number of weeks to come.

Soffer declares that the stunt was worth the slight expenditure as his business jumped up higher than previous Saturdays. He is continually pulling gags of this sort at his house and we know that when he engineers some more he will pass them along to us, so that his fellow members can see how he has built his kid business up from practically nothing. Right, Bob?

Carlson's Slants On Silence During Show May Interest Others

We are running a SILENCE trailer made by Publix. You may have seen it, it shows a young man talking to a girl in a theatre, relating a party of the night before—old man in row ahead has just enough of the conversation, puts a nickel in the slot and a muffler comes up to cover the gabby man's mouth and the old man says "Now that's that. On With The Show."

That is the only medium we use at this time for silence, not having a foyer in the theatre, but I do believe in neat electrical silence signs, the glass type with tubular lamp inside.

As for coverings for aisles and stairs, a very thick carpet with a layer of Ozite as padding should eliminate any noise in the aisles, as for the rest of the auditorium, I hope someone will manufacture a carpet of "Cotton Seed Composition," same as used for greens for Indoor Golf Courses or on that order, which would have a very small absorption quality, because too much absorption will deaden the sound, I believe the entire auditorium should be covered in all theatres, so as to eliminate scraping and thumping of feet when a catch song hit is played, but the matter of too much absorption is a problem that will have to be worked out.

G. W. CARLSON, Manager,
Peoples Theatre, Superior, Wis.

Maintaining Silence An Art With Wight Up In the Northwest

Policing and soliciting for quietness during the performance is diligently avoided in our theatre. Speaking to talkers, foot-stampers, and noise-makers in general, is not only resented by the offenders, but is also disliked by those seated in the immediate vicinity. There are times when the usher or floor manager is compelled to remind people of the disturbance they are creating, especially so with those of high school age, but it is our practice to use this method only as a last resort.

Trailers requesting silence during the performance are at best antagonistic and boresome both to the orderly and the disorderly. Signs about the foyer fall under the same category not to mention cluttering up the theatre.

Our entire campaign for quiet during the performance is based upon two policies; first, the type of program which will hold the audience's interest, and second, the atmosphere of quiet and comfort which we present to them the second they are admitted by the doorman.

The first factor is no small problem with us as we cater to train crews, section hands, round-house employees, and mail clerks, as well as professional people, Pasco being the division point for two large railroads. While we play an occasional dramatic feature for the professional people of our city, our general program consists of ACTION.

The atmosphere of peace and quiet in our theatre is conveyed to our action loving public, our brakemen, locomotive engineers, as well as doctors, teachers, lawyers, and store clerks by means of silently operated equipment. The patron enters the theatre through a quiet swinging door into the softly and attractively furnished foyer, walks along the ozite and deep carpeted floor to the swinging doors at the head of the aisles which allow quiet passage into the aisles as well as serving to eliminate street sounds. Ozite and carpeted aisles to the well-kept and upholstered seats place the patron in his comfortable seat without any unnecessary sound whatsoever. Ushers are instructed to ascertain the incoming patrons' desires before leaving the heads of the aisles, and then to admit them to the aisles with brief and courteous instructions never spoken aloud. Stage curtains are frequently adjusted and oiled to make their operation absolutely silent. The projection room is sound-proof. All fans, motors, boiler fixtures, etc., of the heating and ventilating system are sound-proofed by sand and plasterboard bases. Our heating is done by the dual system. The foyer, rest rooms, and ticket office are heated by fans blowing air through steam radiators. The auditorium is heated by large fans blowing hot air from the heating plant two stories underground. Foul air is drawn out through long distance suction. All this ordinarily unnecessary expensive equipment allows the talking screen sole rights to making all the sound.

Our walls have not been treated for sound, but the shape of our theatre, the upholstered seats, liberal use of drapes, and quiet manner of operation make our theatre what sound technicians call the A-1 sound house in Washington.

MILTON WIGHT.

"Kids — Kids — Kids"

If one were to ask "Where are the kiddies who used to pack our theatres in the days gone by?" Howard F. Brink of Buffalo, would answer with this photograph and the following remark: "Children can be brought back to the theatre with the right kind of pictures and the right kind of managers."

And to that statement we shout at the top of our lungs, "Ditto." Because the falling off in kid business is as much the fault of the manager as the pictures he is handing out on those days when the youngsters might be persuaded to come to the theatre.

This photo shows the auditorium of the Fox Capitol Theatre in Buffalo, N. Y., ably managed by George William (so they tell us) and is the answer to "where are the kiddies." This answer is to the tune of exactly 1,432 kids (if the ticket machine in the b.o. is to be taken as an authority). And what's more, it's but one of the many kid matinees which are regular features of the Capitol and a credit to George's ability as a showman.

How does he do it? That's a fair question. He gives the youngsters a program of pictures that brings them back regularly and in larger numbers week in and week out, thereby proving what we have been preaching about for years; if you give the kiddies the right kind of a show they will not only come to your theatre, they will fight to get in. And this one packed house of children represents hundreds of others who are likewise profiting because they are showmen.

Mr. Brink stressed the importance of the right kind of managers to bring back the kids. He's right. Even with the proper pictures the theatre would be handicapped if the manager was not a real showman and one who understands how to cater to the kids so that in addition to the screen show other interesting novelties, etc., could attract the youngsters. Community singing, laugh gags, pie-eating contests, and a thousand other ideas are all as important as the pictures, but don't forget for one moment that without the proper pictures all the side trimmings would be wasted. No kid is coming just for the gags if he has to sit through Becky McClosky in "She Dies For Her Honor" (that is, if she has some honor to die for).

Think these things over boys, there's plenty to it. But for the lovamike stop yodelling about "where is the kiddie business?" It's waiting outside your door.

Live-Wire Showmen Will Cash In On "Amos 'n' Andy"

There is no denying the fact that a picture like "Amos 'n' Andy" can be made to mean more than any other, so-called, great picture, providing YOU, as the showmen on the firing line, can be made to appreciate the marvelous angles and possibilities offered by this production.

It should not be difficult to recall these days, and they seem so long ago, too, when the arrival of a Chaplin special meant a box-office smash with a momentum that carried on for weeks after. Those specials used to pep up the b. o. just often enough to make show business a pleasure. But in the past few years we have bewailed their absence, and cried, "Give us something to pull us out of a slump." Your prayers were unanswered. Not because there was a great shortage of "good" pictures, but because the type of "good" pictures which were coming through were not sufficiently big enough to create any excitement in your community.

Well, here is a picture, backed by one of the most marvelous exploitation campaigns that has ever been conceived. No "real" showman will deny that here is a picture capable of doing the apparent impossible. It will certainly reap a harvest at the b. o., not only because it presents those two famous radio personalities, but because it is a "great" picture.

Don't misconstrue these remarks. We are not reviewing the picture; we are merely reviewing its possibilities. But get this under your hide and get in it good and deep: IT'S ENTIRELY UP TO YOU.

Stop for a moment and consider how you have been handling those outstanding pictures which you were told would stampede the ticket machine. In regulation routine manner you ran your trailer. On regulation schedule you started your tearer ads, your advance plugs, etc., etc. DON'T do the same thing with "Amos 'n' Andy."

First, make up your mind that you can mop up with this attraction. Second, aside from the reputation of its stars, your patrons must be convinced that this is something so different, so big, so outstanding, that they should be looking for it weeks in advance.

Show-business needed a picture like this. Its appeal to the masses is a foregone conclusion. If four out of five people get pyorrhea, then 999 out of every thousand are regular listeners-in to the evening broadcast of "Amos 'n' Andy." Therefore, they all know about them and have been enjoying their programs for months.

Then again you must take into consideration the tremendous advertising campaign that Radio is putting behind this attraction. Every key city is getting its share of single or double-truck advertising in the largest papers. Regardless of where your theatre is located, the reaction from such advertising must benefit you in many ways. So you can really assume that seats are being sold in advance for you and your theatre. And the result of such activity, plus the appeal of the attraction, takes on the form of a general "back to the theatre" movement, and how theatres need something like this is everybody's business.

We told you a short time ago about the unusual Campaign Press Book for this attraction. Get hold of it well in advance. No doubt it will be augmented by many tried and successful selling campaigns executed since the opening of the picture in some three hundred first-run spots simultaneously. The Club pages will feature such campaigns as fast as the material is received.

But here, we raved altogether too much. Let us add, in conclusion, that to play this picture is to stimulate business to the nth degree. If you are going to run it, and we know that every live showman will want to, enthuse over it so much that everything you do to sell it to your community will radiate that enthusiasm. If you treat it in any sort of matter-of-fact way, you are hurting your business even more than just doing the picture an injustice.

Advance information on the openings in various cities brings to light a few of the ticket-selling angles employed by the live-wire showmen who apparently appreciated the fact that they had a great b.o. bet in the attraction. Here's what going on:

* * * *

Ralph Pekor, exploitation director for the Capitol Theatre in Atlanta, Ga., arranged for a special excursion rate on all trains coming into Atlanta from the surrounding towns to transport the man hundreds of out-of-town Amos 'n' Andy radio fans who were eager to catch a glimpse of them on the Capitol Theatre screen.

Full information in regard to the rates was given out by the local ticket agents of the respective railroads who were granting this special excursion rate.

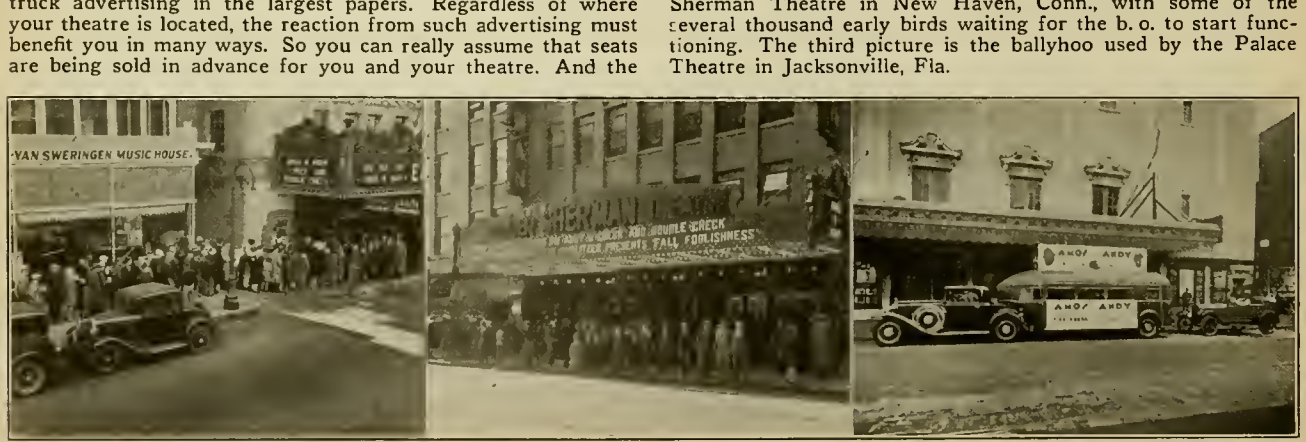
* * * *

Jess Day, manager of the Orpheum Theatre in Des Moines, Iowa., arranged for a special parade through the principal streets of the city of cards decorated after the fashion of the famed "Fresh Air Taxicab" used by Amos 'n' Andy in their picture "Check and Double Check," which was to have a midnight premiere on the date of the parade.

After announcement of this unusual auto parade was made thousands of entrants deluged the office of the Orpheum Theatre to compete for the prizes which ranged from twenty dollars down to a pair of seats in the theatre.



* * * *

Sheo's Century Theatre in Buffalo tied up with The Buffalo Evening News for an Amos 'n' Andy letter contest to determine who could submit the longest list of expressions used by the radio stars. The contest began a week in advance of the showing of the film and thousands of letters were received daily with the close of the contest a few minutes prior to the showing of the film.

THEY'RE OFF—NOW WATCH THEIR SMOKE!

The three photos reproduced below were received just before going to press and will give you some idea of how th first runs started off with this attraction. The photo on the left is from the Emboyd Theatre in Ft. Wayne, Ind., and in the crowd awaiting for admission we want you to note the large number of kids. That's proof positive that this picture has an unusual youngster appeal. The middle photo is the front of the Roger Sherman Theatre in New Haven, Conn., with some of the several thousand early birds waiting for the b. o. to start functioning. The third picture is the ballyhoo used by the Palace Theatre in Jacksonville, Fla.

Here Is A Worthy Cause — Get Behind And Put It Over Big

The American Red Cross will open its fourteenth annual Roll Call on Armistice Day when local chapters all over the country embark upon a nationwide membership campaign which will continue until Thanksgiving. Among the most impressive ways in which the work of the Red Cross will be brought before the public will be through the medium of the new talking motion picture trailer, which will be available for theatres in all parts of the country. The 1930 trailer leads off the scenario to a musical accompaniment of the "Flying Dutchman." Swiftly follows scenes of shipwreck, fire and flood. A voice speaks, "When calamity befalls, the Red Cross is your messenger of mercy, speeding emergency relief and permanent rehabilitation in your name to the stricken community." Next are shown flood refugees in Georgia and Alabama being fed by the Red Cross. Then there is a brief glimpse of wounded veterans with the explanation that to 30,000 ex-service men still suffering from the wounds of war, the Red Cross is still the "greatest mother in the world." A little girl is shown placing a Red Cross service flag in her window. There is a bugle call and the little girl fades into this year's poster of "The Greatest Mother."

Theatres which have not made arrangement to show this trailer may contract for it through their local Red Cross Chapter. The film can be shown without talking where the silent version is desired.

The Red Cross has always received the utmost co-operation from the theatres and motion picture houses and members and readers are urged to make immediate arrangements with their local Red Cross Chapters to co-operate in this year's drive. As stated above, the trailer is available to all theatres. Augment its showing with appropriate lobby displays, using, if possible, several members of the local Red Cross in their uniforms together with the display.

Speedy Selling Of Tickets Facilitates Osborne's Service

In regard to promoting courtesy and speed at the ticket window. I hope that the combination of those things which I have put in practice and the goal at which I have always aimed, will be of help to some other manager. They have been to me.

Speed with courtesy at the box office depends primarily upon the qualifications and experience of the cashier, her training and the mechanical aids with which she is supplied, and the location of the ticket window.

In choosing a permanent cashier several things must be considered. The most important of these is personality. This is a much overworked term, but applied to a ticket seller it resolves itself into the following qualifications.

LOBBY LIGHTING!

Those theatres which are blessed with large, attractive lobbies and foyers ought to make them even more inviting through the use of sensible lighting. It seems somewhat of a shame to walk into a large, beautifully decorated lobby or foyer and find its attractiveness hurt by a lot of bulbs, sometimes of different wattage.

There are so many ways of enhancing the appearance of these entrances that it seems a shame that showmen won't take the time necessary to experiment a little so as to arrive at what should be the most attractive lighting.

Try this angle out, see if it don't create patron comment, and where you create such comment you are making your theatre the reason for word-of-mouth advertising around the community. You all know the value of such advertising.

The ability to present to each individual appearing before the window a smile and a greeting which is real without becoming personal. This can only come from a girl who is thoroughly interested in bringing pleasure to people; who realizes that she is the first contact with the patrons of the theatre and who is truly sold on the idea that her greeting will go far toward determining whether the patrons enjoy the picture or not.

The old adage of "the pleased customer" always holds good in the movie house, as well as elsewhere. The only difference is that many managers leave it entirely to the show to create this good will. A friendly, courteous greeting by each member of the staff tends to place the patrons in a better mood to enjoy the performance for which he or she has paid admission. The ability of the ticket seller to create this impression quickly, without seeming curt, is the difference between an asset or a liability to the theatre.

Another situation which tends to break down the morale of the organization and especially that of the ticket seller is where she permits lengthy conversations between herself and friends. This gets the cashier out of the habit of handling many people quickly and courteously. It also gives a slovenly appearance to the lobby of a theatre.

Nothing makes a poorer impression on the general public than to see someone lounging at the ticket window in conversation with the cashier; in fact, most people will hesitate to break in on such a conversation, and a customer is lost. In many cases a disappointed customer will spread dissatisfaction.

The cashier should, of course, have an even temper, be not easily confused and be able to figure change quickly; have a pleasing telephone voice and at all times be familiar with the time schedule of the current program, the play dates of coming shows, as well as enough of the plot of each to intelligently answer all inquiries.

The second item to be considered in handling people quickly and courteously is the interior arrangement of the ticket booth. The cashier should be supplied with a ticket and change vending machine so placed that they require the minimum amount of effort in making change and delivering the ticket.

This merits a careful study by the manager in each situation. In conjunction with this the position of a telephone and desk or shelf used by the cashier in making out necessary reports should also be taken into consideration. Box offices, as a general rule, are small and care in arrangement will often eliminate needless confusion.

The third item to take into consideration is the placing of the box office so that patrons waiting in line are protected from the weather, and can easily rejoin their friends without confusion. Under this head it is well to consider the placing of guide ropes and rails to facilitate the movement of the buying line in relation to patrons waiting in cases of standout crowds.

(Carl Osborne was the manager of the Lincoln Theatre in Massilon, Ohio.)

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

BOX OFFICE COURTESY!

So long as managers take things for granted, so long will carelessness exist in those parts of the theatre where close supervision is apt to be overlooked, or because you don't look into it enough.

This particularly applies to the box office, the first point of contact with the patron and in many cases the source of information for telephone calls.

If a patron is treated with any sort of discourtesy when they are at the ticket window they will enter the theatre with a chip on their shoulder, which means they will find fault with every little thing. Whereas, let them get the proper kind of treatment and they will probably overlook other things.

It is a bad start for a customer who comes to be entertained and is absolutely uncalled for in any theatre at all. If such a condition does exist the fault is with the manager. He cannot be exercising the proper supervision of his box office frequently enough, if he was, the cashiers would be watching their steps all the time.

In those theatres where the phone calls come into the b.o., with an extension to the manager's office, it would be wise to pick up the phone and listen in once in a while. In this way you can soon learn whether those calls are being answered properly. And do you insist on this: "Good Evening, Palace Theatre," and then the way the feature, etc., is conveyed to the caller.

These little things all tend to make your theatre a desirable place and an asset to the community, but if you don't watch it closely yourself you will be a long time finding out that this important point of patron-contact is not being handled right.

H. Marchand Placed Comic Banners On The Laundry Trucks

As is usual with him when he wants to publicize a picture and add a few different slants, Harry Marchand put on the old thinking cap, and the results was a number of excellent stunts that boosted business at the box-office of the Saenger Theatre in Mobile, Ala., during the run of "Animal Crackers."

One of the stunts that received a lot of publicity was eight laundry trucks carrying comical reading signs on either side—playing up the picture, theatre and play dates. In part, copy on these signs read: "If you bust your button laughing at the 4 Marx Bros. in ANIMAL CRACKERS, etc., we will sew them on free—Another of our economy services."

Inasmuch as the laundry trucks traveled all over the city and neighboring towns, the signs made mighty fine publicity for the picture.

A dummy flagpole sitter was perched on top of the canopy one week in advance. A sign underneath stated that the dummy would not come down until "Animal Crackers" reached town. The lobby display consisted of the Four Marx Brothers heads in a shadow box with Harpo sitting on a giraffe's neck, which moved back and forth with the aid of a fan motor on the inside of the box. This alone made the people laugh when they walked up the lobby.

The entire campaign was cleverly done and well executed, with the result that not a hitch was incurred. And when everything runs smoothly it is just paving the way for business, isn't it, Harry?

Did You Order Your Club Pin?

Keep a Well Stocked Store Room, Advice of Mgr. Chet Miller

The theatre stockroom is one of the important parts of theatre operation, and in lots of cases sadly neglected. The well-kept stockroom will save the manager many a worry, and good insurance against a dark house. Many a theatre is run and operated under the impression that nothing will ever break or go wrong. But as long as our business depends on mechanical devices we are bound to have a break-down now and then. And the writer has the first time to see anything break or go wrong during the hours the theatre is not in operation. It most generally happens at the peak of business. At a time when there is no time to hunt the local electric shopman, in order to get him to open up so that you may get a fuse or phone your equipment company for an exciting lamp. To save embarrassment, mental worry and refunds, the theatre must be prepared to meet all such emergencies that are likely to occur. And the well-kept storeroom is the solution. The spare parts and supplies should be kept in neat order, and arranged so that the one in charge can, at a moment's notice place his hand on the needed requirement. When supplies are received from the equipment house or supply dealer, they should be unpacked immediately, checked and put in the proper place in the storeroom. Otherwise if the manager merely notes on the outside wrapping who the package is from, and takes it for granted that it is such and such a part that he ordered, and tosses same in some corner to be opened when it is needed, is liable to be fooled when it is opened (that is if he can remember where he left it). So the best way is to take a little more time, and do it right at the start, and save many minutes when they are precious.

The supplies that should be kept on hand is of course guided largely by the equipment and local conditions. But as a rule in most situations the following parts and supplies have been found to come in very handy when needed.

AUDITORIUM-LOBBY. Extra fuses to fit all needs. Light globes to fill all purposes. A few extra seat parts. A little first aid kit comes in handy lots of times (containing a bottle of iodine, a roll of tape, a little gauze and medicated cotton). A few flashlights or candles.

THE BOOTH. Some manufacturers of sound equipment have a prepared list of emergency parts to be carried at all times, and their service men check same on each visit to see that this stock is kept up. It most generally includes: Tubes, exciting lamps, photo electric cells, reproducer and speaker unit. Other items that should be carried are fuses, condensers, lugs and connections, one intermittent movement, contact shoes and carbon holders. If possible a complete picture machine head.

COOLING SYSTEM AND HEATING. Depending on the equipment used. The parts that cause trouble are the ones that should be carried in the stockroom.

A supply and parts list could be kept in the storeroom, which would allow the manager to check off and add to as supplies are used and received. Also a "want sheet" could be kept. It's not necessary to overstock your storeroom, just the things that you are going to need, in the time of need.

CHET MILLER.

Prosperity Week In Aberdeen S.D. Went Across For Stroud

J. T. Stroud of the Capitol Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D., staged a mammoth parade as the opening shot in the Paramount-Publix Prosperity Week.

The parade started at 10 A.M. on Monday and everybody taking part in the parade did so without any expense to the theatre and 85 entries comprised the parade with Manager Stroud in one of these little Austin cars at the head of the procession.

Then followed a float, another float on which all Publix ushers were in uniform and which carried appropriate banners, the State Normal College band, followed by various automobile agencies, a flock of Yellow Cabs, 29 trucks of the International Harvester Co., and many others.

The parade was four block long and practically every motor vehicle in the parade bore banners with appropriate copy about Paramount-Publix Prosperity Week as well as mention of the theatre.

George Delis Discusses The Value Of Regular Fire Drills

Following is a brief report on being prepared for emergency, such as fire drills, panic drills, by all theatre staffs.

The manager: Notify immediately fire and police department, see that all the employees are kept at their stations and do their duty as drilled. Cashier: Pick up all money, mark opening and closing numbers and leave the box-office immediately. Chief Usher: Has drilled and prepared his ushers in case of fire, to keep cool and calm and remember what to do. First, open back exit doors, then all the side exits, and last open foyer exits. Station ushers on each exit to keep people moving, station ushers on each aisle to keep people moving and quieting them down and see that every one of the patrons is out of the theatre. Stage manager and stage hands: First cut rope opening ventilators; second, put down asbestos curtain; third, notify and open exits for actors, use fire extinguishers and fire hose if possible. Stage manager see that all actors and stage crew get off the stage. Orchestra leader and players: Stay and keep playing till patrons are out of the theatre and then leave the orchestra pit. Operators: First shut light off film; second, see that fire doors leading to audience get shut; third, use fire extinguisher if possible and if fire is getting into film magazines, leave booth immediately. Fire engineer: Shut off fan, use fire extinguisher and hose if possible and then leave boiler room.

My provisions for emergency lighting in the event of failure of current from main supply is several electric lanterns ready for use and kept in the house.

Potato Matinee Is Corking Booster For Theatre Good - Will

Knowing that this type of work generally clicks in his town, F. E. Owen staged one of the ever popular potato matinees to good results at the Capitol Theatre, Raleigh, N. C. Every child under 12 years of age was admitted to see the first chapter of "The Lightning Express" by bringing two pounds of potatoes, or they could substitute that for some kind of canned goods.

The result was a generous supply of eatables on hand which was turned over to the Salvation Army for distribution among the poor.

The newspaper played up this special matinee in a lengthy article and, of course, mentioning the theatre and manager.

This is a stunt that is usually used before Thanksgiving Day, but can be used with success almost any time.

This gag can be used almost any time, especially if you happen to have a Salvation Army or other organizations in your town to whom the gifts of food would be most welcome. We want to thank Owen for passing this along.

Emergency Lighting!

Sitting in an up-state theatre a short time ago during a violent electric storm, the lights suddenly started to flicker and finally passed out entirely.

The manager (also part owner) looked at me in disgust and exclaimed, "Here's where I hand out my profits in refunds." Not to mention the hard feelings on the part of the customers who have journeyed through the storm to see the show.

I asked this exhibitor why he had never installed an emergency plant to continue his shows when the main supply breaks down or goes out of commission and was the most surprised man in the show business when he said he knew little or nothing about such plants.

Since that incident we have questioned no less than a dozen out-of-town managers about the same thing and among those dozen only five had emergency equipment.

Here is a slant of the utmost importance. Picture a crowded house—the middle of a great picture—blooey—out go the lights—rush calls to electric company—promises of immediate resumption of service—patrons sitting in dark—still no show—two or three customers come storming out of the auditorium and demand their money back—others hear them and do likewise—bum business all around.

Every theatre located in a community where emergency service is not provided by the lectric company should be equipped to continue their shows after discontinuance of service. It makes no difference how rare the occasion is that the current goes off, even if it happens but once in a year you would still be smart to have some sort of generating apparatus so that your exit lights and show can go on uninterrupted. It is real economy and not a big expense.

Marathon Putting Race Had Dallas Talking For Week

A stunt that attracted no end of attention in Dallas, Texas, recently was the one pulled by Marsline K. Moore, up-to-the-minute manager of the Palace Theatre, who staged a marathon golf putting contest, the first ever to be seen in the city, and, unquestionably one of the best gags of the year.

Boys from three towns about 32 miles from Dallas started out at 9 o'clock Monday morning from their respective towns. Each boy was sponsored by their local Chamber of Commerce and newspaper. And the Dallas Dispatch tied up with the theatre in Dallas. The idea of the contest was for the boys to putt a golf ball from their respective towns to the Palace theatre. The idea proved a good one and was recipient of much publicity. The winner covered the distance in a little over six hours.

Moore also tied up with all miniature golf courses and driving ranges whereby banners and signs containing suitable sales copy was prominently displayed. One of the golf courses furnished a pro to give instructions in foyer in afternoons to theatre patrons on the miniature putting course specially installed to advertise the picture.

These activities have helped Moore to combat the opposition offered when the miniature golf courses first made their appearance upon the show horizon, with the result that his business has increased and he has had little or no opposition from them. Listen, Marsline, let's hear some more from you regarding what you are doing so that we can pass it along to your fellow Club members.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

WHAT IS EXPLOITATION?

WALLY ALLEN Says:

EXPLOITATION is a much abused word and has many definitions. Our idea of exploitation is the selling of an article, be it film, dry goods or what have you through channels that are off the beaten path. For instance, a newspaper ad, trailers on the screen or a lobby card could hardly be called exploitation, but an unusual ballyhoo, window or herald is.

Among the different mediums that can be called exploitation is the ballyhoo, a trade name for a moving advertisement. When well dressed and cleverly worked out to create a desire to see the picture advertised the ballyhoo is usually worth the money spent on it. Another form of ballyhoo which has gone out of style generally is the use of a barker in front of the theatre to draw them in. A sure fire ballyhoo is a parade of any sort.

A very popular form of exploitation is the herald. Almost every producer creates a herald for each production. Many printing establishments originate heralds to increase their volume. Lots of managers invent their own novelty heralds to suit a particular need. The herald itself is easy enough to obtain but the proper distribution is the true test of this medium. Many a good herald has been a total loss because it was distributed in the wrong section or thrown in an ash can. Another form of herald, and very popular, is the house organ.

Unusual stunts that sometimes find their way to the newspaper as real news is a type of exploitation that is used very little these days, because of the high cost and lack of stage talent to execute the stunts. Such stunts as a flagpole sitter on the roof or one of the performers on the bill dancing on toes down the street are what we meant.

Window tieups, from an ordinary litho card to elaborate displays can be included in the flexible word, exploitation. Outdoor billing, such as street car fronts, sniping, snowbirds and other forms of outdoor billing come under exploitation.

By this time the reader has deduced, if he has gotten this far without turning to the next page, that exploitation covers a multitude of sins and such clever brain work deserves proper credit! There is more money wasted in thoughtless exploitation than in any other medium of merchandising. Yet, when properly thought out and executed exploitation can turn a mediocre attraction into a box-office success.

This is the last of the series on exploitation which we have been presenting to you. Wally Allen of Oscar Doob's exploitntion force on the Loew Circuit; Monty MacLevey, attached to Sam Rinzler's division of B'klyn and Lony Island Fox Theatres, and Walter Morris, manager of the Strand Theatre in Perth Amboy, New Jersey, pass along their definition, backed by years of experience in the show game. In subsequent issues of the Club pages we will present those other slants on exploitation which many of our members sent to us. Watch for them, they are a worthy follow-up to this excellent series.

MacLEVY SAYS:

EXPLOITATION is the sales medium used by a manager to merchandise an attraction in an unusual manner—attract attention—arouse interest—thereby creating sales at the box-office, or establishing a good will advertisement. In exploiting an attraction, we should first consider atmospheric background of the picture or title. If the feature is of a military nature, South Sea Island, Arctic, underworld drama, etc., sell the attraction by atmospheric lobby or window displays. For example, the military picture, with flags, guns, uniforms, tieups with legion militia, etc.—the South Sea Island with palms, special lighting effects, hula-hula girls—the Arctic by ice scenes—the crook picture by underworld materials, etc. In this manner you are then creating interest and thereby causing sales

Get away from the theatre and tie-up with your merchants, either through window displays, contests, co-operative tie-ups, etc. You are then gaining new patrons. Newspaper press notices, if the theatre is located where newspapers are a chief form of advertising, are one of the best forms of bringing to the attention of the public your message. Items of interest, contests which crash the front page, and co-operative newspaper ads, are the best sources of selling your theatre.

Results at the box-office should be the sole purpose when planning your campaign. Regular advertising, usual in all theatres, such as programs, trailers, stills, one-sheet cards, etc., cannot be termed as exploitation. This is merely theatre advertising. The theatre manager will no doubt be able to hold his patrons, providing, of course, the theatre is run in the proper manner, but can he gain new patrons daily, which is the purpose of worth while exploitation. Staging benefits, the use of ballyhoo trucks, political banners, atmospheric lobby displays, special heralds, window tie-ups, co-operative merchant campaigns, etc., are some of the various forms of exploitation which a manager should use.

Exploitation, which is worth while, has a direct result at the box-office, either as a good will builder, or as a medium of selling tickets. This is the kind which we should concentrate upon. Analyze your locality, the type of merchants, the class of people, newspapers, and in general, theatre proper and surroundings. Then adjust your exploitation methods to fit your requirements. Each section requires a definite type of exploitation. The good manager will be able to fit his campaign to his neighborhood.

BUNNY BRYAN Says:

I RATHER believe Adam and Eve's exploitation of "The Call Of The Flesh" is the first exploitation gag on record. Quite a change, from the apple and fig leaf to some of the elaborate stunts pulled by modern exploiteers. My conception of exploitation and ballyhoo is that which obtains the greatest attention and sales value for the minimum cost. Any tyro can figure a gag that would be prohibitive as to cost, great as to attention value, but lacking in that something that would send them away talking about, remembering what they had seen and sold the idea.

I never try to go into anything too elaborate, as I learned early in the game that the more simple the gag, the greater would be its effectiveness. Attention must be obtained as quickly as possible, an idea must be sold in a convincing manner—that's my definition of exploitation summed up very briefly. The Manager's Round Table Club contains a large number of exploitation ideas every week, many of them are useable and effective in certain parts of the country, others would have to be changed to meet local conditions, all of them are of value somewhere.

Shorthand Stunt Was One With Which V. L. Wadkins Sold Film

One of the stunts used by V. L. Wadkins in exploiting "Office Wife" at the Paramount Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., was a shorthand contest for business girls.

The contest was put over by distributing 2,000 blotters to girl in offices—the face of the blotter showing a photo of Lewis Stone and Dorothy Mackaill as well as a confidential message to business girls in shorthand.

A notation in the lower right-hand corner of blotter stated that the first 25 girls to send in a correct translation of the shorthand inscription would receive a ticket to see the picture.

Of course, the shorthand message contained effective sales copy about the picture. And it also caused a lot of comment which in turn helped greatly in popularizing the picture.

A real desk was seen in the lobby with a cut-out of Stone and Mackail seated at the desk. A card on the desk carried sales copy about the picture.

Brown Had A Good Throwaway Which Attracted Comment

A novel throwaway that attracted a good deal of attention was used by H. C. Brown, manager of the Modjeska Theatre, to exploit "Good News," when it played the Publix house in Augusta, Ga.

The throwaways were of postcard size and showed a picture of a newsboy with a miniature newspaper under his arm. The paper could be taken out and was imprinted on the other side with copy relative to the picture, theatre and playdates.

Music displays were secured with music dealers selling records and sheet music on "Good News." And an attractive display of stills showing "Good News" in latest styles were placed in windows of leading ladies' ready-to-wear stores.

"H. C." has been hitting winners over the fence with consistency and we are sure that his efforts on the new season product will form the basis for many an interesting slant on our pages in the future.

Ben. J. Javellano Of Philippine Isles Enrolls In The Club

From all over the world we receive applications for membership in the Managers' Round Table Club. Singapore, China, Honolulu, Australia, Africa, Europe—all of these countries are represented. Showmen have realized the value of international communication and meet weekly on the Club pages. Many new faces are seen every week, too, the latest of which—a showman from a foreign country—is Benjamin J. Javellano.

Mr. Javellano is the manager of the Palace Theatre in Iloilo Iloilo, Philippine Islands. And not only does he manage the house, but he also owns it. With a job of this sort on his hands, he has plenty to do. We'd like to introduce you to him, and we are showing you a picture of him so that you may see what he looks like. Along with his portrait, he was also thoughtful enough to send us in a picture of his theatre, so that we could use it in our Showman Number this week, we knowing that you men would be glad to look it over. If you have any suggestions or anything that you think Mr. Javellano would like to look over, don't hesitate to drop him a line. This is a banner Round Table Year, and we want the "All for One and One for All" slogan to girdle the globe.

We want to welcome this foreign showman into our organization, and we are sure that his association with the most wide-awake group of showmen in the world will prove pleasant and profitable. Let's hear from you real soon, Benjamin, and let us know what else is going on around your district.

Regular And Pint Sized Golf Courses Plugged Amos Show

Charlie Amos ties up with miniature golf courses as well as Golf Clubs to advertise "Love in the Rough," playing at the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., through which banners were placed on houses at Tom Thumb courses and copy on score cards.

Golf Clubs permitted Amos to place set pieces on the greens—playing up the golf theme in the picture as well as mentioning theatre and play dates.

Ten days in advance, Amos had a one-hole course in his lobby with obstructions to make it difficult for one to get a hole in one. A panel at the hole announced that patrons would receive a guest ticket to see the picture by making a hole in one. It was good advertising for the picture with the free list held to the minimum.

Amos also received window tie-ups with sporting goods stores and a special story on the sporting page of one of the local newspapers.

JUST WHAT YOU NEED!

Next week's issue of the Club pages will include a complete six months index to all the valuable material which has been published in our section since last May. This index will be worth ten times its weight in gold to every live-wire showman who appreciates the necessity of having this wealth of information at his finger tips.

We know that most of you keep your copies of Motion Picture News filed in proper rotation. With the six months index it will take you but a few moments to select the stunt you want and then turn to the complete details of it in the issue where it originally appeared.

NEXT WEEK!

Cleaning And Ventilation Factors Of Prime Importance

Cleanliness and proper upkeep and maintenance of house and equipment is, in my estimation, a very simple matter and in line with proper management. Simply a matter of keeping it that way, which, in the final analysis, is up to the rank and file of an operation, so what credit is in order is due my personnel here.

I have been in positions in the past where we have had to combat an epidemic scare of some sort and, when possible, I have endeavored to avoid bringing the thought before our patrons, but when considered necessary I have stressed very strongly the fact that the modern (when term applied) theatre is about the last place to think of in connection with the word "contagion." Modern ventilating equipment, washed air system, janitorial service—vacuum cleaning nightly, spraying, dusting, etc. Of prime importance the stressing of the fact that operation of theatre is subject to supervision of Board of Health and other authorities.

I have followed through with the above and other pertinent facts with curtain talks, trailers, pamphlets and lobby cards. Cartoons in connection with the latter can be used effectively—crowded elevators and street cars breathing in one another's faces—a couple seated comfortably in a theatre with air currents carrying off above, etc.

When possible, and I have succeeded at times, I have had the safety of the theatre incorporated in articles warning against gatherings of groups of people, my efforts, however, being first to try and kill anything I could about any danger of an epidemic. This, I know, is something that is hard to accomplish. Short trailers along the lines of dispelling fear I believe to be one of the most effective means of combat—together with a small, neat folder in which I would always include a mention of the fact that we are compelled to abide by the Sanitation Ordinances of the city. With schools sometimes closed and theatres still operating, it is an argument in our favor. A short quieting message from the screen and handed to patrons is bound to secure favorable comment from those attending the theatre and find receptive listeners as I feel the public at large is always ready to listen to any excuse to lull their fears where interference with their pleasure is concerned.

In conclusion I would say the theatre should hesitate until it is felt necessary to bring up any thought of danger in connection with any prevalent thought. I sincerely trust I have, somewhat, expressed my thoughts intelligently.

Ads Built On Showmanship!

Below we present a group of ads on Universal's "A Lady Surrenders" showing the many effective ways this attraction can be sold via the newspaper. In this group you will note the various sizes and how attractive even the small ones are for the simple reason that common sense was used in making them up.

If there is anything about them that appeals to you and helps you with your own ad layouts, thank Joe Weil for sending them over to Club headquarters for reproduction.

Quiet During Performance Is Aim Of Harold A. Kopplin

I will try and give my opinion regarding noisy patrons and kindred subjects. I say opinion because as a matter of fact we have never had much trouble from this source. Probably the natives of Miami are a quiet sort of people, or educated (no, I hardly think that we have too many Georgia and Florida crackers for that) or they possibly understand that quietness is a necessary evil for the satisfactory reproduction of talking pictures. At any rate, as I said before, we very rarely have any trouble as far as your questionnaire goes.

During the first few months of our installation, which was just about a year and a half ago (mistake—again it was over two years—how time does fly) we used a card at the entrance door reading: "Quiet please, loud talking disturbs those listening to picture." We have never used a trailer, a slide or any other method of telling this message to the patrons.

Our carpets are all padded underneath with Ozite (but this was already done before the installation of sound. Our accoustical treatment of Balsam Wool and draperies is very good, and it is possible that should any talking occur in any section of the theatre, no one seems to be disturbed, at least no complaint has ever been registered and we on the floor have never noticed it. Probably the only objectionable noises we have are crying babies, but that's just another one of the continual worries of a house manager, and the objection is squelched in the usual method.

Novelty Campaign Netted Jersey RKO Houses Big Returns

Scouting around over in New Jersey recently, in the vicinity of Union City, etc., we were rather surprised at the stunts being pulled off there. At nearly every house we visited we heard some dope on this or that stunt. All of the stunts mentioned seemed strangely familiar, and it was when we looked them over that we found they came from the Club pages. From what we could pick up here and there we managed to find out that M. Arthur Loewy, who is handling publicity for that division of the RKO theatres was responsible for it.

In some instances he has put a new slant to the stunts used and we are going to pass them along in case you'd like to put them to your own purpose. This live-wire press agent, whose work seems to have been very good over in Jersey, according to the send-off that the managers give him, pulled a clever stunt recently by landing a story in one of the Rutherford papers, the Republican, in which he stated that the movies were a sure cure for "panicphobia," a mythical disease. The story was dolled up by having a bunch of photostats made of the article. The photostats were distributed to the various theatres in the district. In the lobby of the theatres a card was placed which stated that the house would give a free remedy to antidote the "disease." The remedy was an envelope, pay size, the copy on which described a smile and stated that everyone should smile. The envelopes were placed at the bottom of the lobby card. This gag, if pulled right, may work in your town, though there is a possibility of some city ordinances being found which would prohibit a stunt of this sort. Look it over, maybe you can use it.

In Rutherford, New Jersey, we found that this showman had placed heralds in the form of mammoth, cardboard police shields which carried copy: "Go to Show Month," on all of the telephone and electric light poles in the city, giving the theatre a valuable display. The stunt, inexpensively executed, may also prove a good bet in your town, too, if you care to use it in connection with anything you want to add another touch, too.

We are reproducing a copy of the certificate given to patrons signing the "Optimist Resolution." This stunt made a decided impression in all of the circuit houses, to the extent of many thousands of them being distributed. It was printed in black, on a light brown background, with a deeper tone of brown as a border. This stunt can be used in conjunction with kiddie matinees also, having the kids sign one and taking another home for their parents to sign. Dope this angle out, there are plenty of possibilities to it.

And now for another Round Table stunt—the "Health Notice" which appeared in the Sept. 13, 1930 issue of Motion Picture News. Loewy made use of this stunt by printing up a number of heralds, in the form of notices. The heralds measured 8½ by 6 inches, printed in black, on white stock, with an ornamental border around it. Look up this stunt if you want to use it. Teddy McDonald pulled it at the Rivoli Theatre in West Haven, Conn.

While we haven't met this live-wire as yet we hope that when he sees this little story he'll keep us posted on his future work so that we can pass it along and let the rest of the showmen, who make up the Round Table, get a look at it, and, if possible, make use of it.

Wm. R. Fisher Is Latest Washington Showman to Join Us

And now meet William R. Fisher. Mr. Fisher is the assistant manager of Loew's Columbia Theatre in Washington, D. C., that town where so much showmanship is being turned out lately.

Located as he is in the same town with Tom Olsen, Bill Ewing, Hardie Meakin and the rest of the showmen who make up the theatrical district of Washington, Fisher, no doubt, has to do some tall stepping to help Roger Drissel fill up the house But this should be no task at all for him, in view of the fact that the town offers a lot of opportunities for showmanship of the de luxe calibre.

We have many times stressed the fact that being located in a small or a large town doesn't make any difference to a showman. He is going to put his house across in every way possible and that also means the best way possible. We are of the opinion that Mr. Fisher is doing some nice work in the Capital City and we hope that he will favor us with some of it at an early date so that we can pass it along to the rest of the Club for their hokay. Right, Bill?

Rosenthal Profited On This One; Plenty Of Free Publicity

A thousand dollars' worth of publicity for only fifteen bucks, was the record hung up by Morris Rosenthal at the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, Minn. We were unable to figure up the good-will value, perhaps you can, though it'll be a job.

When the local airport dedication was announced recently in Duluth, Al Anson, district manager, visited the civic authorities and sold them on the idea of having "The Dawn Patrol" booked in for the same week. The authorities were sold on the idea, and the campaign was planned.

The flyers at the airport were invited to attend the midnight show at the theatre, directly after a banquet and ball that had been arranged by the city in their honor. This angle was tied in by the committee in all their program announcements. Arrangements were also made to incorporate, in all their broadcasting, the theatre announcement. This was done at the aviation field, the dinner, ball, and fire-works display.

Special cards were placed at advantageous spots about the flying field where they were seen by 25,000 people. 500 special-tricked letter heads were mailed out by the Chamber of Commrce, and one was placed under each plate at the dinner. All prominent merchants featured special window displays, with a card tying the dedication into the theatre film. Some of the spots secured were practically inaccessible under normal conditions.

On the midnight show, receipts were trebled, just by the appearance of the famous flyers who had attended the dedication. The local airport loaned the theatre material for lobby displays. The entire campaign went over like nobody's business, with the result that the theatre profited plenty.

Animosity Of Local Merchants Was Overcome By J. Peters

With a great deal of animosity piled up against his theatre due to the fact that some one had not played square with them, the local merchants in the neighborhood of the Ritz Theatre in Indianapolis, Ind., have not been very partial to any suggestion offered them by J. R. Peters, manager of that theatre in Indianapolis, Ind. However, Peters has not been discouraged.

Not so long ago he decided to feature some kind of a special week at the theatre. He was undecided as to what sort of a week he wanted to plug. Then he hit on a brilliant idea. He would feature a week that would ring in the local merchants. He called the event 34th St. Civic Week.

GIVE HIM A HAND!

He's a district manager out in the Middle West. A real guy; not one of those fellows who are always looking on the floor for gum wrappers so that they can bawl out the manager. He's never afraid to lend a helping hand. He doesn't wait to be asked, he pitches in. He has earned the rating from his men of being "one in a million." And it is said that when he bawls a man out, he can do it in such a way that the manager almost feels complimented.

Do you want to know who?

It's Art Ableson of the Publix South Dakota District.

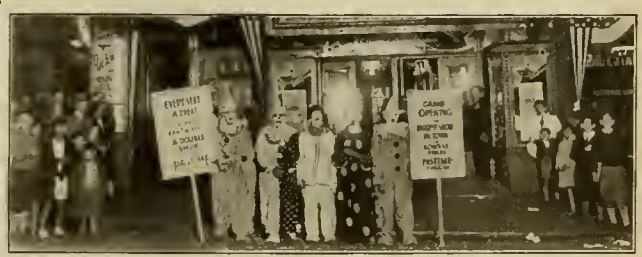
One afternoon he made a special visit to the merchants and invited them over to the theatre to talk. When he had all of the merchants in the house, he laid down his proposition, asking that they co-operate with him to the extent of plugging the week. The way the merchants responded almost swept Peters off his feet. They more than agreed to help him, their decision being arrived at due to the fact that Peters had asked them to come to their theatre and have a talk, in which he told them that the unfortunate affair of other days was not his fault and he asked them to forget it.



When the merchants consented to help, he set to work and turned out a royal campaign, that went over in corking fashion, with the theatre and the merchants reporting some of the best business they had enjoyed in years. Incidentally, Peters passes along a lot of credit to his house staff, which he says worked all night to get the house in readiness for the opening day of the Civic Week.

Thanks, "J. R.," for passing this along to us, and remember, we'd like to hear what else you are doing.

Dollinger Hitting The Line Over In Union City, N. J.

Dollinger is scooping again. This time it is in Union City, New Jersey, where Fred is handling the Pastime Theatre for an independent corporation, having resigned from the Fox Theatres to take this assignment, a short time ago.

The first thing he did when he opened the house, which had been dark for some time, was to send out a street ballyhoo plugging the price policy. As you will note from the photo, the ballyhoo consisted of five men dressed in clown costume. The men, carrying the banners, paraded about the city, shouting the announcements through a megaphone. The ballyhoo attracted a lot of attention and served to appraise people of the fact that the house was re-opening.

Special introductory tickets, allowing two admissions for the price of one, were distributed at house-to-house and through the local merchants. Circus heralds stressed a "Let's Get Acquainted" policy, giving the prices in big type. Dollinger had a catchline on the herald which some of you might like to use. It was: "AEROPLANE SHOW AT SUBWAY PRICES." His campaign for the opening was well planned and executed, with the result that it went over with a bang. We expect to hear some good things about what Fred is doing and going to do over there. Come on, Fred, let's have some more.

LAFF-O-THE-WEEK

This time it concerns the gent who had just graduated from the managerial training school maintained by a major circuit. The "book made showman" was boasting that he had passed with a rating of 100%. His colleagues were frankly incredulous when he made the declaration, and they didn't hesitate to say so.

"Oh yeah!" slanged back the grad, in the showman English he had been taught, "I got 20% in box-office operation, 15% in service staff drilling, 40% in swearing, 15% in production, and 10% in exploitation. If that ain't a hundred, what is?"

Popularity Stunt In Rinzler's Division Going Great

With plenty of interest being shown in the Popularity Contest, that Monty MacLevey is plugging in conjunction with Fox Theatre Show Season, in Sam Rinzler's Brooklyn and Long Island Division of the Fox Theatres, it looks as though the thing is going over in great style.

The cut we are showing will give you one of the many slants that Monty is using to keep the Brooklyn and Long Island public informed as to what is going on at the houses and in the contest. This full page of publicity was secured free of charge from a Brooklyn local paper. You will notice, if you look closely, that for a one-year subscription, the theatre allows 30 votes in the popularity contest. This angle helped to land the full page of publicity, and should not be overlooked in the event that you should happen to be planning a similar stunt in your town.

Free Round Trip to Miami for Winners In Gigantic Fox Popularity Contest

MacLevey pulled another good stunt by signing up the local celebrities in the neighborhoods where the circuit houses are located, police captains, congressmen, a senator, etc., agreeing to be on hand and act as judges. The activity displayed by this alert showman and his fellow showmen in Rinzler's division bids fair to rival closely the success of any popularity contest to date, and we look to hear the latest, and perhaps final, developments on the stunt. Keep us posted Monty.

McNeill's Display For This Was Oke; Look This One Over

Our Canadian showmen are still tearing off 90 yard runs in their show-selling and one of their strongest bets is the window displays turned out to plug their attractions. We have frequently showed what Stan McNeill of the Capital Theatre, Smith Falls, Ontario, Canada, does along these lines, and in passing along his latest work here, we are sure that you will pick up a new slant on attracting attention.

The photo we are showing portrays a twenty-four-sheet head cut-out, of Joan Crawford, used to plug "Our Blushing Brides" which was placed in one of the windows of a prominent merchant located on the main street of the town. The cut-out was blanketed all around it. Behind the face, red crepe paper was placed. A 100-watt nitrogen lamp was next installed behind the head. The lamp had a reflector, and, by the use of a winker (to make the light go off and on), it gave the face a blushing effect. The stunt was also pulled in three other stores, though in this case, instead of a window, a box was used, with a one-sheet head pasted onto it. The back of the one sheet, excepting the head was covered with cardboard. The face and head were given the same treatment as the window display.

A great many comments were occasioned by this stunt. The merchants liked it, patrons of the theatre commented on it, and all in all, it was one of the best displays that the theatre had ever had—surely it was one of the most impressive and effective. Thanks, Stan, for letting us see this. We are sure that your fellow members and showmen in the Round Table Club will more than take advantage of it, particularly since it may be used on any picture.

Plane Taxies About Streets Of Tucson As Exploitation Plug

One of the most unique stunts that has ever been used in Tucson, Ariz., was put over by Frank E. Drachman in exploiting "The Dawn Patrol," playing at the Opera House.

On the opening day of picture, a regular passenger plane taxied under its own power through the main business street to the astonishment of thousands of on-lookers.

The plane was brought to town from a nearby aviation field on a truck and then was piloted by an expert aviator. The wings of the plane had copy about picture, theatre and play dates in large letters.

The entire police force, including both the patrolmen and the motorcycle squad, kept the street cleared as the plane wended its way through the city's principal business thoroughfare.

It was estimated by the local newspapers that over 5,000 people followed the plane up the street. The stunt was not only unique in exploiting a picture in Tucson but it had a telling effect at the box office too, as was eviednced by a continuous line-up all day long.

ALL THOSE IN FAVOR SAY AYE!

"I want to express my appreciation of MOTION PICTURE NEWS and of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB. It is surely a grand feeling to have a file of those red magazines around and be able to turn to a review of a feature or a comedy, or to have a thousand or so exploitation ideas at your finger-tips. Some day I hope to be a good enough showman to be able to contribute a few originals that may help somebody else."

New Jersey Showmen Are Crashing Thru The Opposish

Live fronts, window tie-ups, street parades and unusual newspaper tie-ups were practically unknown until Publix took over the former Reade Circuit in New Jersey. Shortly after Bunny Bryan and Ray Puckett were transferred from New England to New Jersey, things began to happen. Witness the following, made in practically every instance, in a city where such things were considered either impractical or impossible. R. K. Stonebrook, manager of the Asbury Park Paramount, gave away one peanut to each patron the week prior to the showing of "Soup to Nuts." An invitation from Ted Healy, the star, to see the show was attached to the nut with a rubber band. Stonebrook's first assistant was promoted to a similar position elsewhere. The local paper was contacted and a half-column story plugging the possibilities for advancement with Publix resulted. A short subject, "Kiddies' Revue," was good for three display ads from a local dancing school.

Bob Jonnasson, manager of the Publix Mayfair, Asbury Park, had a prominent window in Steinbach's, largest department store in any eastern resort city. This was the first time this store had ever given a window to any theatre. Jonnasson also had music and sporting goods store windows on "Follow Through." Jonnasson also had a co-operative page on "The Lady Surrenders."

Parades in connection with theatre attractions had never been pulled in Asbury Park, but Manager Irwin Solomon of the St. James, Asbury Park invited the American Legion post to attend a special midnight show of "All Quiet" and bring along their bugle and drum corps. Result: a real parade and a money-getting night. The Veterans of Foreign Wars paraded later in the week. The first parade netted a three-column picture and story in the Asbury Park Press. Solomon had two co-operative pages on "Good News" the first time in the city, a dance contest at the Municipal Casino with the Casino management plugging the contest and show for a week in advance and also running five display ads in the local paper.

The Rialto, Asbury Park, is a third-run house, but Manager Edgar Goth made "Rain or Shine" click with a number of umbrellas containing suitable copy. They were used by well located newsstands.

Tommy Phelan, manager of the Publix Strand, Long Branch, put "Follow Through" over big. A part of his advance campaign was a miniature golf course in the lobby. Guest tickets were awarded those making a hole in one.

Walter Haas, manager of the Publix Strand, Freehold, invited the publisher of the local newspaper to visit the theatre, and note the improvement in cleanliness, ventilation and general attractiveness. Result, an editorial worth plenty.

Russell Terhune, manager of the Strand, Plainfield, displayed luggage in his lobby a week prior to the opening of "Holiday." Each piece was labelled with name of one of the stars and the statement that he or she was about to leave for the "Holiday."

Activities of this sort have institutionalized Publix in New Jersey and also increased the box office receipts.

And a word or two must be said for these men because of the way they have won the confidence of the local merchants in their respective towns. They have shown the merchants how to boost business and publicize their house through tying up with the theatre. At first the merchants fought shy, but now they are more than willing to co-operate with the theatre in every way possible.

The full-page ads we are showing will prove this point. That's a victory in itself, and one that these showmen may well be proud of. Congratulations!

Amos Had a Good "Propolishun" That Sold Show for Him

A deck of cards was really all that Charles H. Amos needed to plug his show, "Queen High," when it played the Imperial Theatre, in Asheville, N. C., but he decided to use a display board as well to set off the gag. And have them looking.

The card stunt was enhanced by a huge beaverboard Queen of Hearts playing cards, with a heart-shape cut out in which appeared an attractive-looking girl seated at a table with a deck of cards on the table.

Copy on the huge Queen of Hearts read: "Here's Luck! Cut the Queen of Hearts and win a Guest Ticket to see QUEEN HIGH."

The stunt proved a popular diversion and also aided materially in publicizing the picture.

There are lots of ways in which you can work this gag, too. If you prefer, you can use in pinochle deck and offer tickets for a royal flush in hearts. Plenty of variety in a gag of this sort. Make use of it!

EXPLOITATION—WITH A BANG!

When "THE DAWN PATROL" played the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, manager Bob Gary arranged a mock battle which was fought between six airplanes over the city on Saturday noon. Just as the shopping crowd was at its height, the planes swooped over the city, dropping teaser heralds, while bombs were fired from the top of the city's tallest building. As far as the street crowds were concerned, the bombs were supposedly coming from the airplanes, and everyone loked up.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Morris' Article on Loyalty Belongs In All Theatre Offices

A few years back, very few, many of you can remember, and so can I, of warnings about accepting a position in a theatre on account of its lacking prestige and distinction—"Just look at the men in it," was the common expression on everyone's lips.

Back in the minds of all the showmen whom I have fortunately worked under, there has been a definite appreciation of the eventual arrival of modern business methods in the show business. Many have suggested "prepare yourself as a specialist"; so management being my calling, that is what I eventually hope to be.

This evolution is fast becoming the chief feature of theatre operation today, if it hasn't already arrived. Modern business methods will eventually entirely replace those catch-as-catch-can methods employed by old theatre operators, unless they grasp the true significance of the evolving trade and keep step with it.

New men to the profession are coming from all ranks of business and the most successful ones are those who can most readily adapt themselves, to the new situation and cope with the many hundred intricate obstacles in theatre operation today and still systematically record variable ones they have successfully handled for future reference.

Each new recruit, to the managerial field, whose attitude and manner of conducting his assignments is indicative of his deserving a position of higher responsibility, brings with him new thoughts regarding business conduct and system.

Some have revamped ideas from other fields, some original, and some practical ideas culled from theories in colleges, trade schools, etc. These new ideas are hailed as revolutionary steps in the show business.

Such was the opinion and still is where modern business methods are being established as a result of the realization of their necessity to combat the present stiff competition. It isn't difficult, I venture to say, for many of you to remember instances where people (outsiders) unconsciously have shown amazement of finding genteel men in a "show-place."

To summarize, higher type employers, or managers attract higher type employees. Employees with a proper home background or those appreciative of its constituents of good breeding, tact, taste and thoughtfulness in sufficient amount to properly reflect courtesy to all patrons. An employe of such a type naturally senses the finer features of service to the patron and with slight supervision from the manager becomes a vital factor in the smooth running theatre of today.

Each new managerial recruit has some ideas he has gained through experience or training to test. Of course, he must follow the general policies and performance of duties desired by his employers. But after those have been attended to his manner of handling the details and personal features of the operation should rest and does "seek the level" of his ingenuity.

An appropriate reference come to my mind at this time by Tom. Dreier, recently published in FORBES.

"There are business men who conceive it their duty to hold themselves to their desks and to detail tasks. Such men might learn much if they studied the way steamships are managed. The Captain, of course, is supreme in command. His word is law. In effect he is like an absolute monarch. But the captain stands no watch. He goes and comes as he pleases. Only when there is danger does he hold his post on the bridge. At other times he goes where he pleases, giving general oversight to the general business of the ship. Because he is not saddled with the detailed responsihilities he is better in a position to see that his passengers are contented, that everything about the ship is being done properly. His officers are charged with the detailed duties. He holds them responsible. A business man should organize his business so that he, too, can look at his business as a whole. Too many are kept from seeing what they ought to see by being blinded by details that should be the responsibility of the subordinates. The chief executive, whose desk is cluttered with papers has something wrong with his system."

Though this illustration is somewhat more elaborate by comparison, I feel the point is clear. For there has been an appreciation lacking of the necessity for organized methods of management in this field, so that the men immediately at the helm, after completing the operating details would have time to continue contacting the people day by day, maintaining contentment among the employees by palling with them and in other ways encouraging constantly a hospitable attitude toward all patrons.

It seems to me that this is an extremely important feature in the management of today's theatre. For like the captain of a ship, a manager must be in the position of his patrons as much as possible to appreciate their viewpoint and be able to relay it to his inner co-workers of the theatre. His position is comparable too, to the position of a lense in a projector. He views and senses the public's taste from one side and reflects them in his operation from the reverse.

But the fact remains also that his employees are not devoid of observation faculties. Of ten their relation of word-of-mouth criticism is more reliable than the manager's judgment. So a welcoming attitude to discussion must be reflected at all times.

After all what is better, more impressive, than an example for teaching loyalty. Without it, a manager cannot exemplify it. First to encourage it he must be a man. One who is appreciative of a man's views. And as such he will naturally demonstrate when possible a realization of the ambitious and loyal employee to climb to a higher position with financial gain comparable to his tried and proven ability. Honesty and sincerity begets loyalty. As a leader his position pertaining to minor operating policies is definitely disclosed by his tactics and manner of treating everyone. He must be for the definite elimination of favoritism and can most impressively reflect it rather than voice it, for nothing in my mind will uproot loyalty and destroy morale more assuredly. To supervise alone would breed discontent for with the other characteristics a leader has to accept his position and appreciate as much his responsibilities are greatest and sacrifices more.

If squawking comes as a result of making the sacrifices, then the co-workers follow suit, when a request is made. Whether expressed or not the discontent is there. Without the proper mirror, no perfect object can reflect as such. Without the proper captain, no ship is certain of a safe return to the home port. Without the proper example of loyalty to the one important cause: The comfort and welfare of the patron through the examples and deeds of the men at the top no employee will take upon himself the responsibility.

All we can be or hope to be is what we should preach, if anything, or preach what we are, with sincerity and discretion, appreciating that the other fellow has views of his own.

Thanks.

WALTER MORRIS,
Strand Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J.

1. Run special matinees for kiddies, don't ever try to fool a kid, be on the square with them, give out prizes. One week—Jelly beans; another week, Hershey bars, etc.
2. Keep your theatre's name in front of the public at all times. In my case, I have three community papers. 7 blocks west of theatre is a suburb where they have a paper, 1½ blocks west of theatre there is a triangle where two important highways meet.
3. Be charitable with various organizations; offer passes for their card parties, door prizes, etc.
4. When you have educational pictures such as "Byrd at the South Pole" or "Africa Speaks," invite orphans of the city. Pass out passes to various high schools for their faculty. Take along a press book, tell them to look it over.
5. Contact various automobile concerns, but transportation or street car compaies to get and call for the men and women from various old homes as your guests.
6. Mingle with your crowds, know your people by name, shake their hands and ask them about the health of their offspring.
7. Be sure that when something special arises and you make an announcement from the stage, you know what you have to say and make it short and to the point.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Ed. Stone, Organist Of North Platte Fox, Gives Us Some Dope

100% showmanship is the rating of the Fox Theatre in North Platte, Nebraska. As many showmen know, Chet Miller handles the house, and it has been the work he turned out there that has kept the house hitting consistently in the winning class, a feat, in no small measure, being due to the Fox Theatre-Eddie Stone Organ Club which he started in the theatre, bringing it up to a point where Eddie Stone, the organist, himself, could go out and sell it, thereby leaving Chet free to pursue his many other showman activities.

"We are presenting here an account, given by Eddie Stone, of the inception and progress of the Organ Club. In his letter Stone says: "Having noticed many discussions in the Round Table on methods of obtaining and holding the juvenile trade, I feel that this is an appropriate time in which to write and tell you of our plan. Every Saturday we meet at the Fox at 1:30 P.M. During the next half hour we are also on the air over Station KGNF, so the opening remarks are explanatory of the club, expressed so that they will explain what it is to air and audience listeners both who might hear or see it for the first time. After the opening remarks, we generally have about ten minutes of community singing, singing songs which the children have expressed a preference for through writing me letters. The songs, of course, are shown via slides on the screen.

"Following this, we have the regular weekly singing contest for individuals, first the girls, then boys, and finally, adults. The prizes for the boys and girls are as follows: a one week's pass to the Fox Theatre which allows them the privilege of seeing three shows free, and a second prize. The prizes for adults (anyone fifteen years of age or over) are first, a two week's pass, and second, a one week's pass to the Fox, and you would be surprised could you see the age of some of the contestants; for example, several weeks ago, a woman about fifty years of age won first prize playing the harmonica. The audience picks the winner in all cases by applause. Following the contests, we generally close by singing the club song, "Sunny Side Up," and giving the club yell, made up and led by a club member.

"We have membership cards, one for the kiddies under twelve, and one for adults. The kiddies cards are a different color than the adults, and admit the kiddies for 5 cents admission if presented at the box-office before 1:30 on Saturdays, and the adults cards correspondingly admit adults for 10 cents admission before 1:30.

"One may be inclined to think that this is too cheap an admission where the regular prices concerned are 10 cents and 30 cents, but we have found out that we are getting people to the theatre who wouldn't come otherwise and that in addition to our regular business, all 5 cents and 10 cents admissions are 'to the gravy.' The kiddies will bring the adults and furthermore, they always think first of the Fox during the other changes of the week. Our Saturday's regular business has not lost one cent to the 5 cent and 10 cent club members admissions. Also, if you will note the numbers in the opper right-hand corner of the cards. All cards are consecutively numbered and each week we post a list of twenty different numbers, ten adults and ten kiddies, in the box-office, which permits card holders admission free to the show that day if they come between one and one-thirty. This tends to draw them to the theatre every Saturday, regardless, and we have found it to be a very satisfactory plan. When one considers that we have over 4,000 membership cards out in a town of 12,000 population, you must admit that is a good percentage.

"We have also tied up with an indoor miniature golf course one-half block away, to permit holders of Organ Club cards to play Saturday's after the matinee until 6:00 P.M. for the same rate as shown on the cards, 5 cents for kiddies and 10 cents for adults per round, whereas the regular price is 15 cents per round for anyone, and in addition, Organ Club members get the third round free. This eliminates the competition of 'pee-wee' golf on Saturday afternoons as the kiddies can attend the show and play a round of golf for the same price they would pay for a show only elsewhere, or less than one usual round of golf. The owners of the course also take our list of lucky numbers and post it on the course, the lucky twenty being given one round free. This, of course, enhances the value of their cards and they take care of them.

"Sometimes we change the prizes; for example, during Easter week, we gave away four live rabbits. Another time, two little puppies were given a welcome home. And speaking of dogs, in conjunction with the showing of our first M-G-M Dogville comedy, 'Hot Dog,' we distributed bills to all the schools stating that every boy or girl with a dog on a leash who was in front of the Fox at noon would be given a free ticket to see the show. The enclosed picture shows the result. One girl even brought a monkey in lieu of a dog, and the newspaper's want-ad column carried many notices of dogs lost, strayed, or stolen the night before we pulled this stunt. We then paraded the kiddies through the downtown district, after which they had plenty of time to take their pets home before the show. We gave out about 200 free tickets but the stunt attracted so much attention that we had about 150 over usual paid admissions.

"Of late, so many have each week wanted to sing in the contests that I have been forced to ask them to write and take them in order as they write, owing to our limited time. If there is more time allowable after all who have written in have sung, then the first three or four down in front get their chance. Any song they want to sing is permissible and a stunt to get them really interested is to offer a pass to those writing in and giving valuable suggestions as to how the Club may be bettered. Chet Miller works down front with me always, and is a big favorite with the kiddies, and is known to them all. We start out the Club meeting with a 'Hi, Gang!' and the crowd comes back with 'Hi, Eddie!' We have found this to be a wonderful good-will builder for the theatre in addition to cornering the Saturday afternoon trade of both kiddies and adults. Every time during the week that a boy or girl passes either of us on the street, they invariably call out 'Hi, Eddie,' or 'Hi, Chet,' and should their parents or grown-ups be with them, it starts them asking questions about how they happen to know us, and a lot more indirect advertising then goes out about the Fox.

"To organists, who today have only too little to do at best, I can only say that this will help you hold on to your job. It is the proof of the pudding on Saturday afternoon or morning as to whether or not you are helping your theatre's box-office, and while I don't wish to claim that this is due to me, as really only a very small per cent of the credit can be given to me, nevertheless, I really believe that this one feature has enabled me to keep on working through the 'talkies' period when they made such inroads on the ranks of musicians. Managers can work this stunt up without the aid of an organist, although the community singing and contests help put it over immeasurably, through the medium of the Mickey Mouse Clubs, much as done on the Coast, and which has previously been reported in the columns of the Round Table Club.

"Let me say, in conclusion, that I hope that some organists and managers may get a few ideas from this; that I enjoy reading the Round Table, and appreciate the suggestions such as the one a few weeks ago on Eddie Paddock's Organ Solo. Let us organists in on a few more good ones."

Jay H. Guthrie of Uhrichsville, Ohio, Joins Round Table

When showmanship is being displayed about a certain theatre, there must be a showman who will display it. That's the case out in Uhrichsville, Ohio; whenever Jay H. Guthrie, manager of the local State Theatre gets set to plug his films and his house, he displays showmanship.

Guthrie is pretty well versed in the show racket. He has to be to keep up with the great enrollment of live-wires that we have from his state. And a number of them are right in his locality. The State offers him opportunity for handing out some excellent showmanship and he more than takes advantage of every possible opportunity.

There has been some good work coming from Uhrichsville, and we are sure that Guthrie is going to keep up the old tradition and make sure that his house is right there delivering the goods. Listen, Jay. Let's hear from you regarding your future work, so that we can pass it along to your fellow showmen in the Managers' Round Table Club and let them in on it. Oke?

Attention To Stock Room Sure Road To Operating Economy

Of utmost importance to efficient operation is the maintenance and careful supervision of the stock room.

A tabulation of the season's profit and loss statements, will show that large amounts are expended for supplies and materials necessary for the maintenance and general upkeep of the theatre. These amounts being charged to operating expenses, can only reach a minimum by careful study of economical buying, of satisfactory qualities and quantities, and of proper conservation.

No matter how well appointed a theatre may be in every respect, it is not complete unless the stock rooms are conveniently located, kept clean and orderly, and safely locked at all times.

The booth stock room, which should be located in the booth or adjoining to it, should contain all replacement parts for the sound equipment. These spare parts should be kept separate from all other supplies. Where the sound equipment is under the supervision of a service engineer, it should be noted by the manager each time the engineer makes an inspection, that these spare parts are checked and that replacement orders are made promptly. Other supplies in this stock room should consist of carbons, projector oil, motor grease, film cement, film lacquer, supply of blank film, cleaning fluids for lenses and fader contacts, clean rags, extra light bulbs, supply of fuses for all fuse blocks with no exception, spare brushes for all motors.

The chief operator should be made responsible for this stock room, keeping it clean and orderly, and should report to the manager any articles that should be ordered to replenish the stock.

No one should have access to this stock room except the chief operator and manager.

The auditorium stock room should contain stock of all janitors supplies, such as liquid soaps, scrubbing powders, sweeping compounds, disinfectants, deodorants, metal polish, carpet cleaning compound, paper towels and tissue, mops, buckets, wringers, brooms, brushes, dusters, etc.

All spare parts for repairs to seats, upholstery and draperies. Stock of electric light bulbs for entire house, stage and front lighting. Stocks of fuses for all switchboards in the house. Stock of vending machine supplies. Stock of artists supplies.

Materials for each department should be kept in separate compartments, where there is only one stock room.

Care should be taken to see that no obsolete equipment or junk is kept in the stock room.

No one should have access to this stock room, except the manager and assistant manager. When necessary to store fresh supplies or to remove any articles, it should only be done under the supervision of the manager or assistant manager.

The office stock room, located in the manager's, or assistant manager's office, should contain all office supplies, and the stock of tickets. Tickets should be filed in numerical order in such a manner as to enable an inventory to be taken quickly at any time. No one should have access to this room except the manager and assistant manager.

All stock rooms should come under a system of regular inspection. By so doing not only are many dollars saved, but many embarrasing moments, and often a delay in the show.

A. R. NININGER.

BLANCHARD'S GOOD-WILL SCOOP!

Winning the loyal support of each and every member of the high school in his city, as well as all the boosters of the town, is one of the accomplishments of J. M. Blanchard, manager of the Strand, Sunbury, Pa. Blanchard got a two-column write-up in his home town paper when he promoted a fund to charter buses to convey the Sunbury high school band to the football game in Hazleton. The band has 80 members and the entire town as well as the membership of the high school were highly appreciative of Blanchard's personal efforts in their behalf, the school boys staging a special downtown parade in celebration of the event.

Bickert Landed A Truck In Parade That Helped Biz.

Being in well with all of the local organizations in his district, B. W. Bickert, manager of the Tivoli Theatre in Chattanooga, Tenn., placed an attractive float in the American Legion parade held recently and ballyhooed his show "Dawn Patrol" to good advantage.

The Mack agency who furnished the truck had a sign reading, "Mack Trucks are always 100% for the American Legion—Mack International Motor Truck Corp. Local Distributors." The truck was a flat bottom one on which were wings and other parts of an aeroplane. Around the sides were banners reading, "Dick Barthelmess in DAWN PATROL—Tivoli, New.'

The front of the theatre was decorated for the Legion convention with flags and banners. The lobby also had two propellers on display with a miniature plane hanging from the marquee.

We hope that when "B. W." turns out another gag like this he will send us in a photo of it so that we can give his fellow Club members a real view of it, because they, too, are interested in seeing what he is doing to keep them lined up at the box-office of his house, and when patrons evince as much interest as was seen in the display, they want it more than ever. Let's have 'em, Bert, so that we can pass them along.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CIVIC CONTACT

(From Fox West Coast "Now")

Civic contact, in its accepted meaning as applied to theatre operation, means the upbuilding of permanent good will and prestige. The modern theatre occupies a place of honor in any community. Its owner or operator takes his place as one of the leading citizens. In relation to the manager's primary duty of successfully conducting his theatre, it is impellent not only to place his house among the city's leading institutions, but likewise to assist in every movement tending toward civic improvement.

While the attainment of prestige and good-will is the main objective, both of which are practically identical in meaning, there is a difference. If they are not handled judiciously and intelligently, a manager will find that he is obligating himself beyond his capacity . . . laying himself open to impositions and un reasonable demands on his time and the resources of his theatre. The good old handshake and slap on the back, together with honeyed words of greatness is a type of good-will that does not always carry with it that other necessary adjunct . . . Prestige.

Now, how is a manager to set about establishing worth while civic contacts or improving those that already exist. Initially, there are already established organizations . . . civic and social clubs, such as the Rotary, Optimists and Kiwanis Clubs. Fraternal groups like the Elks, Masons, Knights of Columbus, etc. And last, but probably the most influential of all . . . The local government and Chamber of Commerce.

Detailing the possibilities accruing to such relations would merely entail listing a batch of facts with which every one is familiar. It is only necessary to state that these organizations need the support of the theatre just as much as the theatre needs theirs. They are all aiming at a common purpose . . . the improvement of the community.

A different tinge is applicable to relations with the city government. Naturally every manager wants to fit in strongly with the powers that be. That is necessary to obtain the support of the police, fire and other departments to put over stunts. But the idea to pursue in this direction is to secure official support in eliminating competition that directly affects theatre business. This classification becomes the disturbing factor of traveling shows and carnivals. Herein the relations already established with the service clubs . . . Elks, American Legion and others who occasionally bring in tent shows under their auspices on a split profit basis, will be beneficial. It is recognized that these carnivals are harmful to the theatre, but unless the manager is in a position to swing unified influence to his support, he usually has to grin and bear it.

So far we have given expression only to relations as far as the masculine element of the city is concerned. But more directly related to the theatre are the activities that concern only women and their organizations. Most managers recognize that the various Women's Clubs, Parent-Teachers' Associations and like groups are more vitally important to their welfare than anything else. Through Women's Clubs and the P. T. A.'s can the manager reach the element that constitutes a great portion of his patronage . . . the children. Harmonious relations with these groups guarantee entrée into the schools and the home.

The part which newspapers play in the success or failure of theatres is of paramount import. They are the one great outlet of publicity. Their chief source of revenue is advertising and the theatre is one of the greatest contributors to that item. The newspapers are in business for the same purpose that the theatre is . . . to make money. A manager can expect no more support from the press than that which he gives it. Yet, in consideration of the amount of money spent, the theatre is, by far, the recipient of more favors than any other advertiser. If the Smith Department Store takes a double-truck ad or a full-page section, the manager is satisfied if he gets a few little readers tucked away in an obscure corner. But when the theatre manager places a similar order, it's about 75 per cent merchant contact ads, and on top of this he expects columns of news and editorial matter splashed all over the entire edition. Of course, it's great business for the paper, but how often does it leave a poor impression.

Newspapers, with rare exception, have always been willing to go more than halfway with theatres. News of the motion picture studios and theatres have been great adjuncts to them.

The difficult thing for the manager in the small town is to keep from doing too much. Good business principles dictate that a theatre cannot be thrown open to everything savoring of community benefit that comes along. Forgetting this quite often puts the manager in the position that he is running the theatre for the community, not the owners.

Good-Will And Supervision Needed With Manager & Operators

In the theatre that I have been connected with, I always make a survey of conditions in local booths, I always consider the value of sound equipment, the make, etc.

When I find that the sound equipment is manufactured by a reliable firm and is a real outfit, I always expect my operators to produce all that is necessary to put a show over 100% in sound, clearness and projection. And I always follow this up, such as informing projectionists that their work is full of praise and I noticed same. And on the other hand, when projectionist fails to deliver the goods I find it is my duty also to inform him that results are not so good, and that I demand a better show from him. A manager must remember that good results cannot come from a bad and unreliable outfit. What is cheap is dear.

Now, on the other hand, the projectionist has a perfect right to ask the manager of said theatre for a few words upon projection and sound.

The man in the booth should always make for the betterment of conditions for said theatre, see that his outfit is O.K., free from all neglectful noises that arise and disturb the patrons. Which is the main failure in some house's poor sound. Operators have a perfect right to demand from managers, perfect prints, machines in perfect condition at all times to keep that theatre before the public as a real theatre. And not just a movie house advertising "Talkies To-day." To operate a theatre in a real honest-to-goodness way I believe the manager of the small houses should devote just as much time trying to improve his sound and projection just as he does the front of his theatre.

After all, just placing posters, etc., in front of said place is not where he should leave off. Sound and projection, good prints free from rain and bad sound noises is what the patrons want. And the only way that these conditions can work out is that the manager and operator in the booth work hand in hand and demand from each other just what they want.

I have been a projectionist for the past twenty years and I inform managers as to needs for some time ahead and co-operate with managers to put his booth over.

Perth Amboy, N. J.

AS GOOD TO-DAY AS IT WAS YESTERDAY

Joe Buse's Ballyhoo Had Them Lining Up At Regent Box-Office

With three houses on the same block as his own, what is a showman going to do to keep his house out of the red? Any one wanting a real answer to the question that we are asking, need only look at the photos we are showing to get an idea of what Joe Buse, manager of the Regent Theatre, in Los Angeles, Calif., did to extricate himself and his house from the predicament in which he was entrapped.

The cut shows a ballyhoo for "The Greene Murder Case," that had every one going by the house, stopping, looking and paying. Stills were grouped about some of those flaring crime headlines that the tabloids disport themselves with nowadays. A one-sheet plugged the film. Lying at the bottom of the display was a dummy of a man, a knife plunged into his back, with the hilt showing. They certainly stopped for this one.

The other display, this time on "The Mighty," was equally effective. A cell was placed in the lobby of the theatre. A colored man sat on the lower bunk, while the upper was occupied by a dummy. Again the headline stunt was used by Buse. To enhance the effectiveness of the stunt, he tied-up with the Los Angeles police department and they furnished him with some guns and other weapons used by gangdom, which had been taken from the crooks at various times. The guns were placed on a large board, with the police co-operation being given credit.

Stunts of this type were eaten up in Buse's neighborhood. and he takes every opportunity to use them. As a result, he has been leading the other showmen in his district. And, incidentally, that's Joe, himself, at the top of the story. He's been in the game quite some time and sure knows his business. Give him a hand. We'd like to hear some more about what is going on among these neighborhood houses and we hope it will be soon.

Hill Received Full Page Ad from Paper At No Cost To House

He has so cemented himself in the good-will of his town that Frank Hill, of the Inland Theatres houses in Walla Walla, Washington, gets some fine breaks for nearly everyone in business. This is especially so in regards to the newspapers.

Through a tie-up with one of the sheets recently, Hill worked in the local newsboys, putting the stunt over to excellent results. In return for this, the newspaper gave him a full-page ad at no cost to himself. This was a great break for Hill, as he was playing "Common Clay" and wanted to put it over with a big show. The ad that he turned out for the picture was excellent, carrying every point that the picture portrayed, and conveyed by means of appropriate copy and mats by Hill. As most of our members are familiar with this showman's work, they will, of course, know that the ad was simply made up. Hill never puts a lot of type in his ads. You can always find plenty of white space setting off the black type.

Oke, Frank, we are glad to know that you are getting such fine breaks out there in Walla Walla and we know that you will continue the work.

LOBBY STAGE SETTINGS!

Like everything else in the show business, the subject of an old idea revives itself and becomes even more popular than when originally introduced. As witness the lobby, or miniature stage setting stunt which has suddenly popped up in widely scattered sections of the country.

A wide-awake manager can always find some corner or portion of his lobby or foyer where such settings are possible, providing, of course, he is ambitious enough to "dope" it out according to his local conditions.

We can't sit here at Club headquarters and tell Mr. So & So to do this or that in his theatre, when this or that happens to be an impossibility. But we can suggest certain ideas that have come to our attention and pass them along for that group of live-wire showmen who are always willing and anxious to take advantage of brother managers' ideas.

An appropriate stage setting is not expensive in most theatres because the biggest item is the matter of drapes, and almost every theatre (especially those equipped with stages) has an excess of such material. The rest of the setting is just a matter of showmanship, plus attractive looking displays, and, of course, proper lighting. Also not expensive if your theatre happens to carry some baby spots.

The simple suggestion of lobby and foyer stage settings to herald a coming attraction should be sufficient to call to your mind a dozen different angles from which you can tackle this idea. And it's worth the time it takes if you do it right.

Co-Operation Is The Answer To Perfect Projection, Says Egan

The manager should expect the very best results that the man in the booth is able to give at all times, as the operator must put the show before the public as it should be, not in any slipshod or haphazard way, as better projection draws the dollar to the box office.

And it is up to the manager to get the public into the theatre, with advertising, service and courteous treatment, but what use is it to the manager if, after doing this the projectionist does not do his part and put the pictures on the screen in such a manner that it reflects back on him and the theatre.

After all, in a nutshell, the whole sum and substance is co-operation. If the manager and his projectionists have that happy faculty of working out matters together in a co-operative way, nothing but good results can be obtained, and with good results come good managers and good projectionists, better pictures, and pleased head office executives.

KIDDIE BIZ. COMMENTS!

". . . now is the time to go after the kiddie trade, because the children of to-day are future patrons of the theatre."

"A serial is the greatest getter of kiddie business in show business, and many theatres to-day seem to have forgotten the children."

"No theatre, no matter what size or class it is in, should forget the children."

"We fully tell adults that the kids are the bosses, and it has never failed yet, but that those adults attending the Saturday matinee enjoy themselves just as they did some years back when they too sat and watched westerns and action serials. It is great to see them live the whole picture through again."

Roulette Idea Was Utilized By Binstock To Plug New Serial

Motion is always effective in any form of advertising. Paul Binstock seems to agree with us on this point, as his latest display in the lobby of the Astoria-Grand Theatre in Astoria, Long Island, New York, is one that through its motion would be certain to catch the eye and the ultimate attention and interest of any one entering the theatre.

The cut-out that we are showing in the picture was used to plug a serial, "The Indians Are Coming." Made in the design of a roulette wheel, the chapters, 12 in number, were divided so that each chapter was titled and contained a still from that particular chapter. The cut-out was attractively colored and the scenes well chosen. The big feature of the display was this: the cut-out had an electric fan motor concealed behind it, with the result that it would revolve slowly.

Persons entering the theatre, adults and children alike, would stop and watch it revolve. And it was seldom that they would leave before the 12 chapters had been seen by them. Designed primarily to interest the kids, the cut-out, as you see, served a double purpose. For some unexplainable reason—perhaps because they have decided Mark Twain was right when he said something to the effect that there's nothing like being a kid—they have been evidencing a remarkable interest in serial films, so much so that their enthusiasm when the hero rescues the heroine from the danger whereby a knife will drop on her head when a candle flame reaches a string by which the weapon is suspended—reaches a height bordering on total oblivion of their station in life, and the reserve which the law demands they possess in some respect or another.

Perhaps you'd like to use Binstock's gag. If so, it may be made up quite easily, but if you want any further dope on it, just drop Paul a line at his house and we are sure he'll comply.

A Spinning Wheel In Lobby Attracted Patrons' Attention

The patrons of the Tivoli Theatre in Chattanooga, Tenn., certainly took notices of the latest activity indulged in by Bert Bickert, manager of the house when he placed a spinning machine in the lobby.

Through the courtesy of a local manufacturer, the spinning wheel was put in operation with a girl, supplied by the manufacturer, operating it. The machine was in operation just as it would be in the factory—and attracted all sorts of attention.

A group of paintings also formed part of the lobby display. These are the paintings used for illustrations in popular style magazines. There was also a display of all models of hosiery and another displaying cocoons, silk thread and hosiery in its various stages of construction.

The Vogue, exclusive retailer in the city for Humming Bird hosiery, had a girl in the lobby giving out cards to ladies which were worth 25c on a pair of hose. The Humming Bird Hosiery mill and The Vogue purchased a block of 500 tickets for their employees.

All of which tended toward another one of those eye-filling weeks that keep his house far, far away from the losing side of the ledger.

Beautiful Fronts Mean More Business Says Russell Bovim

Regularly we use a white frosted lamp under our marquee but on "THE SPOILERS" we changed those lights to a ten watt green. This of course darkened the under marquee considerably but made the lighting of the lobby display practicable by spotlights. We used six 1,000 watt spots, three suspended at each end of the marquee lighting the set on a side angle, rather than a "head-on" spot, thereby eliminating the shadows of people walking in front of the display. We used white spots without colored gelatine as the latter is not practicable for outside use. Colored glass could be used, the only drawback, however, being that the glass cuts down a great deal of the intensity of the light.

Rather than use colored lights we used plenty of color in our lobby display and accentuated same by the use of white spots.

Up until lately we haven't gone in very much for the lighting of the outer lobby but I intend to do quite a bit of experimenting in this regard, in as much as the transformation of our lobby display on "The SPOILERS" by subdued lights and the use of spotlight was so startling and created a great deal of comment.

The use of green lights under the marquee is not necessarily essential but adds greatly to the effect desired. Where a theatre cannot afford the expense of purchasing the extra lamps, the under marquee can be left dark.

At the present time I don't have any more to say on lobby lighting, although in the future I hope to be able to contribute something more definite in this regard.

RUSSELL BOVIM.

Art Work An Important Factor In Up-To-Date Showmanship

To start with, "What is Art?" Is it spending weeks on a canvass job to be famous years after the artist is dead? Yes, that is art of a kind. But art has kinds and kinds and it is this last kind we will now consider.

Its that great new art today being expressed in such forceful manner on all wide-awake theatre fronts, EXPLOITATION ART, and believe me when it continually sells tickets you can point out the man responsible for it and truly say: "That man is an artist."

Selling tickets is an art and exploitation are when done by a chap who mixes plenty of brains with his paint usually gets results.

The paint without the brains won't get far. Neither will the brains without the paint—as many a smart manager will tell you.

Today we have cut-alls, projectors, air brushes, flitters, wall board and linens as well as wonderful colors in both transparent and opaque at costs within reach of even the small modest theatre and there is really no reason why every theatre should not take advantage of these little wonder ticket sellers providing a man to do the work can be secured; and they are not so scarce.

To start with, every theatre should strive to be the center of attention in its community. In this contention I cannot imagine anything more attention compelling than the theatre which changes the complete front with colors, light and motion for its various current billings.

Next: Art in various forms has always been the heart blood of the theatre. This was true long before the day of the movie. Your opportunity in this "the talkie day" to keep the art spirit alive in your theatre lies in your using hand painted lobby posters well executed in soft inviting colors. Printed one sheets won't do it 100%. If you question this I suggest you get the services of a good poster artist and after using his work one month try to get along again with printed stuff.

Sit a well-painted cut-out of a coming attraction in your lobby, then stand to one side and watch the effect on people as they come in or pass by. You will note they look longer at it than they do or possibly could be forced to look at a printed poster.

That means among other things that you have made them think longer about the advertised attraction. I ask you: will that sell less tickets?

No, there is no argument to it: Art work in theatre and on theatre fronts is the thing.

You may be getting along without it, doing a fair business and hesitate to add the cost of such a department to your present cost.

You are thinking along lines of your present volume of business and thinking on that volume basis you are right—it won't justify adding an artist to your staff—but you would like a bigger volume of business, wouldn't you? Add that art department and keep it working, put a man in it who knows enough to mix 60% brains with 40% paint and you are on the road to being a very successful manager.

WILLIAM G. SMELTZER Says

I want to tell you right here that I never miss reading an issue of the ROUND TABLE CLUB section in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. It has made it possible for me to keep up-to-date with things in the business.

Manager,
Broadway Theatre
Oakland, California.

Really good exploitation artists demand salaries equal to that of good managers, but look around over America and you will note the good managers as a rule are using the services of the good artists.

There must be reasons—

I am now serving as Exploitation Artist under Mr. J. Y. Robb, Manager of the R & R Theatres, this city and in this job I find use of my various experiences gained over a period of years as a window trimmer and card writer for department stores, sign and scenic painter for various shops and an extended study of art. I find window tie-ups a big help. Also street ballyhoos and big banner jobs.

In view of our experiences I would say theatre art work is not expensive. Regardless of cost a thing is not expensive which makes money over and above said cost.

Then, too, I have the word of Mr. Robb to the effect that my department will be closed down when it doesn't pay, and I am still working.

This is only my opinion—now what do you think about it and why?

Charles' Campaign Crashed Centralia Papers For Big Play

With the Mayor of Centralia, Wash., giving an introductory speech, the Fox Theatre, ultra-modernistic house erected at a cost of $200,000, opened its doors to a crowd that had formed lines early in the evening.

R. E. Charles, manager of the house turned out an ace campaign for the opening, working interest up to a point that had them standing in line for hours on the opening night. One of the biggest stunts he pulled on the campaign was his newspaper section that was devoted to the theatre opening. Twenty-two pages carried plugs for the theatre. On the front page of the paper, the editors wrote a special editorial and gave it prominence. The editorial stressed the asset what the theatre was going to be to the community and also spoke about the way the town has been growing by leaps and bounds.

In a box on the first page was written a number of paragraphs on the assets of the city. The box informed the reader that a special rotagravure section, illustrating the points discoursed would be found on the inside of the paper. The roto section was a knockout. It carried six pages of illustrations, among which was the theatre, local banks and prominent business enterprises and buildings. Never in the history of the city had they such an opening as featured the opening night of the Fox. We want to compliment Charles, whose picture we are showing above, on his work, and we are sure that he will keep us informed on what he is doing and going to do to keep the house a consistent winner. How about it, "R. E."?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Keep Your Equipment In Perfect Condition Says Paul W. Kunze

Permit me to congratulate you on your foresight and judgment in presenting a series of articles through the Round Table on the purchasing and maintenance of equipment. I am quite sure you can do a lot of good in forcibly bringing home the vital importance of the proper care of theatre equipment in general and also the costly results of neglecting it. While probably most managers do not deliberately slight their equipment, the old saying "Out of Sight, Out of Mind" comes into play and it is not hard to forget that something, perhaps located in a remote part of the house, needs a little attention. Especially so, when so much time is occupied with trying to devise ways and means of keeping the cashiers busy and the customers happy.

Most of the chain outfits and larger independents realize the value of purchasing the very best in operating equipment and a substantial part of the original investment in a theatre goes into it. Practically all of it receives constant and continuous use and requires as much vigilance on the part of managers who are entrusted with its care as advertising, service and theatre cleanliness. Equipment, both in purchasing and replacement represents actual money and what manager, given forty or fifty thousand dollars of his firm's money would not exercise extreme care and caution with it. Whether the sum is cash or represented by seats, booth machinery, organ, electrical display, battery plant, boilers, motors or stage appliances makes no difference in the amount of care and attention it should be given at the hands of the one it is entrusted to.

Watchful Eye Necessary

I believe that anything but the very best in theatre equipment is a doubtful investment. Because of the hard usage almost every part of it receives and the fact that little can ever be realized from used appliances, equipment should be installed with the idea of giving years of efficient service. In order for it to give this service at a minimum of cost, it must have constant and regular care under the watchful eye of some one qualified to detect and rectify the gradual wear of its parts. Good equipment, given proper consideration as to cleanliness, lubrication and replacements cannot help but give years of uninterrupted service and more than repay the additional expense incurred in its installation as against the lower cost of inferior apparatus.

It is gratifying to visit theatres and talk with managers who take as much pride in having the invisible parts of their house as neat and clean as their lobbies and foyer. Usually they are surrounded with a staff instilled with that same pride, a projectionist, electrician and stage man trying to outdo the other in having their particular departments spic and span. A condition of this kind is ideal in the matter of giving long life and getting the most out of equipment. A big percentage of the money invested in equipment includes motors, mechanical parts and machinery and the two prime factors in their long life and efficiency are cleanliness and lubrication. Barring mechanical defects which may develop, dirt and lack of proper lubrication are the greatest enemies to these mechanical devices and the root of most of the trouble. To this extent a manager is individually responsible as it is quite within his ability to see that every device within his walls is kept free from dust and dirt and receives its regular required lubrication. This is especially important in the case of ventilating and cooling appliances usually located in out-of-the-way places. Even the fact that these duties may be entrusted to a reliable employee, does not relieve a manager's responsibility in checking frequently. Any neglect eventually reverts back to the one in charge.

A Stitch in Time ——!

Another factor of importance in keeping down costs is the early detection and replacement of wearing parts. Many times a small expenditure when wear develops and is taken care of immediately saves hundreds of dollars if it becomes necessary to replace an entire unit, due to neglect in repairing a small part. It is apparent that someone well versed in the subject should have charge and general supervision of this important feature of a theatre's operation.

Larger chains have trained men who specialize in this work, while with the smaller circuits and independents it is usually up to the local manager to designate one or more employees to care for it under his own supervision. However it is done, the matter is one of vital importance in keeping down costs and should receive the same attention given the front of the house and program presentation.

Reduces Fire Hazards

The same applies to seats, organ, backstage equipment, heating plant and numerous miscellaneous fixtures which are all important in the daily operation of the theatre and which deteriorate fast through neglect and careless use. A weekly check on seats saves money and patrons disgruntlement. Careful supervision of stage appliances reduces fire hazards and larger replacement costs later, which also applies to heating plant and emergency battery system. The organ, which represents an investment of five, ten or fifteen thousand dollars and probably lays idle with a coating of dust in many houses, should continue to receive its frequent tuning and service and be kept in such good condition as its big investment calls for. And so with all equipment, whether used frequently or not. Good money has been spent for it, its replacement would be costly and men who neglect it for perhaps more noticeable activities are not giving full measure to those who have entrusted them with the huge investment in a theatre of today.

Under the new regime of things in the business, when the mechanical plays such an important part in the presentation of talking pictures, showmen everywhere have been forced to take a much more active interest in things pertaining to equipment. This new interest has spread itself to include all parts of the house and is in direct contrast to the days gone by when nothing was done about repairs until something or other just wouldn't run any longer. An observer now might remark that the new interest in equipment being shown by managers is a result of the close relationship of properly functioning booth equipment and money in the box office.

The chains have always attached much importance to keeping equipment in first class shape and insist upon it from their men in the field. Furthermore it has been found a good policy to keep it up-to-date and modern by the installation of new and improved devices as they appear on the market. Smaller circuits and independents might well profit by the experiences of the chains and adopt a similar policy as being the most practical and cheapest in the long run.

Maintain a Standard

It is our desire here to maintain a high standard of perfection in the operation and upkeep of equipment, which our company Interstate Theatres, Inc., of New England, insists upon. Being a representative 1,000 seat house, we do not employ a man just for this purpose but find beter results by establishing three separate departments to look after respective equipments under the general supervision of chief projectionist. The division of responsibility includes stage, booth and auditorium each in capable hands and with a little spirit of rivalry we find things kept right up in condition.

Too much cannot be said for the vital importance of keeping theatre equipment up-to-date and in perfect working condition. IT IS YOUR SHOW and without it you have nothing to offer For this reason showmen and managers who neglect this all vital part of the job will find themselves seriously embarrassed when it is too late.

PAUL W. KUNZE.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Prosperity Week Was Ewing Idea That Netted House Publicity

That group of showmen out around Watertown, S. D., where J. C. Ewing manages the Colonial Theatre are continuing to display the aggressive showmanship so necessary in these hectic days of mergers and more mergers, and spectacles and more spectacles.

One of the latest stunts that Ewing engineered at his house was a "Prosperity Week," in which he interested the merchants to the extent of procuring a full-page co-operative ad in the local paper, that later proved to be one of the most potent factors of his campaign. We are reproducing this page here so that you may see how he laid it out. Through a tie-up with one of the local banks a stunt was pulled whereby every baby born during "Prosperity Week" would be given a start in life in the form of a bank account of one dollar. A notice of this was put in the paper, as well as the ad. Incidentally, all of the ads on the full page were sold by Ewing, himself, and for which he obtained the free space that you may see.

The campaign, which included many other angles as well, went over to great results, both the picture and "Prosperity Week" being voted the greatest shows in the town for quite some time. And when the patrons handed out compliments, they handed them out in the form of money at the box-office, which is the kind of compliment any showman is looking to receive. Good work, "J. C.," and we'd like to have some more dope on whatever else you live-wires are doing to keep that town up among the leading ones in South Dakota.

Kenimer Utilized Some Showman Gags to Excellent Results

A campaign that sent receipts sky high was turned out by Guy Kenimer, manager of the Palace Theatre in Jacksonville, Florida, when he played "Holiday" at his house recently.

He ran teaser ads in all of the newspapers a week in advance of the picture. These ads carried nothing more than the title of the picture, in bold type; and underneath, abbreviated criticisms of the reviews submitted by nationally known critics. Through a tie-up with the classified advertising department of one of the papers he was enabled to work a stunt that netted him free space for several days. Single passes were offered as rewards to the persons submitting the best letters on why certain advertisements seemed to be the most effective. Seventy passes were given away, and they were more than paid for by the free space. Another slant was a limerick contest. This went over very well.

Selling the show on the screen, Kenimer ran trailers containing copy similar to that in the ads. The trailers were shown at the four other houses on the circuit, with the sound trailer being shown in addition at the Palace.

As a radio plug, Kenimer had a local orchestra play appropriate numbers for fifteen minutes on the day of the picture. The radio announcer read some of the criticisms which were furnished him by the theatre.

A special stunt that went over very well was that of sending post cards, direct from New York, to three thousand women residents of Jacksonville. The cards bore a scene of a prominent building or spot in New York. In the space for correspondence, the copy, which had been written in longhand by some girls, stated: "Hey! Returning next week via Clyde Line. Having a wonderful time. Attended a theatre last night and saw a picture entitled 'Holiday.' Believe it to be one of the best pictures that I have ever seen. If it comes to Jacksonville, be sure to see it. See you soon."

The cards were signed "Flo" or any other feminine name, each girl having a different name to sign. The cards reached Jacksonville at about the time the picture was to start. Incidentally, by mentioning the name of the steamship company, Kenimer prevailed upon them to pay the postage. When the women received the cards, plenty of talking was rife; with the result that the picture received a great deal of word-of-mouth comment which proved to be very valuable.

A number of other stunts were pulled during the selling of this picture, but since they are known to nearly all showmen, we will not pass them on at this writing. We want to thank Guy for keeping us posted as to what he is doing and we are sure that he is going to continue his live-wire showmanship.

WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?

These Men Signed the Blank!

ROLLIN K. STONEBROOK is the manager of the Paramount Theatre in Asbury Park, New Jersey, for the Publix outfit. This group of live-wires located on the Jersey shore has been evidencing some excellent showmanship ever since Publix took up operation there and we believe that Mr. Stonebrook is riding right along the same showman wave that the rest of his fellow managers are on. Keep us posted about what you are doing, Rollin.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY K. BROWN manages the Premier Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., for the Loew outfit. The showmen on this circuit have been displaying some great activity, and we note with interest that Brooklyn is right out front when it comes to being represented. However, Harry, we'd like to have some individual representation, too, so let's get a look at some of your recent work so that we can pass it along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MAX GOLDBERG manages the Spooner Theatre in the Bronx, New York City. The Spooner, if we remember rightly, has long been known as a house of distinction in its neighorhood, and we feel that Max is upholding tradition. Give us the low-down on your work, Max, so that we can pass it along to the rest of the Club.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

KARL LINDSTAEDT is the manager of the Paramount Theatre in Austin, Minn., for the Publix outfit. Being associated with a group of wide-awake showmen such as this circuit boasts—especially around the mid-west—he is no doubt stepping high, wide and handsome in his show-selling and for that reason we want to hear some more from him in the near future. What say, Karl?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK BURNS manages the State Theatre in Winston-Salem, N. C. He is the first of a group of North Carolina showmen who have just signed on the dotted line. This state already has a large representation in the Round Table Club and boy, how it's growing! What do you do to keep them lining up at the house, Frank? Give us the inside dope, will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BEN HOOK is the manager of the Murphy Theatre in Wilmington, Ohio. Mr. Hook comes to the Club also proposed by Lee Euring. Well, Ben, when Lee proposes you that's all the dope we need for the present. But you'll have to be active in the future because we are sure that you must have the goods. What do you say?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EMIL BERNSTECKER manages the National Theatre in Greenboro, N. C. His work has appeared before on the Club pages so you all know that he is capable of displaying showmanship. We hope that from time to time he will keep us posted on his activities so that we can pass along the low-down on what is going on in Greensboro. How about it, Emil?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAUL PHILLIPS manages the Capitol Theatre, Salisbury, N. C. With so many North Carolina showmen rallying to the Round Table it looks to us as though this state is going to hang up a 100% R.T.C. flag, shortly. Keep up your good work, Paul and remember, we want to pass it along to your fellow showmen all over the world.

TOM OLSEN really needs no introduction on these pages as he has been represented many times in the past, through his ace show selling, but as everyone else had to go through these paragraphs, Tom, too, must go along. Oke, Tom. Let's have some more of your work now, especially since we hear you are doing some great things at the Fox house in Washington, D. C.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAY H. GUTHRIE manages the State Theatre in Ulrichsville, Ohio. We recall driving through Ulrichsville a few years ago and stopping off for a short time we had a chance to chat with one of the managers of a house there. Drop us a line or so Jay and tell us about conditions down there now and what you are doing to better them. Oke?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROGER R. DRISSEL is the manager of the Columbia Theatre in Washington, D. C. Drissel has been in the show game for quite some time and he is fully capable of holding down his position. His town has had some good showmanship displayed in it in the past, and, as most of you know, this is being repeated now. Keep in touch with us, Roger.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. H. VINCENT manages the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Colo. With Greeley a center of showmanship, he is doing all he can do to keep up with the leaders. Why not shoot in a photo of yourself and some dope on what you are doing to line them up at the box-office, Mr. Vincent, so that we can pass it along?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SALEM YELLEN has been handling the Star Theatre in the Bronx, New York, for over six years and in that time he has displayed plenty of showmanship. He promises to be an active member, and with a background such as he has we are sure that we will have many helpful hints from him which we can pass along. Let's have a photo of yourself, Salem.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALTER O'BRIEN is proposed for membership in the Round Table Club by Lee J. Euring, himself an excellent showman. Mr. O'Brien manages the State Theatre in Greenville, Ohio. We have a hunch that he will be kept pretty busy selling shows if he wants to be right in line with the showmanship that has been displayed down there before. Let's have some information on your work, Walter.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY GREENBERG manages the Paramount Theatre in Brainerd, Minn. Mr. Greenberg has already been introduced to the Club via a story or two on his activity, so he is no stranger. However, Harry, everyone who joins must be on this page sooner or later. Now that you've been initiated, we hope that you will continue your activity. And send us a photo of yourself, too.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JACK H. HODGES manages the St. James Theatre, Asbury Park, New Jersey, for the Publix outfit. Jack is one of the showmen on the section where Bunny Bryan does the publicity and advertising. Considering the fact that fine teamwork has been reported from this district, it's small wonder that these showmen are creating a lot of comment with the way they are handling their houses. Keep us in touch with your work, Jack.

CONSISTENCY

A good comedy now and then is a good thing. But a good one on every show is a far better thing. You can get an occasional good one almost anywhere. But that isn't enough. It's consistency that counts... that makes your patrons walk up to your box-office confident of enjoying your whole show.

"DON'T BITE YOUR DENTIST" — MACK SENNETT goes back to slam-bang comedy with a vengeance in an uproarious, fast-moving picture featuring Andy Clyde, Daphne Pollard, Patsy O'leary and Lincoln Stedman. The Film Daily says it's a corker." And the Film Daily is 100 per cent right!

"DIVORCED SWEETHEARTS" — Divorced but still in love. Double-crossed by his "best friend" and tricked by a nosey aunt. One of MACK SENNETT'S smartest ultra-modern laugh gems. With a fine cast including Daphne Pollard, Ann Christy, and Charles Irwin.

"RACKET CHEERS" — A brilliant satire on the racketeering theme, with a mile-a-minute hair raising finish that brings out most of the big Pacific fleet. One of the most impressive comedies MACK SENNETT has made in many months, with Andy Clyde, Daphne Pollard, Charles Irwin, Marjorie Beebe and Potsy O'leary all contributing to the fun.

"SCOTCH HIGHBALL" — Every PAUL TERRY-TOON tries to out-do its forerunners in laughs. Watch the record — "IRISH STEW", "FRIED CHICKEN", "JUMPING BEANS" and, now, "SCOTCH HIGHBALL". Every one faster and funnier. And more popular with the millions of cartoon fans.

"LOVE A LA MODE" — Love and laughs in the modern mode. A beautiful country club setting. Romance in the air. A big deal at stake. And then he picked the wrong girl! A MERMAID COMEDY that features Bernard Granville and lives up to the famous MERMAID standard for laughs and speed.

"MY HAREM" — Just two American boys trying to see the world. But they never dreamed of seeing anything like this. And they almost lose an eye or two before they trap the villains and save the day, and the harem beauties, for themselves. An IDEAL COMEDY featuring Lee Moran and James Bradbury, Jr.

"WON BY A NECK" — Wins in a walk away for LLOYD HAMILTON who has never had a funnier role in talking comedies than this new one where he plays a correspondence school detective who blunders his way through a thousand laughs to the capture of dangerous "One Shot Louie."

STILL COUNTS

Consistent delivery of quality short feature entertainment put Educational Pictures in command of their field over ten years ago . . . and has maintained them there through the succeeding years. And it's still there on the Educational release program, stronger than ever. Consistent quality, consistent fun, consistent profit for you.

"DON'T GIVE UP"—Buster and John West make their bow under the EDUCATIONAL comedy banner . . . and get a great big hand. "A lot of class", says the Film Daily. "A fine laugh tonic for the fans fed up on the old stuff. This is new—and good." It's a VANITY COMEDY, produced by AL CHRISTIE.

"A MEDLEY OF RIVERS"—LYMAN H. HOWE'S HODGE-PODGE—The merry mixture of sense and nonsense in every HODGE-PODGE subject makes this series unsurpassed for variety.

"THE BLUFFER"—Introducing a new series of one-reel MACK SENNETT BREVITIES, novelty comedies in natural colors that are a new departure in the single reel class. The biggest thing in "short short subjects" since sound.

"TAKE YOUR MEDICINE"—The second MACK SENNETT BREVITY, a laugh-fest with Andy Clyde, Patsy O'Leary, Vernon Dent and Sennett's new "find," Frank Eastman. "The color," says the Exhibitors Daily Review, "is the nearest approach to perfection this reviewer has seen."

"LOVE YOUR NEIGHBOR"—A TUXEDO COMEDY with Charlotte Greenwood that is one of the most spectacular comedy hits in years. Cleveland Plain Dealer says: "A slick piece of broad satire, beautifully played by Miss Greenwood and Dot Farley . . . excellent entertainment." An AL CHRISTIE Production.

"OUR NAGGING WIVES"—Ford Sterling joins the big parade of comedy stars that is making EDUCATIONAL'S new comedy program the biggest on record. Supported by John T. Murray, Ethel Sykes and Margaret Clarke, he turns in a new domestic tangle laugh-maker in the GAYETY COMEDY series that will make him many new followers. An AL CHRISTIE Production.

The advertisement above appeared in trade papers in September and October. Now read how Western Electric answers the first six questions.

Answering 6 of these questions

....to help you make the most profitable decision!!

QUESTION 1

Will I get regular service by thoroughly trained engineers to maintain high quality and prevent costly breakdowns?

ANSWER 1

Three years' actual operating experience has proved that obligatory preventive service for talking picture equipment is essential in maintaining patronage at most profitable level—essential even with apparatus of highest possible quality.

E. R. P. I.'s standards of service—maintained through regular inspections by 753 trained engineers operating in 279 territories—have proved a definite economy to the industry.

QUESTION 2

Has the company enough installations to support an efficient nation-wide service organization for the 10-year life of the contract?

ANSWER 2

The cost of selecting, training and maintaining a corps of engineers capable of delivering the highest standard of preventive service can be justified only by a company having a large number of installations.

E. R. P. I.'s 5000 installations—a number rapidly increasing—assures exhibitors of this essential service for the 10-year life of the contract.

QUESTION 3

Has the equipment a proved performance record of less than one interruption per thousand shows in several thousand theatres?

ANSWER 3

Program delays and breakdowns cause losses in returned admissions or disappointed patrons.

E. R. P. I.—by reason of its obligatory service which anticipates and prevents trouble—has reduced interruptions to 1-20 of 1 per cent of actual performances.

QUESTION 4

Will a real stock of spare parts be available nearby and a service engineer on call for immediate emergency service during all theatre hours?

ANSWER 4

If trouble comes, speed is essential.

Most of the 5000 theatres in the U. S. A. now equipped with Western Electric can be reached by expert assistance with a supply of parts within an hour.

This help comes from over 200 service points—engineers available day and night—$500,000 stock of parts at 38 branch headquarters.

QUESTION 5

Will the patrons of my theatre be satisfied that the quality of repraduction is the best and equal to that in de luxe theatres?

ANSWER 5

The public, by making comparisons, sets up its own standards. It sets them for the theatres it selects for its entertainment.

All the principal de luxe theatres throughout the world are Western Electric equipped—setting the standard for talking picture entertainment.

Small theatres equipping with the Western Electric Sound System can match in every way, the high quality found in de luxe houses—and so get their share of the increased profits from talking pictures.

QUESTION 6

Will I get engineering supervision of my installntion equal to that in de luxe thentres?

ANSWER 6

Theatres differ in architectural design and acoustics—necessitating expert engineering in each case to provide a profit-making installation.

The Bell Telephone Laboratories—the birthplace of the talking picture—surmounted all the difficulties incident to the successful operation of talking picture apparatus under varying conditions.

This vast store of experience comes to you through the same engineering organization responsible for over 7000 correct installations throughout the world.

Chicago—The theatre competition afforded by the whale's carcass at the Michigan Ave. bridge will be ended this week. In its six weeks' engagement old Leviathan grossed almost $200,000, playing to more than 500,000 paid admissions. It was necessary to re-embalm the cadaver twice a week. It costs $1,500 a treatment for the fluids, utensils and craftsman. The latter was in the habit of repairing to a Wacker Drive speakie immediately his job was done and remaining there until it was time to repeat. After next week he won't have to come out at all. Or maybe he won't find it necessary to go in any more.

Chaplin Out for The Dough; U. A. Publix in Jam?

Hollywood—Charlie Chaplin plans to disregard affiliated theatres and will book "City Lights" into independent houses everywhere. Whichever operator offers the heaviest sugar for the film will get the play dates, although it is difficult to figure how independents can outbid the chains, provided the latter want the picture. One house or ten in a city, it doesn't matter to Charlie, so long as the do-re-mi is okay.

This may get United Artists into a jam with Publix, it is stated here, due to that firm's preferential booking arrangement with United Artists.

The picture will have its world premiere New Year's Eve at the Los Angeles, being built by the Gumbiner interests on a site owned personally by William Fox.

What effect the U. A.-Fox jam will have on Chaplin's plan is problematical.

DeForrest Asks $2,770,000 In Western Electric Suit

Suit for $2,770,000 has been instituted by Dr. Lee DeForrest against Western Electric, Electrical Research Products and John E. Otterson, charging they blocked the deal for sale of DeForrest Phonofilm to William Fox. The latter, it is charged, was to have paid Dr. DeForrest $5,250,000 for stock of DeForrest Phonofilm Corp., and employ him for a period of five years at an annual salary of $50,000. Several options were taken by Fox, but were not exercised due to the alleged interference of the defendants.

U. A. Films Can't Play Chain Houses in Future, Is Edict Issued By Company

Los Angeles—Opening guns in what is expected to be one of the most sensational theatre battles in film history, with Joseph M. Schneck, Howard Hughes, Harold B. Franklin and Sol Lesser joining forces to do battle with Fox West Coast, have been fired with a declaration of open war by United Artists. Other distributors probably will align themselves with the new combination in the battle, some think.

"Fox theatres hereafter cannot play United Artists pictures at any price," Joseph M. Schenck states, in announcing that all company members have signed a "declaration of independence" against what they consider unjust dictation on film rentals.

The company is prepared to go into tents, armories and various halls in an effort to break what it terms an "arrogant monopoly." Harold B. Franklin, it is said, is coming into the coalition to make the Lesser-Gore houses the nucleus of a Coast chain. The Hughes millions also will be brought into play to build up the opposition.

The "declaration" was signed by Schenck, Charlie Chaplin, Norma Talmadge, Eddie Cantor, Al Jolson, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Gloria Swanson, D. W. Griffith, Ronald Colman and Sam Goldwyn, who personally issued "a declaration of independence."

"An unbearable condition of affairs forces us to drastic action against Fox West Coast Theatres," the proclamation said. "That organization is an arrogant monopoly and has made demands upon us which we cannot and will not accept.

"Hereafter, no picture made by us as United Artists shall be shown in Fox theatres as long as that organization maintains its present greedy, short-sighted policy.

"Our quarrel with the Fox organization is simply this: that organization is attempting to dictate to the makers of pictures just how much it shall pay for pictures regardless of who makes them or how much effort has gone into them. We cannot make the kind of pictures we want if the monopoly intends to pay us less and charge the public as much as ever.

"We will not be dictated to. We do not do this arrogantly, but to fight for our rights to make finer pictures. We will show these pictures in tents, armories, halls or wherever they can be shown on the Pacific Coast, but we will not show them in theatres of the Fox West Coast trust organized to stifle our individual endeavor and that of all other artists and producers."

Schenck declares that Fox West Coast made $5,000,000 last year because the company didn't pay producers enough for film.

It's a Business

Hollywood—Although H. B. Franklin and J. J. Franklin are no longer connected with Fox West Coast Theatres, they maintain offices in Grauman's Chinese theatre. Rather unusual that plans, which will undoubtedly develop into direct competition to West Coast, are formulated in a theatre owned and operated by that company.

However, in these days of economy, whoever pays the rent is a welcome tenant, regardless of his affiliations. At least it seems that way.

Lichtman to Quit U. A. and Become Producer on Own?

Al Lichtman, according to report, will either produce pictures on his own or join Warners in an important capacity. These two stories regarding the present vice-president in charge of sales at United Artists are current. Lichtman admitted neither on Thursday to MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Likewise, he didn't deny them.

If Lichtman does withdraw from United Artists, the move would not come as a complete surprise. It has been reported persistently that he is considering new pastures and that his inclination is to enter production.

He leaves for California next week to confer with Joseph M. Schenck. Announcement of future plans may be made during his stay on the Coast. At Warners, reports concerning Lichtman are denied.

Hughes' Fingers Hover Over the Cash Register

It isn't off, but it isn't a deal—yet. That buy into Art Cinema by Howard Hughes is expected to go through as per schedule, but no money has changed hands. That, in turn, means officially that the papers still have to be signed.

In the interim, Hughes, it is reliably learned, is whipping his financial affairs into shape in order to produce the necessary cash to swing the purchase, the figure being variously reported from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000.

Reports that when Hughes definitely enters the Art Cinema picture, Joseph M. Schenck will bow out are incorrect. The plan provides for Hughes to actively handle production, with Schenck supervising.

HEAVY THINKERS AND THEIR LONG DISTANCE BRAINSTORMS

THEY park in New York, the disciples of budgeteering, scan the reports of their divisional managers in the field and, through the twin privileges of title and power, ram down the throats of their managers long distance conceptions of circuit operation.

So many dollars times so many houses equal so much money. The cost sheets give up their totals, the machine is set, out go the orders and there you have it. Nothing to this business of running houses in wholesale. Never mind contacts with the public. They'll part with their money. Aren't pictures the entertainment of the masses? It's the system, boys, that counts. Nothing else.

The Divine Right of Chains

MANAGERS? Robots, office boys, janitors. They don't mean a thing. They're dumb. O.K. to check tickets, to see that torn carpets don't bring law suits, to make certain the lights go on and off as defined in the per-minute schedule sent out by chain headquarters.

Beyond that, nothing. We'll book the houses. We'll give them their shows. Manuals from the home office will tell 'em what to do and how. All you've got to impart to the palpitating masses is the name of the attraction and they'll batter down the doors of hell in order to squeeze in. It's a cinch.

Sanity Adds An "In"

AND so they are doing. One national string whose reputation, at least, would lead to belief its operators know better is today slashing salaries with something akin to insanity. One chap, up in five comfortable figures a year, has been fired. He cost too much. A $40 a week stripling has been given that job.

Yet this chain forgets the thousands—nobody knows quite how many—their veteran has saved them over the years in that city. Nothing isolated about this yarn; there are plenty more exactly like it.

Long Line to the Budget

THE same chain supplies its numerically strong outfit with manuals from New York. They look like the goods, too. Also all advertising material and a fixed sum of money for each house to spend on weekly exploitation.

A grand idea and the beau geste de luxe toward budget and system. It eliminates speculation. Week by week headquarters know to a dime what operation is to cost. The auditors have a swell time and the bankers return to their Wall Street hibernations.

Dust, Ashes and a Fetish

STRANGE isn't it then that grosses continue to bite the dust? Can the smart boys in New York be wrong after all?

Not by a mouthful. They merely haven't the foresight to understand that mechanized operation is taking the heart out of show business; that the incentive of the manager, the man who understands his public better than all of his executive superiors combined, is being stifled; that they are tearing down manpower when they should be coaxing and nursing its development; that their fetish for budgets and systems is murdering ambition and initiative.

Fifi Kisses Cop; Cop Is Busted; Fifi Very Sorry

Philadelphia—Traffic Patrolman Robert Taggert, stationed in front of the Fox, made the front pages when Fifi Dorsay kissed him on her way into the theatre to make her first personal appearance in her week's engagement at the Fox.

Taggert made the front pages again on Saturday, when Director of Public Safety Lemuel Schofield "busted" him for his participation in this little bit of less majeste. The director was all burned up at the incident.

"It is a very serious matter," he said, "and the entire matter will be thoroughly investigated." Meanwhile, Taggert has been sent back to pounding the beat.

Fifi landed in town Friday morning, all primed for a publicity stunt. Trailed by photographers, she declared that she would bestow a kiss on some deserving Philadelphia citizen in front of the theatre. Leaving her automobile, the dark and handsome six-foot Taggert attracted her attention.

Fifi snuggled up to Taggert and the photographers snuggled up to both of them. "Are you skeered, monsieur," she inquired.

"Perfectly willing to accommodate a lady," responded the gallant Taggert—and the cameras clicked. The pictures made most front pages and the Fox got a great publicity break.

Then the blow-off came. Schofield saw

Production Head Said to Have Received Ultimatum to Slash Expenses

Possible retirement of B. P. Schulberg as Paramount production head is seen in the series of conferences held recently in New York, with Schulberg called on the carpet in the matter of studio overhead.

The holding down of negative costs at the Paramount New York studio is the reported reason for the summons of Schulberg to New York, where he is said to have been asked why the Hollywood studios could not pare production costs. The matter is said to have been brought to a climax by the low cost of "Laughter," with Schulberg declared to have been told he should be able to make pictures of similar quality as inexpensive as that was produced. This, he is reported to have told executives, is impossible on the Coast, after which an "either or else" ultimatum is said to have been issued.

Schulberg has been quoted as saying that he intends to retire in about a year, and this is declared in line with the reported ultimatum. Either Walter Wanger or David Selznick would step into Schulberg's post, if that becomes fact, it is learned.

Attending the sessions held recently in New York, were Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, S. R. Kent, Schulberg, Wanger and Sam Jaffe.

Schulberg already has returned to the Coast, while Jaffe left New York Thursday.

Famous Players Canadian Chain To Prune Houses

Toronto—Famous Players Canadian Corp. is reliably reported as on the verge of pruning operations with several deadwood houses to be lopped off.

Most of the houses slated for the discard are from the wreckage of the ill-fated Trans-Canada legit chain, a post-war error on the part of ambitious Canadian showmen. Some of them date to the days of the Ambrose Small circuit.

Schulberg Denies

Hollywood — "I will never retire," B. P. Schulberg told Motion Picture News in denying New York report that he is leaving Paramount. Production costs will be the same as last year, with bigger productions planned, he says.

Huston Got Big Raise—Via the Hollywood Style

Chicago—Hollywood not only raised the Lincoln whiskers which ramble over Walter Huston's chin, northward to the temples, in the D. W. Griffith picture, but it also raised the star himself a full three and one-half inches—the difference in his own and the real Abraham Lincoln's altitude.

"What," he asked, referring to the whiskers, "is the use of raising your own when a couple of other fellows can do the job for you so much better?"

As for the three and a half inches of artificial altitude supplied him, that was accomplished by a pair of specially built boots which, though they served their professional purpose, were a little tough on the Huston dogs, the actor admitted.

Nine O'Clock Curfew

Huston arrived here en route to his old home in Toronto. From there he will proceed to London and the continent on vacation.

Huston enjoyed making the Lincoln picture despite the exactions it levied on him, he said. "I had to get up at five every morning; spend two hours and a half adjusting the whiskers; give up golf for work, and be in bed by nine every night," he related. "But, just the same, it was fun making that picture."

INSIDERS'

THERE'S a new king occupying the film throne these days and his name is economy. The headliners who have been fighting for these many years for the throne spot have suddenly diverted their individual energies to the new white-haired boy, and take it from this Insider, the crowned head has plenty of devoted subjects.

The wisdom of it all might be questioned. You might even rant against it, if you're one of those wise boys who see how foolish the spectacle is, but, like it or not, economy is wielding the sceptre.

The big national chains are the latest to bend the knee before the monarch. Slashes have been made and more—far more—are on the wing. Not only have orders gone out to reduce the overhead on stationery and stamps. Ushers are about to feel the keen edge of economy's axe and, the rumblings go, managers.

The Conference Gag

The circuits have been doing some conferring, it seems, and the decision, whether arrived at individually or collectively, is to cut—and cut until it hurts.

The proverbial bad times are blamed. Pictures don't seem to be clicking as they used to, although theatre operators will tell you that business is slowly dragging itself out of the mire on to more solid ground.

The circuit heads are really in a tough spot. Their theatres are not pulling in the money expected of them, yet negative costs still roam through the clouds. That means that their companies are holding a sieve with uncomfortably large holes at either end.

In Reverse

Putting it another way:

No matter what Hollywood does and regardless of what the Coast may spend on pictures, it's up to the theatre department and the sales division to pull their companies through. New York is pretty much disgusted with Hollywood, has been for years, but probably never more so than at this very moment.

Take the attitude of one of the big chain operators who unburdened himself to a group of sympathetic listeners the other night. His story ran something like this, the ideas being his and the words this Insider's:

"We stay up all night, breaking our backs and our brains in an effort to slash expense. And we succeed. To the extent of $100,000 a month insofar as our own circuit is concerned. That's $1,200,000 a year, a lot of money no matter how you look at it.

"What happens to that effort? The studio—I'm speaking of our own now—goes haywire on a couple of pictures, steps all over its budget and before you can look around, the savings effected in theatre operation are snuffed out.

"Imagine this, if you can. I was on the lot not so long ago. Hundreds of extras were waiting for their cue. The director was waiting for his leading man. Eventually he appeared. The director looked him over and then went crazy.

" 'You've got the wrong decoration to go with that sword. Have it fixed. Italian soldiers didn't wear that sort of doo-dad during the war.'

"So back to the dressing room went the lead, had the adjustment made and reappeared. Again it was wrong. More frothings from the director. Then the director threw up his hands, said something or other about his inspiration having evaporated and dismissed the entire troupe until the next morning.

"I don't know what that burlesque costs us but it was tragic enough to add approximately $5,000 to the cost of the picture. When the production was completed, I sat through it twice searching like hell for that scene, and I don't think a shot even appeared."

By this time, the circuit head was so apopleptic, he couldn't continue. He had, however, gone far enough.

The Hollywood Folly

Stories of the face on the cutting room floor are legion. Everybody knows them from the presidents of big organizations clear down the line. When the profits roll on, however, the inclination is to let well enough alone, the Hollywood maelstrom being what it is. But when theatre business topples as costs continue rising, it becomes generally recognized that something has to be done about it. And something will.

The bankers are asking some questions and a number of industry folks are becoming embarassed. This industry can't get along without Wall Street today and, therefore, whether it would have it that way or not, when the minions of the narrow canyon insist upon action, it follows action will be forthcoming.

The laugh in the whole situation is the picayune manner which that action is assuming. Stenographers and office help are being fired. Where not actually discharged, they face cuts in salaries. Theatre managers, one of the lifebloods of the business, confront the same condition. Yet Hollywood—aloof, alone and beyond control—rides on an eternal crest of the waves.

If it weren't so maddening, it would be funny.

"Von's" Sideline

Josef Von Sternberg doesn't limit his activities to wielding a megaphone but he also serves as manager and counselor for Marlene Dietrich, German player whom he "discovered" in Berlin.

Miss Dietrich is at present working on "Dishonored" which Von Sternberg is also directing. All production stills and publicity photographs of this talker are okayed by Von Sternberg before they are released. The director goes over all the pictures and chooses those he thinks suitable.

In the Bag

Pathe to RKO. Auditing and other details alone remain for the sale to be made. As The Insiders and their pater, MOTION PICTURE NEWS, have told you from time to time, Pathe, under the deal, will remain as is. The company will serve as a feeder production unit for Radio and strengthen the position of that organization's theatres in point of quality product. When you appreciate the fact that RKO is being operated primarily as a theatre organization first, with production as a necessary but allied enterprise, you will understand more easily the why of the Pathe purchase.

This is the set-up unless one of those famous last minute changes upset calculations. That doesn't seem probable now, for the understanding reached between Elisha Walker and David Sarnoff has progressed too far.

What may happen insofar as Pathe and its bankers are concerned is a readjustment of price. Seven million is the reported sum, but the rising popularity of Ann Harding, Constance Bennett and Helen Twelvetrees may alter the figures upward. There is also Pathe News and the large, but minority, interests in Du Pont-Pathe, which must not be overlooked. They're valuable.

Amazing, But True

Nero played a fiddle while Rome burned down. Now listen to this:

A department head in a very large organization one day discovered the store room had gone dry on pencils. He speeded the purchase on the outside with fifteen cents dug out of his personal jeans. Shortly thereafter he sent through a voucher.

Elsewhere in the same building sat an executive, commissioned to raise a tidy sum in millions. The company needed money, and money was not easy to get. That executive's job, therefore, was a major operation.

But he wasn't too busy, nor too smallish, to stop sufficiently long to get a three hundred word letter off his chest, returning the voucher to the department head and advising that no petty cash slips could be approved unless they were made out in proper requisition form.

If you conclude that this man ultimately failed to bring in the money he was assigned to get, you surmise correctly.

"Cimarron" Will Tell

With "Check and Double Check" off to a flying start, plus Joe Schnitzer's emphatic statement that there is to be no shake-up in the production line-up at Radio, "Cimarron," white hope of the Radio crowd, is expected to definitely clinch matters and regain for Bill Le Baron the ground he has lost.

The stories have been many anent dissatisfaction over the manner in which the studio has been operated, most of them centering around pictures, their cost and their quality. The prolonged presence of Schnitzer in Hollywood is generally regarded as significant, but what many don't know is that Joe is understood to be doing all that he knows how to straighten matters out with Le Baron continuing at the helm.

The Amos 'n' Andy opus, while far from a production achievement, in its early stages looks like enough of a freak to return plenty of profit to Radio. That, of course, won't hurt Le Baron's standing, for, regardless of who brought the radio team into talkers, the studio turned out the picture and Le Baron heads that studio.

At any rate, with $1,000,000 into the bank roll already, "Cimarron" will tell the story. If advance reports from Hollywood are borne out by the completed picture, it appears now that Le Baron's troubles will be ended.

BANKERS' woes over production costs have yet to meet a yarn that beats this one, reported from Hollywood:

The story concerns "Whoopee," Sam Goldwyn and Flo Ziegfeld and the particular scene in the picture where the show girls, bedecked in Indian costumes and head dresses, parade a la fashion show before the camera.

Feathers for the regalia were in demand—flocks of them. Ziegfeld, it is so rumored, insisted on real eagle feathers. Goldwyn, on goose feathers figuring they would be ample for photographic purposes. But realism had its inning and the eagles won out.

The decision, however, meant this:

Wires were shot out all over the country and a virtual corner in eagle feathers resulted. Each feather, some Coast statistician dopes it, cost anywhere from $2 to $10, dependent on the supply and demand, there being plenty of the latter in this particular case.

What this same statistical soul didn't compute was what the Ziegfeld fetish for accuracy added to the production sheets.

"Whoopee," it is necessary to add, is understood to have cost $1,200,000 to turn out.

Razors and a Close Shave

Through fast thinking on the part of one of the musicians in a night club orchestra here, a film celeb, whose blond curls are admired by women everywhere, is still alive and unharmed.

The film celeb who has been going steadily with a dark-eyed beauty stepped out with a new flame the other night and was "caught" at the night club. The black-eyed damsel started to pull a knife when the pair met on the dance floor and no telling what might have happened had the fiddle player not intervened. As it was only a few persons saw the near fracas.

The pay-off is the girl friend was stepping with her latest heart-throb.

Eventually the production went through the mill and emerged a terrific flop. Before its completion, the producer was called East. ## M-G-M Lets Out Music Staff at Coast Studios

Hollywood—Because filmusicals are out of favor, temporarily, at least, and on account of the tremendous overhead for maintaining an inactive department, the entire music staff at M-G-M has been let out with the exception of Martin Broones, who formerly was in charge. Broones will be transferred to another department. The company has no more musicals on its current schedule.

Among those to be released are James Dyrenforth, Arthur Freed, Carroll Gibbons, Clifford Grey, Howard Johnson, Joseph Myers, Oscar Straus, Herbert Stothart and Harry Woods, composers.

Dr. William Axt, Oscar Radin and Frederick Stahlberg, conductors, were also released.

Musical arrangers who were let out include the following: Wayne Allen, Hugo Frey, Ray Heindorf, Arthur Lange, Charles Maxwell and Larry Shay.

No, Sir, Hughes Not Buying Sites; Not Even Hades

Hollywood—Howard Hughes denies that he intended buying the Warner studio property here, as was reported. Hughes said he was not planning to buy any local studio at the present time and that he expected to make his next talker, "The Front Page," at the Metropolitan Studios, where he is now located.

One Hollywood statistician who has been checking the Hughes rumor of late states that the L. A. Public Library and the Hollywood police station are the only structures which the maker of "Hell's Angels" has not been reported buying.

Contract, Banquet, Labor and Legislation to Be Highlights

Philadelphia—M. A. Lightman will be elected president of the M. P. T. O. A. at the eleventh annual convention of the organization which opens a three-day session here on Monday. About 350 exhibitors from various sections of the nation will attend.

M. A. Lightman

The slate of officers which will direct organization affairs for the next 12 months has been set and the election here will be of a perfunctory nature. Other officers slated for reelection are: Ed Fay, chairman of the board; M. J. O'Toole, secretary, and Jay Emanuel, treasurer. Regional vice-presidents are: Charles Picquet, Willard Patterson, R. R. Biechele and Frank C. Walker. The latter, it is said, will withdraw from the slate, as a result of the sale of the Comerford chain to Paramount.

Contract a Highlight

Labor and legislation are expected to occupy a prominent part in the discussions, as will the proposed new standard contract. All exhibitors, regardless of whether they are members, have been invited to attend the sessions.

Among distributor executives who are scheduled to address the meetings are: Adolph Zukor, Harley L. Clarke, S. R. Kent and Al Lichtman.

Fraternal delegates will be present from the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

The banquet is Tuesday evening, Armistice Day. Among those who will speak on that evening are: Major General Smedley Butler, commandant of the Marine Corps; Gov. John S. Fisher of Pennsylvania; David Stern, proprietor of the Philadelphia Record. Others will include executives of the motion picture business, one of the officials of the Pennsylvania railroad. It is also expected that Otis Skinner will address the convention and speak at the dinner. George Arliss also may attend.

The convention program in detail, excluding the many social functions for the women, follows:

Monday, Nov. 10

Opens 10:30 A.M.

Opening address by Lewen Pizor, President of M.P.T.O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, and Delaware.

Address of welcome by Philip H. Gadsen, President, Chamber of Commerce, Philadelphia.

Response by Frank C. Walker, counsel, M.P.T.O.A.

Introduction of M. A. Lightman, president, M.P.T.O.A. by L. Pizor.

Formal opening of the convention and address by Mr. Lightman.

the pictures and suffered an immediate rise in temperature. Inasmuch as the various departments of the city government have co-operated in various amusement publicity stunts, his wrath seemed a little out of proportion, but the Dorsay incident came just as the director was planning a drastic shake-up in the police force and Taggert was caught in the midst of the director's anger. The news broke on Sunday that eight captains and an inspector had been demoted all over the city, most of them being broken to the rank of patrolman.

While the first publicity got plenty of space, Fifi and the Fox company has been evidently fearing that sympathy generated for Taggert's "jam" might react unfavorably, and have been trying to get Taggert—who is a married man with two children, thus having a domestic angle to worry him—reinstated to his post. They deny that Taggert had been "planted," stating that he was the innocent victim of Fifi's exuberance, and a press agent stunt that had a kick-back. Fifi declares that she will testify before the police trial board in Taggert's favor.

Welding of Warners and First National into one organization, begun two years ago when Warners acquired control of the Stanley Co. of America, bringing with it control of First National, takes another decisive step Monday when sales forces of the two firms are merged. Details of the plan have been worked out by Sam E. Morris, vice-president of Warners.

The move, which means the passing of First National as a distributing organization, is made in the face of the government's suit to prevent combination of the two companies under the Clayton Act. The suit now is pending. Both the Warner and First National brands of pictures are being continued, but speculation is rife as to how long the brands will be kept separate.

The consolidation, influenced by the bankers, will result in widespread economy in operations and is designed to reach into the studios as well. Denied last week in Hollywood, it appears that Warner production activity, now centered in the Sunset Boulevard studio, will be concentrated in the more commodious First National plant in Burbank under a system of supervisors, details of which are outlined elsewhere in this edition.

Speculation exists over the disposal of the Warner and First National publicity and advertising departments, now maintained separately with A. P. Waxman handling Warners and S. Charles Einfeld handling First National. A consolidation in that direction is likewise considered inevitable, although it is stated the matter has not as yet been given consideration.

Two Divisions

Under the sales plan, the country is divided into two sales divisions with Claude Ezell, Warner sales chief, made eastern general sales manager, and Ned E. Depinet, First National, made western general sales manager.

Norman Moray, formerly branch manager at Chicago, will move into the home office in New York City to assume the position of sales manager of Vitaphone Varieties.

Morris has established two new metropolitan areas in Philadelphia and Chicago, in addition to the already existing one in New York City. Under the re-alignment in New York, George Balsdon remains in charge of the metropolitan area; Nat Beyer is sales manager of New Jersey; Harry Decker, sales manager of Brooklyn; and Eddie Goldstein, sales manager of New York City.

In the wholesale shakeup, Nat Beyer (Vitagraph, which is the Warner distributing unit), manager at Albany, has been transferred to the New Jersey exchange, replacing J. Herzog (Vitagraph). Ben Kalmenson (F. N.) gets the Albany branch. Harry Decker (Vitagraph) succeeds Gus Solomon (F. N.) as metropolitan sales manager in Greater New York.

Goldstein New York Chief

Ed Goldstein (Vitagraph) takes over the combined New York exchanges, Joe Vergesslich formerly was First National manager. J. S. Hebrew (Vitagraph) has been called to the home office for special work, with W. J. Heenan (F. N.) getting the Philadelphia post.

J. T. Ezell (Vitagraph) is Atlanta manager, with Fred M. Jack (F. N.) given the Dallas branch, with Truly Wildman (Vitagraph) and Joe Luckett (F. N.) to do special work out of the home office. Thomas P. Spry (F. N.) is Boston manager, with H. E. Elder (Vitagraph) transferred to the home office. H. E. Seed (Vitagraph) gets the Buffalo branch, with F. J. McCarthy (F. N.) transferred to the home office.

Other Switches in Staffs

F. P. Bryan (F. N.) is Charlotte manager, M. W. Davis (Vitagraph) being transferred to the home office. R. F. Cloud (Vitagraph) is manager at Cincinnati, Paul E. Krieger (F. N.) is transferred to Indianapolis with Floyd Brown (F. N.) being brought to the home office, and H. F. Neill (Vitagraph) made sales manager at Chicago.

J. C. Fishman is Cleveland manager, with Walter J. Brandt (F. N.) transferred to the home office. C. E. Almy formerly managed the Vitagraph branch.

Charles Gilmour (Vitagraph) is Denver manager. J. H. Ashby was First National manager. E. J. Tilton (F. N.) gets the Des Moines office. Mike Comer was former Vitagraph manager. F. E. North (F. N.) takes the branch at Detroit, with J. V. Allen (Vitagraph) transferred to the home office.

N. C. Sinift (Vitagraph) gets the Kansas City office, and William Warner (F. N.) goes to the home office. Henry Lustig (Vitagraph) is assigned the Los Angeles office, and N. H. Brower (F. N.) is transferred to Seattle, where A. H. Huott was Vitagraph and Al Oxtoby First National manager. H. D. Hearn (F. N.) retains the Memphis office, where Vitagraph has had no exchange.

R. T. Smith (Vitagraph) gets the Milwaukee branch, with C. K. Olson transferred to the home office. L. E. (Nicky) Goldhammer (Vitagraph) is assigned the branch at Minneapolis with W. C. Brimmer (F. N.) transferred to Portland, where Pete Stewart (F. N.) and M. F. Keller (Vitagraph) were managers.

J. A. Davis (Vitagraph) is New Haven manager. M. H. Keleher formerly managed the First National branch. F. Goodrow (Vitagraph) gets the branch at New Orleans, where L. Conner managed the First National exchange.

J. H. Rohde (Vitagraph) is Oklahoma City manager. T. O. Beyrle formerly managed there for First National. George W. Taif (F. N.) is manager at Omaha, where M. A. Raymon had the First National branch. R. H. Haines (F. N.) is given the Pittsburgh branch, with H. S. Dunn (Vitagraph) transferred to the home office.

William F. Gordon (F. N.) has the Salt Lake branch, where M. H. Gustavson formerly was Vitagraph manager. Charles Muehlman (F. N.) remains at San Francisco. M. A. Walsh formerly managed for Vitagraph. A. M. Weinberger (Vitagraph) gets the St. Louis branch. D. P. Rathbone formerly managed for First National.

Carl Lesserman (F. N.) is manager at Chicago, with Norman Moray transferred to the home office as sales manager of Vitaphone Varieties. Robert Smeltzer (F. N.) is Washington manager, Ralph E. Binns (F. N.) is sales manager at the branch.

Warners secured control of First National two years ago through acquisition of the Stanley Co. At the time, Fox had a 28 per cent interest in the company, which blocked any plans of a merger. However, when William Fox experienced financial difficulties, he sold his interest to Warners for a reputed price of $10,000,000.

A Break

Gus Solomon, Brooklyn and Long Island sales manager for First National, married Grace Cohen on Thursday at noon.

At 1 o'clock while at his bride's house, he received notification that, under the consolidation move at Warners-First National, his job had been aholished.

The Fool 'Em Business

The press department of Vitaphone has been instructed not to supply newspaper reviewers with the running time of its short subjects. No explanation is given.

So reviewers call Warner's own theatres on Broadway on the phone and invariably get the information with neither delay nor hesitation.

Entire Sales Department in Shakeup; Economy Is Basis of Move

Form B. & E., Ltd.

London—Jack Buchanan, stage and screen star, who has made pictures in Hollywood, and Harry D. Edwards are forming a producing company here, to be known as "B. & E., Ltd."

Making Foreign Versions

Hollywood—Foreign versions of "Hell's Angels" are being made by Caddo Prod. Joseph Monocure March is in charge of production.

F. N.-Publix Jam

San Antonio, Tex.—First National has cancelled its contract locally with Publix. The franchise has been obtained by the Empire theatre, an independent house. The franchise includes a number of Warner Vitaphone pictures.

Hess Keeps Wires Humming in Attempt To Win Allied O. K. of Illinois Zoning

Hunter's Process

Hollywood—C. Roy Hunter, Universal's technical chief, has developed a new wide screen color process. This new process uses standard film and the images which are printed two on a frame, are of different colors. One frame will be, for example, all red, the next green, yellow, etc. These frames running through the projector travel twice as fast as the ordinary film and the color filters attached to the lens, help to bring out the colors. Hunter has been working on the process for several months and has finally gotten it to the stage where it is practical and can be used with standard film at a cost much less than ordinary color film, he says.

Protection Hits Cleveland Skids

Cleveland—Protection has hit the skids in Cleveland and the exhibitor association has pulled out of the conferences. Members said they did not want to disturb existing contracts, indicating they will resume negotiations in time to complete zoning schedules before the 1931-32 selling season starts.

Most of the product for the present season has been bought, it was pointed out, and although most of them have a retroactive clause covering any schedules worked out, the local association believes it should let well enough alone.

Meanwhile, efforts are being made to zone the state outside of Cleveland. P. J. Wood, business manager of the state association, and Martin Smith are representing unaffiliated exhibitors.

Zoning Is Set in Philadelphia Area

Philadelphia—Satisfactory arrangements have been concluded with distributors on the question of zoning for this territory. With the exception of several upstate houses, particularly at Harrisburg and Reading, protection issue is settled here.

Exhibitors at Harrisburg and Reading declare that a better arrangement had been made by them with the distributors than through the committee of the M. P. T. O. A. The case of these exhibitors will be considered separately, it was announced.

The program of the national convention of exhibitors, to be held in Philadelphia on Nov. 10, 11 and 12, was received and the local body pledged to aid the program.

RKO Sues Exhibitor

Boston—RKO has filed a creditor's petition against the Premier theatre of Norwood, Mass., alleging that it owes RKO $3,825.

Offers Independents Concessions But Saperstein Turns Thumbs Down

Chicago—Gabriel Hess has been bargaining with Aaron Saperstein by wire and phone in an effort to gain independent approval of the Chicago and Illinois zoning plan, with "no sale" registered to date. One report had it that Hess offered "to throw out anything in the proposed plan which the independents found objectionable" in order to gain the Allied unit's okeh of zoning for the territory.

Gabriel Hess

Saperstein has stated that his organization will refuse to approve a zoning plan in any form whatever and that his organization is not interested in concessions made or offered by the Film Board so long as a continuing zoning committee is authorized by the plan. Saperstein has charged that independent interests are not fairly represented on the proposed continuing zoning committee, and never could be. It would be a simple matter, he says, for this committee to reinstate any and all clauses dropped from the zoning plan in order to gain independent approval of it, once the plan and the committee become operative.

A. Saperstein

Meanwhile, zoning and protection is administered here just as it always has been in the past. This has led proponents of the rejected plan to claim that it is operative here. Actually, it is not, although theoretically much of it is. The explanation lies in the fact that the plan embraces the old, unwritten system in its entirety, but whatever it added to that system is being ignored in all contracts—even in those of the circuit and circuit-affiliated theatres. For this reason it may be definitely stated that there is still no written or legal system of release and protection in Illinois.

Distinction

Philadelphia—The only picture player ever to become governor of a state is the distinction of Gov.-Elect Gifford Pinchot, who was one of the few Republicans engaged in important campaign fights who won out at the election Tuesday. Gov. Pinchot appears in "South Seas," a picture which he made with Mrs. Pinchot and their son. Talking Picture Epics distributes the attraction.

Showmanship Gold Mine

That's what we call the Managers' Round Table Club six months' index which is included in this week's issue of the club section, starting on page 55. This index includes a full listing of the exploitation, advertising and publicity activities of the thousands of Club members whose showmanship has earned them world-wide recognition.

The six months' index, properly used, constitutes a genuine encyclopedia of modern showmanship. Take advantage of the tried and successful activities of the showmen-members of our Round Table Club.

Protection Aims Spell Ruination?

Columbus — Granting of protection demands of the four major companies which he says control the exhibition situation in 30 large cities of the state will spell ruination to scores of independents, declares Pete Wood, business manager of the Ohio exhibitor unit.

"Until you know how this protection matter affects you," he writes in sounding the call for the annual convention Nov. 18 and 19, "you are in no position to definitely decide on what you can afford to pay for film. And if you sign any contracts without having this knowledge, you are apt to pay prices which will eventually prove to be unreasonable."

Chains Control Only Few Keys

Atlanta—Georgia is one state in the Union which is singularly free from distributor chain domination, with but a few keys in the state controlled by chains.

Paramount Publix and its affiliates are the No. 1 circuit, operating the Paramount and Keith's Georgia here, the Modjeska and Imperial, Augusta; Ritz, Strand and Capitol, Macon, and the Lucas and Odeon, Savannah.

Chains Hit Hard

Radio-Keith-Orpheum now has the Capitol here, as a result of its deal with Universal, and Loew's has the Palace and Grand. Fox has the Fox, which is declared to be running in the red for plenty.

The Fox, according to opinion of local showmen, is fully five years ahead of the town, which makes it hard for the house to get by and doubly tough for other first run theatres.

Employment Crisis Ending on Coast as Studios Swing Into Production Stride

Another "Nurse" Film

Hollywood — The title must ring pleasantly on M-G-M ears. Having recently finished "War Nurse," the studio is preparing for just plain "Nurse." Denison Clift is writing the script and dialogue.

Newsreel House Ends First Year; Take Is $475,000

Fifty-two weeks under its present policy has netted the 598-seat Newsreel Theatre in New York a gross of about $475,000. On a flat, all-time scale of 25 cents a throw, this means the house has played to 1,900,000 paid admissions during the first year of its operation.

The house, formerly the Embassy, threw open its doors under the newsreel plan on November 2, 1929, and clicked from the outset. The attendant publicity that followed in its wake indicated that other cities through out the country would follow the same idea. As a matter of fact, several did, but failed to make a go of the plan.

Now the fox organization is again talking about a chain of newsreel houses. Truman H. Talley, general manager of the Movietone News, who is currently in Berlin launching a German edition of the reel, declares houses will be opened in Berlin with others planned for London, Paris and Sydney. Other cities are reported to be under consideration as well.

$3,000 High for Big House; $5,000 Low in Smaller

Chicago—The handicaps under which the Fox Monroe operates, largely because of its out-of-the-way location, are illustrated by a booking made by the Castle theatre this week. The picture booked is "Devil with Women," which had its first Loop run at the Monroe this week. The Castle will take the picture immediately after the Monroe. If the Monroe's gross this week exceeds $3,000 it will have done splendidly; whereas, if the Castle, with 650 seats less than the Monroe, does under $5,000 in its first week with the same picture, "Devil with Women" will be considered a flop at the smaller house. But it is a practical certainty that the $5,000 mark will be reached.

The Castle adjoins the so-called "world's busiest corner," State and Madison streets. One block south and one west of it is the Monroe, not far as distances go, but a world apart as far as box-office draw is concerned.

Situation Better Than Last Year; Warners, F. N. Resuming

Hollywood—While production activities and employment were extremely light during the summer months, studio activity is picking up rapidly and, with the exception of two studios now closed, production is ahead of last year at this time.

Warners and First National will remain closed for another month, at which time they will embark on a heavy schedule. Warners' studio was closed at this time last year, but First National was open with four pictures in work.

When the studio reopens, Warners will adopt the supervisor system of production, instead of the former plan, under which Darryl Zanuck was overseer of every production. The system will be similar to that employed at M-G-M, with Zanuck occupying a job identical with Irving Thalberg's.

Three supervisors will be appointed, two of whom are Ray Enright and Lucien Hubbard and an undetermined third party.

Busy at Paramount

Paramount has seven companies working, with four preparing to start. Fox has completed 24 of its scheduled 48 features, which is about the same percentage of completed pictures as last year.

M-G-M has nine talkers in work, plus five foreign versions, making about six more units at work than at this time last year.

The Pathe studios are quiet, but plan to resume work soon to meet schedules. RKO has five companies active, all on a more ambitious scale than were the four companies working at this time last fall.

Universal has five English and four foreign version talkers in work, about twice as many as were busy at this time last year. Tiffany and Columbia have about the same number of films in work as last year.

Because the big pictures in production are using more players, the employment situation is much better than last year. Extra lists, however, are smaller than in former days, as "the intimate" type of talkers now being made requires less players.

All studios are commencing fall and winter activity and business conditions here are on the upward trend.

Theatres in "Healthy State," Says Schulberg

Hollywood—National business conditions are growing sounder daily, declares B. P. Schulberg, Paramount production chief. Theatres, which are "barometers of the public pocketbook, are in a healthy state," he asserts.

Universal Signs Sidney Fox on Term Contract

Hollywood—Sidney Fox, former stenographer who skyrocketed to prominence with her work in "Lost Sheep," has signed a five-year contract with Universal.

Independents Busy

Hollywood—Resumption of independent activity on a more elaborate scale than in previous years is under way. Indications here are that the state right market will stage a comeback this season.

Derr Nails Yarn Of Monetary Jam At Pathe Studio

Hollywood—Spiking reports that inactivity at Pathe is due to lack of finances, the company is preparing to start work on five new pictures within the next few weeks, with President E. B. Derr continuing in charge of studio activity.

E. B. Derr

Talkers recently released, says Derr, are "showing a nice profit," so more money is to be spent on future productions.

"Big Money" and "Her Man," Derr points out, have been booked solidly in Fox theatres. "Sin Takes a Holiday," recently finished, is to be sold to Publix, it is stated.

Practice of Pathe in farming out its various stars and the inactivity of the studio have given rise to report that the company was in a monetary jam and was loaning its stars for the profit it could get out of their services.

RKO Name Junked Favoring "Radio" To Avoid Mixup

Hollywood—So much confusion has been caused by the trademark RKO, used when discussing Radio Pictures and the Radio studio, that the film plant and picture product will hereafter be called Radio Pictures Studio and Radio Pictures, respectively.

The name RKO, which heretofore has been used by both the theatre organization and the film company, is to be used only in connection with the theatres hereafter.

Complaints have been received from all over the country from people asking just what pictures were "RKO pictures." Many said they never saw the name RKO used, but heard of pictures by that name.

Loew's Rings Up New Profit Jump Of $2,834,991

Reaching a new profit mark in its history, Loew's, Inc., which includes M-G-M as its most important subsidiary, reports a net increase of $2,834,991 for the year ended Aug. 31, 1930, as against the previous year. The 1929-1930 profits total $14,942,017, as against $12,107,026 for 1928-1929.

Aside from this jump in the net, the company has further strengthened its position by reduction of a number of liabilities and an increase of $4,409,737 in assets, which the corporation now places at $128,633,361, as against $124,223,624 last year. An analysis of the current consolidated balance sheet shows that the 15-year six per cent debentures which mature in 1941 have been reduced by retirement from $12,694,000 to $11,695,000, or $999,000.

Negatives in production or completed and released are currently valued at $26,952,236, as against $22,644,774 last year, the figures applying after amortization.

Accounts payable have dropped from $7,364,889 in 1929 to $5,630,833 in 1930, while theatre receipts have jumped $13,493,-186 from $108,312,973 in 1929 to $121,706,-159 in 1930. Loew's is also deriving greater revenue from rentals on stores and offices in its theatre buildings, the revenue having jumped $458,613 from $4,112,992 in 1929 to $4,571,605 at the close of the 1930 fiscal year.

An insight into the operating cost of the M-G-M sales machine is conveyed by the item down on the balance sheet as "film distribution" which cost $14,089,697 in 1929 and $14,744,161 in 1930, or $283,541 a week. This applies to the international activities of M-G-M.

Loew's, Inc., has shown a steady rise in its net in the last ten years. The following chart tells its own story:

|---|---|
| 1921 | $1,800,550 |
| 1922 | 2,267,871 |
| 1923 | 2,415,489 |
| 1924 | 2,949,053 |
| 1925 | 4,708,631 |
| 1926 | 6,388,200 |
| 1927 | 6,737,205 |
| 1928 | 8,568,162 |
| 1929 | 12,107,026 |
| 1930 | 14,942,017 |
| Ten Year Profits | $61,884,204 |

The 1929-1930 net shows an increase of $1.98 a share, or $9.90 per share on the average number outstanding at the close of the year. For the last fiscal year, the per share profits totaled $7.92.

Plunkett Orders Price Slashes in Houston Majestic

Houston—The first price slash in any Houston theatre followed the recent visit of Joseph Plunkett, general manager of RKO, to the Majestic, one of the RKO theatres of the southern chain recently acquired through a deal with the Interstate Amusement Co.

Prices heretofore have been 25 cent bargain matinee from 11 to 1 P.M., 40 cents balcony and 60 cents lower floor, and 75 cents for boxes and loges from 1 P.M. until closing.

The new scale of prices, effective Oct. 31, the beginning of the second week's run of "Check and Double Check," is 25 cents until 1 P.M., 35 cents between 1 and 6, 50 cents between 6 and 7, and 60 cents from 7 until closing; no extra charge for boxes, and balcony and first floor prices the same.

The Majestic was originally built for vaudeville, and box seats have always been sold for more.

Benjamin Gets District

Ben Benjamin, formerly with Universal at Kansas City and Chicago, has been placed in charge of the Middle States Division for Columbia, with headquarters at Kansas City. He will have jurisdiction over the Kansas City, Des Moines and Omaha offices.

From Fox to F. N.

Cleveland—Dave Klein, for years with the local Fox selling force, is now with First National in the Toledo territory.

Buying Strike Flops

London—Buying strike of British exhibitors is proving pretty much of a dud, with pledges to refrain from booking in protest against percentage and overage being broken generally.

Mix Ill

Hollywood—Tom Mix is confined to a local hospital due to an injury to his back sustained in a fall several years ago. His illness will prevent his appearance at Natchez, Miss., in a $50,000 breach of contract suit.

Hays 'Subsidy' on Approved Films May Be Dropped

Baltimore—Changing of the plan of operation of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, under terms of which the organization praises good pictures and ignores the bad, is reported under consideration, as is proposal that the association henceforth refuse to permit the Hays organization to defray the expense of publishing its lists of approved films.

Both policies were condemned by Archbishop Michael J. Curley in an address before the Maryland chapter of the organization.

The archbishop took occasion to praise Miss M. Cecelia Muth, head of the Maryland chapter, in bringing the printing of the list by producers to the attention of the national convention. Miss Muth questioned the wisdom of the policy which she felt placed the association under obligation to the industry.

"The committee's work," the archbishop declared, "would be carried on far better, in my opinion, if you did not accept one single penny from any movie man, woman or child. I should act independently. Don't bother about the good pictures, but condemn the bad ones.

"While you are boosting the best, people are going to the rest."

The committee was given a vote of confidence by the convention.

Promoted from Sales Staff

Omaha—E. A. Harms, recently appointed Pathe branch manager here by E. J. O'Leary, general sales manager, won his promotion from the sales staff. Harms came to Pathe from Warners and previously to that was in business for himself operating theatres. Harms was born in Germany, coming to America following graduation from high school.

Skeets with Powell

Hollywood—Skeets Gallagher is to appear in William Powell's next Paramount picture, which has the tentative title of "Buy Your Woman." He joins a supporting cast in this filming of Octavus Roy Cohen's play, "Alias Mrs. Wallace," which includes Carol Lombard and Juliette Compton. Louis Gasnier will direct.

"U" Assignment Changed

Universal City—Because Zasu Pitts will not be able to complete work in another production in time, Virginia Sale has been signed to play the role formerly assigned to Miss Pitts in Universal's "Many a Slip," which Vin Moore is directing with a cast headed by Lewis Ayres and Joan Bennett.

Fox Reclaims Westlake

Los Angeles—R. T. Newton is the new manager of the Westlake, which "bounced" back into the West Coast chain when business took a slump and the independent operators were unable to keep it going.

The Westlake will still show second-run pictures, but will have Fanchon & Marco units as an added attraction. This is the first time in two years the house has had a stage show. It is the only theatre in the Westlake district to offer vaudeville. The house will operate on a twice-a-week change policy.

Two Versions Shown

Montreal—Both the English and French versions of "Playboy of Paris" were shown at the premiere here at the Palace. Receipts were close to the record mark.

N. E. Association Drive On

Boston—With the appointment of George F. Sellman as field agent, a drive is under way for members for the Independent Theatre Owners of New England.

Paramount's RKO Peeve Results in Hamilton House

Cincinnati—Paramount's retaliatory program, against Radio-Keith-Orpheum for moving in on the deal for the Ike Libson chain, is being emphasized at Hamilton. The company has a 1,500-seat house under construction, to open in March, and now has taken over the Hamilton Palace from the two Harrys—Silver and Sturnburg.

The Palace, built 12 years ago, for several years was managed by Fred S. Meyer, who now is president of the Wisconsin exhibitor unit and is manager of the Alhambra, Milwaukee.

Publix Ties Up With Football In Minneapolis

Minneapolis—Publix is riding the bandwagon with both radio and football. What the firm can't help it makes help it. Martin Kelly of the Publix publicity department says it is a definite policy and that it is working out.

Radio fans have reported that it isn't possible to listen to the local stations in the Twin Cities for any extended period without hearing some mention of one of the company's theatres. That isn't strictly true. It can be done, but it is the proud boast of the Publix outfit that there isn't a local station that doesn't have something to say about what is going on at their houses and that there isn't a theatre owned by the company that isn't mentioned some time, somewhere, on the air by one station or another.

The Twin Cities have two major radio stations. Minneapolis has four minor school stations, one belonging to the Dunwoody Institute and the other to the University of Minnesota. Some of them have only a few listeners, but the theatres overlook no opportunity to take a shot at them via air.

When the football season bore down on the town it was realized that campus activities before the games would cut into attendance from the university, that the game itself would draw dollars that otherwise might find their way into the box-office, and that the radio broadcast of the games by the two big stations would hold thousands of fans to their seats on Saturday afternoon at least.

Publix chose its Minnesota to hook on to the wave of football enthusiasm. By smart advertising around the university it announced football parties after the final show with dancing in the great lobby and special entertainment both from the stage show and from the campus.

Not only are these weekly affairs successful, but the interest is so great that the campus made a special request that the parties be held on Monday nights, instead of Thursdays. As many as a hundred couples dance in the lobby at once and the Minnesota is believed to get practically all of the campus business with a great play when the football team wins.

Publix is considering ways and means of extending the plan to the high school groups, there being half a dozen high school football teams that cut into the Friday afternoon shows during the season.

Screen Mirror in K.C.

Kansas City—Screen Mirror, the Fox fan magazine, enters Kansas City next month. The twelve Fox houses have been using a similar house organ, the Friendly Messenger, which has been in circulation for the last two months as a weekly. It is understood Screen Mirror will absorb the Friendly Messenger, the latter serving as the Kansas City supplement to the main section.

Herbert Breidenthal, who established the Friendly Messenger, died three weeks ago.

Tiffany Sales Changes

Realignment of Tiffany managers at three eastern exchanges has been completed by Sales Manager Oscar R. Hanson, with installation of Irving Hanower as Washington manager. Previously, Hanson had appointed Al Blofson manager of the New York exchange, with Harry Brown of Washington transferred to the Philadelphia branch. Hanower formerly was salesman in New York. He is succeeded by Manie Meyer, brother of Phil Meyer, former New York manager, who has joined Columbia.

Irving Hanower

Blofson was guest at a welcome dinner Thursday at the Warwick, followed by a preview of "She Got What She Wanted" at Yonkers. Monday he was feted at a farewell dinner by the Philadelphia Film Board of Trade.

Business So Bad That Capone Lays Off 200 Coppers

Chicago—"Business," remarked a Loop theatre manager, "is so bad all the mice in our dime mill are giving themselves up to the cats. And just as though that wasn't enough, they're askin' us now to run a trailer askin' people to help provide jobs for the unemployed. Can you imagine? Why, that's the same as askin' us to cut our own throats. If we get 'em all back working again, who'll there be left to pay to see a show? Can you tell me?"

At this juncture the manager was summoned to the projection room. It seems the efficiency of one projector had become a matter of grave uncertainty to the operator.

"Stick around," he called back over his shoulder. "I'll be back in a second. Just have to stick a little adhesive tape on this magic lantern of ours."

"Yes, sir," he frowned, returning a moment later, "conditions are certainly bad. Why, do you know," confidentially, "we haven't had to throw a 'John-Buzzer' out of the house in more than a week now. No, sir. The last one was a week ago yesterday."

"What," we inquired, a little embarrassed at our own innocence, "do you mean by a 'John-Buzzer'?"

He glanced at us, a little scornfully, we thought.

"A dame," was the reply. "You know—a lobby hustler. They generally wait around till they spot a visiting fireman, or a guy in from Nebraska with a load of steers for the yards, follow him inside and get a seat next to him. Well, there ain't been one of 'em around for a week now. In good times we have 'em every day. But not no more. When the easy money ain't around they disappear like a ten-case note in a night club.

Even Snipes Are Shorter

"No, sir. There's no dough around nowadays." His eyes took on a far-away, wistful look. "I can remember," he smiled, "when they useta bust up to the cashier's window out front and peel a 'saw-buck' offa big roll like it was a street car transfer. Them was the days. Now they sneak to the slot with a dying look on their faces tryin' to count the change in their pockets to find out if they'll have enough left for carfare home.

"Why, do you know, Bert—he's the porter—Bert was telling me only yesterday he'd noticed it, too—how hard times are gettin'. Says the snipes they shoot in the washrooms nowadays ain't hardly worth pickin' up any more. No bigger than that."

He measured off a fraction of an inch on his index finger.

"The cheap bums!" we sympathized.

"Sure," he said. "But they can't help it. It's even worse in their racket—whatever it is—than it is in ours. Conditions are bad everywhere. A fellow was telling me just this morning it's the same in his line. He's got a cigar store over on Dearborn and peddles a little gin over the counter. Says he never saw anything like it. Told me things were so slow in the booze trade Ca-

Horwitz Out for Censorship but Abe Myers Gives Lie to Claim of Support

A Bray from Texas

Will Horwitz, Houston theatre operator, is enlisting the support of the citizenry in that city to foist a state-wide censorship bill on the amusement industry of Texas.

He is telling the Houston public, in paid newspaper advertising space, "I am ashamed today of some of the pictures I am forced to run"; that the "movie trust"—good old rallying cry—is, by its greed for the almighty dollar, forcing the exhibition of "sexy, indecent, repulsively gross pictures."

Here you have the amazing spectacle of an exhibitor, who calls himself a showman, inviting reformers to step in and regulate the business in an important state. We step out of our accustomed forum to focus the attention of the entire industry on this man and on what would be an amusing incident, if it were not fraught with potential danger.

We wonder how many of the "indecent" attractions of which Horwitz raves he would have spurned if he had an opportunity to play them; whether his spiel isn't more commercial than righteous and what the members of the Independent Theatre Owners of Texas now think of their new presidential spokesman.

We wonder how Horwitz discovered the formula which makes him a perfect ass and a figure of utter ridicule in the eyes of his business associates and what he uses when others use brains.

500-Seater Is Publix 1st Run In Wilmington

Wilmington—Paramount films have at last found housing room for first runs in a downtown local theatre. The Rialto, a theatre of 500 capacity, formerly devoted to popular-priced westerns, has taken the task of challenging Stanley-Warner, owners of four first-class houses on the same street, to which Paramount first runs are not available. Furthermore, another house, the Strand, a neighborhood theatre of 800 capacity, is now running Paramounts, including seven first runs, on a limited contract. The Rialto, of which A. J. Blair is the president, holds the exclusive rights on first runs, however. The Strand is not a downtown competitor. Its first booking is "Let's Go Native." Others in the offing are "Manslaughter" and "Animal Crackers." With the running of Paramounts comes the announcement from Blair that his theatre has been equipped with the latest Western Electric sound system, which gives it an edge on other theatres in this respect.

Blank to Rebuild at Burlington After Fire

Des Moines—Fire destroyed the Rialto at Burlington, in a blaze of unknown origin which is believed to have started under the stage. E. K. Kalwishky is manager.

A. H. Blank, head of the Central States Theatres Corp., stated through Harry Weinberg, in charge of the Des Moines office, that the theatre would be rebuilt. A Burlington corporation will build the house.

Myers Refutes Horwitz Charge On Censorship

Washington—"I did not mention censorship in my Dallas speech, which was concerned solely with organization and protection," Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association, Thursday told Motion Picture News.

"Horwitz," said Myers, "outlined over the telephone his views with reference to censorship which I assumed related only to Texas."

Censorship, the Allied leader said, "is a local matter which hardly could be taken up nationally and which each territory must decide for itself.

"I am not sufficiently acquainted with details of Mr. Horwitz's plan to discuss it intelligently," he concluded.

Catching 'Em Hot

In the reviewing section of MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week, commencing on page 46, appear opinions on the following feature pictures, several of which have just emerged from Hollywood studios:

Beyond the Law
Cohens and Kellys in Africa
Conspiracy
Flame of Love
Headin' North
Kismet
Oh, for a Man!

Stormy Petrel Uses Splash Ads In Threat; Continues War on Chains

Houston—Will Horwitz, who started his career as president of the Allied Theatre Owners of Texas in a jam with Houston independents, has a new wrinkle—the advocacy of a state censorship law for Texas.

In newspaper advertisements the Houston showman, who has been with the association but a few months, razzes pictures generally, stating he is ashamed to run many of them. Then he gives a purported quotation from Abram F. Myers, president of Allied, advocating censorship. His advertisements state that Myers, when censorship was proposed at the convention, jumped to his feet and said:

"That is the only weapon left to us in the fight to make our theatres decent. I promise you the national support of our organization; promise you a similar fight in every state now without proper state censorship."

Horwitz will ask the state legislature to enact a censorship law, and says he has the promise of the state attorney general's office for investigation of alleged monopoly of film companies in the state. The new Texas president joined the association last summer, when the protection fight became hot, and since has laid down a newspaper barrage against the chain houses.

At the Dallas convention, a delegation of Houston independents appeared to defend the proposed zoning plan which Horwitz is so bitterly opposing, but were denied the floor at the convention. They charge Horwitz with trying to use the organization for personal gain. They said they were not members of the association because they could not afford to be.

Horwitz was named president of the Texas unit when Col. H. A. Cole stepped down to become manager. Other officers elected are: Reuben Frels and W. E. Hodges, vice-presidents. Bennett Haralson is continuing as secretary.

Labor Trouble Held Cause of Tear Gassing

Council Bluffs—Tear gas bombs thrown into the Liberty at Council Bluffs, were attributed by B. Harding, manager, to be the reopening of the labor troubles which caused some difficulties two years ago. Several hundred persons were thrown into a panic by the bombs and two persons, a boy and a young man, were overcome and carried to the hospital for oxygen treatment.

Warners Reported After New Theatre in Albany

Albany—A report that negotiations for a new Warner theatre had been reopened here is current among real estate operators. It is said that Harry M. Warner is expected in Albany in the near future. The company has had an option on a number of sites in Albany for a number of months past.

M. P. Academy Selects Its "Blue Ribbon" Holders

For best picture of year: "All Quiet On the Western Front"
For best director: Lewis Milestone

For best art direction: Herman Rosse for "King of Jazz"

For best actor: George Arliss for "Disraeli"

For best actress: Norma Shearer for "Divorcee"

For best photography: Willard Vanderveer and Joseph T. Rucker for "With Byrd at South Pole"

For best writing: Frances Marion for "The Big House"

For best sound recording: Douglas Shearer for "The Big House"

Shearer, Arliss, "All Quiet" Win Academy Awards

Hollywood—"All Quiet on the Western Front" was voted the best picture of the last year and its director, Lewis Milestone, credited with turning in the best directorial achievement in the annual awards of merit voted by the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences. Five hundred members of the Academy attended the annual affair, at which Will H. Hays was guest speaker.

Awards were determined by a ballot of the Academy membership, based on pictures released in Los Angeles during the year ended July 31. Other awards are:

For best performance by actress: Norma Shearer in "The Divorcee."

For best performance by actor: George Arliss in "Disraeli."

For best cinematographic achievement: "With Byrd at the South Pole," Willard Van Derveer and Joseph T. Rucker.

For best art direction achievement: "The King of Jazz," Herman Rosse.

For best sound recording achievement: "The Big House," M-G-M sound recording department.

For best writing achievement: "The Big House," Frances Marion.

A feature of the meeting was a film address by Thomas A. Edison, who with George Eastman was elected to honorary membership. Vice-President Conrad Nagel presided at the session. Bronze statuettes, emblematic of the awards, were formally presented to winners by a member of the Academy branch to which the achievement is related.

Publix Units to Supplant Native Canadian Shows

Toronto—Several weeks of Jack Arthur presentations at the Imperial, Famous Players Canadian house, have culminated in a tentative decision to replace the native presentations with Publix units, also sending the same shows to Montreal.

Arthur had been using imported headliners and a master of ceremonies with local ballet and orchestras. The presentations were produced here. From the beginning there was trouble about costs. The change is announced for Nov. 21.

T. S. Daley, after starting as managing director of the Imperial, when RKO vaude was removed to make the house the Famous high spot, returned to head office after a few weeks only and then went east to open the new Capitol in Halifax, N. S.

Tampa Getting "Moby Dick" for Two Bits

Tampa—George Peck, manager of the Park, cleared his decks so as to bring the John Barrymore feature, "Moby Dick," in for a full week's showing with no tilt in the prices. The Park established a 10c and 25c scale for the summer months, but the customers seem to like the low prices so well that Peck is letting it ride.

Talker Dubbing Antagonizes Fans In Foreign Lands

European audiences are objecting to dubbing of talkers to an extent that unless American films become polyglot, United States picture firms may find the market slipping away from them, Ralph Heinzen writes in a United Press despatch from Paris. No longer can films get by with actors speaking English lines, which come through the amplifiers according to the language of the country concerned. False lip movement is the berries so far as Europe is concerned.

There was one film shown in Paris which had Dutch, French, Spanish and American players each speaking French with a different accent. Audiences hooted, considering it great comedy, although the film was meant to be serious.

"We will simply have to decide whether we are going to come abroad and make films in foreign languages or take entire casts to California and make five to ten different language versions of every film," Alfred Lewen of M-G-M told the United Press correspondent.

M-G-M Plans to Make 50 Foreign Language Films

M-G-M will make foreign language talkers on a picture-for-picture basis with English speaking versions. That means that 50 foreign-language films will be made during the coming year, in addition to the English-speaking films. A number of European players, directors and technicians will be sent to Hollywood in connection with the new program.

New Unit Meets Nov. 12 to Outline Program

Cincinnati—Plans for future activities of the newly organized exhibitor unit of Allied States Association, which has adopted the title of the Allied Theatre Owners of Southern Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia, will be discussed at a meeting Nov. 12, according to Fred M. Strief, business manager.

AMPA Plans Dance; Daab Testimonial to Get Ad

Staging of a dance on the U. S. S. Illinois is planned as the annual AMPA function. Details now are being mapped out. A resolution was passed at yesterday's session to present a testimonial to Hy Daab, RKO advertising chief, for the effectiveness of his campaign on "Check and Double Check."

Jazz "Daddy" Returns

"Alexander's Ragtime Band," the first piece of jazz ever written, is to be revived by Max Fleischer in the form of an animated screen song. It was written by Irving Berlin in 1911.

Weeks to Coast

George W. Weeks, vice-president of Sono Art-World Wide, has left for the Coast to supervise production of ten pictures for the new season.

Pathe News Chiefs

Terry Ramsaye

Ray L. Hall

Celebrate 20th Anniversary of Pathe Newsreel

Twentieth anniversary of Pathe News will be celebrated beginning Nov. 11. The pioneer newsreel was established in 1910 by Charles Pathe in Paris. Pathe News today and for several years past has been under the editorial guidance of Terry Ramsaye and Ray Hall. Ramsaye is editor-in-chief.

The first editor of Pathe News was Bert Hoagland, who was engaged by J. A. Berst, who established the Pathe organization in America for Charles Pathe. He was followed by L. E. Franconi, who is still with the Pathe organization functioning as chief of the extensive film library. G. Hugon and Eric Mayles each served as editors for brief periods. In 1915, Emanuel Cohen became editor and continued in charge for 11 years. He resigned to found the Paramount News and was succeeded by Ray L. Hall.

"Ingagi" Plagiarized, Federal Court Holds

Unopposed judgment of $150,000 has been handed down in Federal Court in favor of Byron W. MacKenzie, owner of the copyright to "Hearts of Africa," against Congo Pictures, Ltd., on the ground that the defendant's "Ingagi" was a plagiarism of parts of the MacKenzie picture. "Ingagi," which enjoyed a brief but spectacular career, was the subject of protests from scientists that it was a fake.

Vaudeville Out at 7 N. Y. Houses in Stagehand Jam

Fox has dropped vaudeville at seven New York theatres following a jam with the stage employes on their demand for two additional men at the Academy of Music. This puts 70 union musicians, 28 stagehands and a number of vaudeville acts out of work. The theatre had agreed to use four men at the Academy, but balked at the demand for two additional men.

Receiver for Tone-O-Graph

Armin Mittleman has been appointed temporary receiver for Tone-O-Graph, Inc., following a suit in equity. The friendly action was instituted by the Casey Trunk Co.

Will Rogers No Draw on Charity Bill with 'Liliom'

Los Angeles—Despite the fact that Will Rogers is appearing in person at every show, "Liliom" is not clicking at Loew's State, where it was expected a "take" of $40,000 would be rung up at the box-office. Instead, the grosses for the first two days totaled about $8,000, a little more than half of what was expected.

The talker, which is rated as a class picture and not especially appealing to the average theatre patron, was set for the State some time ago. Since then West Coast has tried to have the booking changed, but the studio would not allow it. Neither would they sanction a change of title for this showing, a practice heretofore followed by West Coast in several instances. Studio orders were to play the talker as booked and under the same title.

Rogers is getting $12,500 for the week and donating it to the Community chest. The theatre will give all over the nut of $35,000 to the chest. Estimates, however, are $10,000 in the red.

At the Criterion "Billy, the Kid," on Realife film, opened strong and bids fair to do a good business. The picture grossed very heavily the opening days and looks good for a grind of several weeks.

Re-Equipping Fox Houses; $3,500,000 Spent in East

Revamping of theatres in the Fox circuit, launched as far back as May, will continue under budget arrangements just completed by Harley L. Clarke. Since midsummer, houses in the Eastern division have been improved to the extent of almost $3,500,000 and about the same amount on theatres on the West Coast, including new projects.

Army Studio Opened

Washington—Heading a delegation of executives and officers high in the official family of the department of war, Assistant Secretary of War Frederick H. Payne participated in the formal opening of the sound recording studio and private projection room in the Unition Building when the recording apparatus and sound reproducing equipment installed by RCA Photophone were operated and their functions explained.

To Film "Fan Mail"

Hollywood—"Fan Mail," an original story "depicting the human side of Hollywood," has been selected as the special John Murray Anderson is to produce next for Universal. Anderson made "King of Jazz."

Brenon Casts Loretta Young

Hollywood—Loretta Young has been cast in the feminine lead in "The Devil's Battalion," which Herbert Brenon will direct. Irene Rich also has been cast for the picture.

Ohio Theatre Burned

Upper Sandusky, O.—Fire of unknown origin destroyed the Ohio theatre, which was operated by W. L. Bristol.

Musicians Lose Sympathy Strike Aid in St. Louis

St. Louis—Operators and stagehands have declined to strike in sympathy with the musicians, so it looks as though pit orchestras, organists and stagehands will be out for a long time to come.

Theatres offered a compromise agreeing to employ 100 musicians for ten months, on provision that houses without orchestras would not be picketed, but this was turned down.

Officers of the International Alliance of Stage Employes and M. P. Machine Operators refused to sanction a sympathy walkout. Musicians have been out since Sept. 1, when the demand that orchestra of the St. Louis theatre be increased to 20 men from 12 was refused.

Canadian Operators Protest Class Tests

Toronto—Operators in cities and towns of Ontario have been advised by the Ontario government that the examination of all projectionists for classification purposes will be conducted forthwith. Intimation has been given that the operators will be divided into four classes, based on the proficiency shown in the written examinations.

The operators have protested that the tests are unfair and that they will lead to a shake-up in present employment arrangements, particularly if the operators at one theatre are given Class "A" rating while those at another theatre are placed in a lower category. Under the government regulations, it is planned to have a Class "A" man in charge of a projection room, while others will be regarded as assistants.

Reisman Off on Swing Around Land; To L. A., Too

A loop around the country in three weeks is the heavy schedule which Phil Reisman, general sales manager at Universal, has set for himself, visiting the studio before returning to New York. He left New York Thursday.

New Des Moines Secretary

Des Moines—Miss M. E. Streeks is the new Film Board Secretary here. She comes from the Film Board at Winnipeg. Before that she was at Washington, D. C. She succeeds Miss Margaret McCrevey, who has been secretary of the Des Moines board for the past two years.

Arrested on Sunday Charge

Metropolis, Ill.—W. A. Collins, manager of the Illinois Theatre here, was arrested Sunday charged with violating an ordinance in operating his theatre on the Sabbath. Rev. Harmon Etter, Baptist minister, obtained the warrant for Collins.

Six-Syllable Sells Story

Mike Simmons, president of the AMPA, has written "First Aid," an original glorifying the ambulance surgeon in the war, and it will be made as a special by Sono Art.

D. W. on Projection

D. W. Griffith

"Talking pictures," says Griffith, "are only as good as the operator projecting them," adding that the fact must be realized if pictures previewed are not to go out under a "terrific handicap."

Franklin Plan of Economies Gets Oldknow's Veto

Portland, Ore.—Discarding the economy program outlined by Harold B. Franklin, his predecessor, Oscar S. Oldknow, new vice-president of Fox West Coast Theatres, paid a brief visit to Portland on an inspection trip to northwest theatres operated by his organization.

"The rumors of business depression mean nothing to us, for we believe that the pictures now in the making and those recently completed at our studios are the finest yet. They are made to cater to a discriminating public that is becoming more and more particular. Not only will more time and money be spent on pictures, but also Fanchon & Marco are cooperating with us by producing finer revues of a greater variety," was the optimistic statement of Mr. Oldknow.

Portland will be affected almost immediately by the "better times" program, with repairs and renovations slated at the Fox Broadway and Fox Hollywood theatres and also at the Coliseum in Seattle, which will close on Nov. 14 for remodeling. When it reopens, redecorated and renovated, the Colisium will greet showgoers as a popular-priced theatre.

The determination to use newspaper space for 90 per cent of its advertising is another important phase of the Fox plans.

Cruze to Make "Platinum"

Hollywood—"Platinum," novel by Edward Dean Sullivan, author of "Rattling the Cup on Chicago Crime," and Adele Commandini, has been purchased by James Cruze for Tiffany releases, it was announced today. Lola Lane will in all probability be cast in the leading feminine role. Walter Lang will direct and Julian Josephson has been signed to do the screen adaptation.

Men Get Break

Chicago—Essaness had four houses closed to kids last week while "pinks" played the spots. That's one way of getting the adolescent trade back.

16,000 Theatres In Nation Today; 10,000 Now Dark

Less than 16,000 theatres are now in operation in the United States, C. W. Bunn, sales manager of Electrical Research Products, says a survey made by his company shows. The survey, he asserts, emphasizes that conditions in the industry are adjusting themselves in orderly manner with future prospects encouraging.

"At the first glance this diminished total of theatres might lead to the conclusion that the popularity of pictures has waned. This is not so," he declares. "What it means is that the public, aware of the difference between good and inadequate reproduction, is patronizing the theatres where the reproduction is satisfactory.

"The patronage formerly enjoyed by the 10,000 theatres that have closed is now going to the 16,000 remaining houses. Their total weekly patronage today is larger than the weekly motion picture attendance at any previous time in the country's history.

"Of these 16,000 theatres, about 10,000 have sound equipment. Of this number 4,800 have the Western Electric Sound System and about 6,200 other kinds of apparatus.

"Our information indicates that about 2,500 of the closed theatres have a possibility of reopening."

Ottawa Theatres Make Play for Kid Trade

Ottawa—Children are again very much in evidence in the theatres, particularly for special matinee performances. The first Saturday morning show at the Imperial in months was staged by Manager Ray Tubman with a double-feature program consisting of "The Silent Enemy" and "The Song of Soho," admission being 10 cents. Saturday matinees at B. F. Keith's theatre and the Avalon are also drawing heavy juvenile patronage and the kiddies cut loose with cheers, jeers and applause in old-time style.

Manager P. J. Nolan of the Avalon is conducting a Matinee Children's Club for the Saturday afternoon shows with fine results, the theatre being packed with youngsters, the admission being 15 cents.

Offer Bargain Shows

Detroit—A new price policy has been put into effect at the Madison, with bargain matinees and evening and Sunday prices on a lower scale. Children will be admitted for 15 cents at all times. Matinee price has been set at 25 cents until 6 P. M. daily, except Sunday, and from then until closing for 50 cents. Sunday admission will be 50 cents for adults. New first run pictures and the return continued engagements of picture offerings will be featured.

Paramount Signs Owsley

Monroe Owsley has been signed by Paramount for an important role in "Strictly Business," which Frederic March and Clandette Colbert will make at the Long Island studios. Phillips Holmes will also make a talker in New York for Paramount playing opposite Nancy Carroll in "Two Against Death."

Clara's Rubber Checks Stretch Out Publicity

San Francisco—Elmer F. Remmer, who is said to have accepted Clara Bow's checks to the tune of $19,000 at his gambling resort at Calneva, only to find later that the redhead isn't so dumb and had stopped payment on them, is being sued for divorce. Clara is partly to blame for the action, for Mrs. Remmer says her husband told her: "I got so much publicity out of Clara Bow's bum checks that now I know everyone and am hobnobbing with the big shots. You're no help to me now; you're just a detriment."

Upon which Mrs. Remmer saw red, and the rubber game in the marital mixup will be played in court.

Clara Bow Swears Off Gambling and Richman

Hollywood—Clara Bow has announced definitely that her gambling days are over and that from now on she will stick to parchesi, checkers and dominoes for indoor recreation. She would not discuss the Remmer divorce suit, admitted that her affair with Harry Richman has grown cold, and said nice things about Rex Lease, the lady-socking western he-man.

Business Booms In Iowa Cities

Des Moines—Iowa theatres are doing a remarkable business in the cities and towns of good size, says Al Yarowsky of the First National office in Des Moines in a checkup of booking and a comparison with those of other exchanges of this office. The bookings for the new year's pictures are past those of last year and from several angles exchange men feel that Iowa is showing up very good and that they are in good luck.

The small towns, those of 1,000 population and under, are starving and have been having a hard time for a good while. Locations like Dubuque, Waterloo, Fort Dodge, Marshalltown, Cedar Rapids, Sioux City, etc., are all going big, while Des Moines seems to be booming in the amusement business.

Victor McLaglen Cast

Hollywood—Marking the first time he has appeared in any but a Fox picture since "What Price Glory," Victor McLaglen has been cast in Paramount's "Dishonored" opposite Marlene Dietrich. Gary Cooper originally was slated for the part.

Signs "The Great One"

The Great Art Shires, baseball player, amateur pugilist and champion self-praiser of the universe and other points, has gone movie now and has another field in which to talk about himself. Universal has signed him up to play in two episodes of "The Leather Pushers."

Scotch Prizes

Chicago—Warner Club tossed a swell Hallowe'en party in First National's offices in the exchange building. Brunswick furnished the entertainment and music for dancing; games and refreshments by committees; ghost stories by Tom Gilliam. Everybody had such a swell time they forgot to ask for the prizes that were to be awarded the best costumes, so the club is holding them for the next party. Regular monthly business meeting of the club's officers next Tuesday.

Combo Play and Film, "U" Plan; Hersholt to Star

Hollywood—"The Sign of the Rose" will be made by Universal as a combination stage play and motion picture, it is reported. Jean Hersholt will have the most important role in the production and will make personal appearances with the film.

The idea at present is to show the first part of the play in film and then raise the curtain and go on with the stage play. The final part of the production will be in film, also it is planned.

The picture will be filmed in its entirety as a regular feature for places where Hersholt will not appear in person.

Plans are still in a formative state and the date for production is not set. George Beban made a combination and silent version several years ago.

Blair Gets L. A. Paramount Post

Seattle—The first of the several changes in the ranks of Paramount Publix executives in the Pacific Northwest territory reported to be scheduled for this month was announced here this week by C. C. Perry, Publix Western division manager, who has just arrived from Los Angeles.

It involves the transfer of Robert Blair, at present supervisor of Publix theatres in Seattle and Portland, to the post of city manager in Los Angeles, with jurisdiction over all Publix houses in the southern California city.

Mr. Blair was succeeded in this territory by Leon Levy, former manager of the United Artists theatre in Los Angeles, he is making headquarters in the Paramount theatre building here, and will supervise the operation of that theatre and the Paramount and Rialto theatres in Portland.

A. W. Baker and Zach Freedman remain as manager and assistant manager, respectively, of the local Paramount theatre.

Chapman Joins Standard

Pittsburgh—Abe Chapman, for the past five years with Pathe, has been appointed local branch manager for Standard Film Service, succeeding Harry E. Klein, who resigned.

Whitbeck Stages Shakeup in Fox Publicity Staff

Los Angeles—Shakeup in the Fox West Coast Theatre publicity staff has resulted in an entirely new system being worked out and put into practice by Frank Whitbeck, director of advertising and publicity.

The new system brings all the press men into the home office, where new and larger quarters are being arranged for the department. There will be 17 men in the department with Whitbeck in direct charge. Second in command will be Eddie Eckels, who will supervise activities of the other men in the department.

Those who have been given assignments at the present time are Mel Riddle to Loew's State and Grauman's Chinese; George Ver Halen to Criterion and Carthay Circle, and Hal Baetz to Egyptian and Wilshire. Each of these men will have several assistants.

Bob Collier will head the exploitation end of the staff and will visit the various theatres on the circuit, helping out where and when necessary. The Fanchon & Marco publicity staff and those who helped publish The Last Word and Screen Mirror will also be located in the same offices and under Whitbeck's supervision.

The idea for a central staff belongs to Whitbeck and the layout is in accordance with his plans.

New Canada Tax To Boost Cost Of Accessories

Ottawa—Proposal to tax American magazines coming into Canada on the basis of their advertising revenues and Canadian circulation is now before the Canadian Cabinet. It is of interest to picture business because it would hit the circulation of fan magazines and national publications carrying picture advertising. Trade publications are unlikely to be affected to any important degree.

Some definite statement on the matter is expected this month, but, in the meantime, strong opposition to the proposal has developed.

At the same time, the government is being urged to boost the tariff on imported printing matter on a poundage basis. Consideration has been promised, but nothing else. This would hit press books, lobby cards, litho and other advertising material now sent in by the distributor.

Bad Influence

Hamilton, O.—John C. Schumacher, house superintendent of the Rialto, was elected county sheriff by a large majority over the Republican incumbent. He claims he originally aspired to the office while watching the hard-riding hombres in the Westerns.

Warners to Keep Wide Film System For Own Theatres

opposition with competitive houses, if—and the "if" is a big one—the business should suddenly veer toward wide film.

As pointed out in Motion Picture News, the general industry atttitude today is to lay off wide film until the public is ready for it. However, the impression prevails that some company may hit the market with a "wow" attraction, and thereby precipitating the whole business into wide-angled projectors and screens.

Vitascope is photographed on 65 mm., as against the current standard of 35 mm. and projected as shot, via a special attachment which the Warners claim can be applied to any machine in about thirty minutes.

The image, of course, requires a new screen.

The Warners make claim that Vitascope adds a third dimensional effect on the ground that the focal length of the camera lens results in additional depth. Elimination of close-ups or switches from long to medium shots is regarded by the company as a method to improve the continuity of action. That advantage, however, is claimed for Grandeur, Realife, Spoor-Berggren and other wide film systems.

In addition to "Kismet," First National has photographed "Adios" on wide film.

Seven N. Y. Critics Ignore Vitascope; Only 2 Like It

The odds are against Vitascope insofar as New York newspapers are concerned. Only six of the 13 critics of the metropolitan dailies commented on the new Warner wide film process and of that number two like it, as exemplified in "Kismet," and four think the enlarged image detracts from the story.

Bland Johannesen of the Daily Mirror, Rose Pelswick of the Evening Journal, Julia Shawell of the Graphic, Richard Watts, Jr. of the Herald-Tribune and William Boehnel of the Telegram turned all of their comment to the picture itself and offered no critical analysis of Vitascope. Regina Crewe on the New York American merely said it was "spacious" and Mordaunt Hall of the Times devoted one paragraph to the facts involved with nary a word of criticism regarding its effect.

Excerpts of the six published opinions follow:

DAILY NEWS—Certainly it enhances the scenic values of so magnificently mounted a production.

EVENING WORLD—And the same thing may be said of Vitascope which has been said of all other wide films—that its very ponderousness militates against a smooth flow of story telling. Like Grandeur Film or Realife, the giant images set before you tire you out long before the final fade-out comes, and, what's more important, there are spots in which the sound and dialogue are less than distinct.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—All (First National) has to do is to turn out more "Kismets," present more Skinners and hug Vitascope to its proprietory bosom. "Kismet" would have been an excellent picture in ordinary dimensions; in Vitascope its appeal is doubled and its sermon to the industry given strength. Let there be width, oh, Allah.

POST—As such ("Kismet") should have provided a wealth of material for movie treatment, but the story emerges in a badly garbled form, laden down with a dialogue and choked up with a wide screen device that thrusts the characters forward into proportions that seem terrifyingly out of keeping with the story and the mise en scene. The figures are insistently heroic and, except for a very few perspective sequences, are projected with an unnecessary and annoying emphasis.

SUN—The production is presented on still another variety of wide screen, called in this case, the "Vitascope." Now "Kismet," while ostensibly a spectacle, is really a play concerned with people and their clashings, and the big screen tends to prevent you from focusing on their intimate goings-on. However, I don't suppose the Vitascope hurts the drama in "Kismet" very much—even though it doesn't noticeably help it.

WORLD—Upon a mammoth canvas the veteran player of that designing cut-throat (Otis Skinner) swaggers more importantly, delivers his soliloquizing speeches with a greater sweep and volume and romps through this time-worn and old-fashioned portrayal with even more of inward enjoyment than was his in the silent picturing of it. As a consequence, everyone concerned appears to contemplate it with pleasure. It is the same old melodrama in balloon-tire proportions. The one notable change is that on occasion it slips disconcertingly out of key and out of focus.

Aside from the mere business of introducing its wide screen, there is no apparent reason for the employment of its new method in "Kismet." It seems to be that the wide screen finds its most distinctive effectiveness in the reflection of panoramic episodes, exteriors and the like.

"Kismet" does present a half dozen massive settings, such as those of the market place, the throne room, the harem and the courtyards, but aside from these a large proportion of its chapters move forward in interior and close-up. In these the device for enlarging the picture unfortunately sacrifices the clearness of cut, the accuracy of camera placement gained in the normal curtain. But as to the passages of greater size, no doubt this Vitaphone appliance will serve as well as any of its recently initiated relations.

Tut! Tut!

Hollywood—The chatter columnist on a Los Angeles paper wrote something about Harry Richman, "Clara Bow's ex-friend."

An hour later, the proofreader was carried out roaring with hysterical laughter. When he had quieted down, they asked him why. He showed them the galley proof of the Richman item. The typesetter had made it "Clara Bow sex friend."—*Photoplay.

Business Bad, Capone Cans Cops

pone had to lay off 200 coppers. But this can't last," he sighed.

"No," we agreed. "It'll change soon."

"Sure. But if it's for the worse I can still laugh at 'em. My brother-in-law," he explained, "is a big shot with a television outfit. Them're the babies who're gonna be in the bucks, and I got a job promised me any time I want it. "Hello, Bert—" turning to a newcomer. "What the grief?"

"It's that Number 2 projection machine again. Otto says he don't think it'll last out the show."

"Stick around," called the manager over his shoulder. "I'll be right back."

Appearances Pull

Providence—The Publix Paramount theatre here finds personal appearances of screen stars an aid to business. Recently Charles Rogers and Hal Thompson appeared in connection with their films and an effort now is being made to get Charley Ruggles to say howdy. Ruggles is a big Providence favorite, critics raving about him in all reviews.

Spanish Talkers And Road Shows San Diego Plan

San Diego—One dark house here may be reopened and a stock theatre turned over to talkers if deals under way are completed.

Plans for the showing of Spanish talkers and presentation of roadshows in the Balboa are announced by Harry Hartman, division manager for Fox. Under the plan, the foreign language talkers will be shown three days a week, and road productions booked out of Los Angeles to fill the rest of the weekly program.

The Balboa has been closed for almost a year. Hartman's plan is the result, he said, of many requests by Spanish residents here for talkers in their native tongue. The Savoy is one other house involved.

After a run of five consecutive years, Fulkerson and Marsh, producers, have announced plans to close. Details of the proposed move have not been announced, but the producers say they plan to lease the house to Los Angeles theatre men for film productions.

If the deal goes through, the Savoy Players will go to a house in Hollywood to continue their productions, Lawrence Marsh, producing director, said.

A movement is under way by civic organizers to sell enough season tickets to finance the company in a longer stay here. The announcement of the proposed closing has aroused many San Diegoans, as the Savoy is the last house here where stage plays are offered.

Company Formed to Make Talkers in Spanish

Spanish Talking Pictures has been formed in New York to make Spanish talkers. Production will be on the Coast. Fitelson, Lerman & Meyers handled the incorporation. Fitelson is attorney for Tiffany. Frank Dreher, now in "Once in a Lifetime," legit show, will appear in the productions.

Dix Third Player to Become Radio Director

Hollywood—Richard Dix is the next player in line for acting-directing assignments on the Radio lot. Lowell Sherman and Louis Wolheim for some time have been directing and appearing in company films.

Pansy Purloiner

Dayton, O.—There is at least one purloiner of other people's property hereabouts who has ample cause for reflection. A man, probably the boy friend of a modern sweetie, stole a French mirror, 12 inches by 36 inches, from a rest room of the RKO Strand. In leaving the theatre he passed several ushers as well as the doorman without being discovered.

"Billy," "Life of Party" in Heavy Dough On Coast

Los Angeles—"Billy, the Kid" was the talk of the town, copping off $24,500 at the Criterion for a rating of 245%. Top dough for the week went to Loew's State, with Will Rogers in person pulling in the shekels. However, at $35,000 that was no bargain for the theatre, due to the heavy nut.

Warners' "Life of the Party" looks like a real box office card, for it goaled them at both the Downtown and Hollywood, playing day and date. Amos 'n' Andy continued to show strength. The two-a-day houses nosedived, however.

Estimated takings:

Firebug Tries to Burn Greenwich House

Greenwich, N. Y.—A fireproof runner under an aisle carpet saved the Star from the work of a firebug. The carpet had been soaked in gasoline and then set afire. State troopers and police are investigating, but as yet no trace has been found of the incendiary. The theatre will suffer a loss of several hundred dollars.

The work of the firebug was discovered when a woman entered the theatre to prepare it for the day. She discovered that gasoline had been spread around various parts of the auditorium and also came upon a can of the liquid in the center aisle. The damage was done mainly by smoke, which injured the draperies and the walls. The theatre is owned by Dennis Regan, of Greenwich, one of the pioneer operators in northern New York, but has been operated by G. A. Woodward of Luzerne, N. Y.

Cheerio, Ol' Topper

Credit C. A. Stimson, of Big 4, with this one. While in England recently, he accompanied a British producer on a visit to his young son at boarding school.

The professor, with characteristic tact, gave a brief talk on films in general. In particular he regretted "the appalling colloquialisms introduced by American films and their influence on the hitherto unsullied English tongue."

"Train your ear to catch and throw off the hideous incongruities of this raw-ther frightful slang," the master harangued. "And nevah, nevah, for one moment, let me hear any of my young men engage in such distressing vulgarisms."

A lad in a front seat squirmed with increasing restlessness.

The teacher turned his penetrating eye upon this Union Jackie. "Do you understand, sir?" he fiercely queried.

"Okay, pal," was the terse reply!

"Corpulation" in 2nd Week Slide

San Antonio—After shattering all attendance records at the RKO Majestic in its first week, "Check and Double Check" dropped with a thud the second, and was yanked Sunday after two days of the second week. "The Silver Horde" was substituted.

The Amos 'n' Andy feature played to 87,000 admissions in its first week, which tops the record of "The Cockeyed World" by 17,000 patrons.

"Playboy of Paris" Held Over

Maurice Chevalier's "Playboy of Paris" will be held over a second week at the New York Paramount. "Laughter," featuring Nancy Carroll and Fredric March, which originally was scheduled for the New York and Brooklyn Paramount theatres the week of Nov. 7, will be released at both houses the week of Nov. 14.

Delay Patent Suit

San Antonio—Trial of the suit of the Aleograph Co. of America, a local concern, against Electrical Research Products for alleged infringements of patents which was set for Nov. 3 in the Federal court, has been postponed until Nov. 28. As the suit also asks for an accounting of profits and damages, there are millions involved.

Cut Indoor Golf Space

Vancouver—Indoor golf proprietors are using half-page advertising space in Vancouver newspapers on a co-operative basis, eight indoor courses being in the list. Vancouver claims more inside links than any other Canadian city.

New Bernstein House

London—The Granada, another link in the rapidly-growing Bernstein circuit, has opened at Walthamstow.

Bernstein's new Granada at Walthamstow, England, was the subject of a feature article in the November "Showman" section of Motion Picture News, issue of Nov. 1.

RKO Aces, Plus New House, Get $51,000 on B'way

RKO's Mayfair was the big noise on Broadway this week, the new 2,300-seater off to a flying start with Amos 'n' Andy's "Check and Double Check." The house, Thursday, was well on the way to a $51,000 take for its first week, staging a paid-admission second show at the premiere last Friday night.

Roxy failed to make any sensational ripple with "The Big Trail," emphasizing that the public hasn't any great yen for wide screen, so far as the Street is concerned. The previous attraction, "Scotland Yard," on regulation-size film, soared to $97,000, so the picture's still the thing that pulls 'em into the box-office.

Estimated takings:

Exhibitors Get Set to Fight Daylight Law

Watertown, N. Y.—Theatre owners are not losing any time these days in taking steps that may do away with daylight saving next summer. At a meeting of the common council in Watertown a statement was made that petitions doing away with daylight saving will probably be submitted to the people next year.

'Little Accident' Beats 'Check' in Baltimore Race

Baltimore—Patronage rose to a high peak at four theatres in Baltimore during the week, but, as usual, the high grosses were taken in by Loew's Stanley and Century with their seating capacity of over 3,000 each.

"Her Wedding Night" at Loew's Century took in an estimated $14,000, rating 87½ per cent, while at Loew's Stanley, "Playboy of Paris" did about as well with $15,400 as the gross, rating about 88 per cent.

The pictures which made ratings rise at the four theatres are as follows:

"Little Accident" took in a gross estimated at $9,000 at Warners' Metropolitan, which rated 150 per cent; "Check and Double Check" went over strong at Keith's, aided by a slice of national advertising and the stars' radio reputations, the gross being figured at about $9,800 for six days and a special midnight Sunday showing, giving a rating of 116 per cent; "Whoopee," during its second week of a second run at Loew's Valencia, took in $3,900, which rated 111 per cent, and "Scarlet Pages" at the Rivoli grossed an estimated $8,800, giving this house a rating of 110 per cent.

Big In Houston

Houston—Amos 'n' Andy did a fine business at the Majestic RKO theatre for a seven-day run. The gross hit $20,000 which compares with $23,932 garnered by "The Cock-Eyed World." The picture was held over a second week, with four new vaudeville acts.

Blackface Duo Collect $28,000 In Boston Run

Boston—Amos 'n' Andy in "Check and Double Check" hung up a new box-office record for the Keith Memorial this week with a gross of $28,000. The gross exceeded even the days of the opening of the new theatre. The rating is 160% and was the high spot for the week. It holds over for a second week.

The week's grosses throughout the city were high. "Playboy of Paris" at the Metropolitan hit 140% with $45,500 taken in, while "Women Everywhere" at the Keith-Albee was good for $23,000, or 120%.

Two roadshows in the downtown district at a time are unusual in this city. "Hell's Angels," in its ninth week, grossed $10,000 at the Tremont, and "Abraham Lincoln," with a $1.50 top at the Majestic, grossed $7,000 for 120% in its second week. When United Artists put two road shows in Boston at the same time they broke a precedent, but results showed good business judgment.

"Those Three French Girls," which hit the high spots for Loew's State three weeks ago, came back to Loew's Orpheum for $24,000, or 125%, a performance decidedly out of the ordinary. "Billy, the Kid," was good for $24,000 at Loew's State and "Up the River" at the Scollay Square rolled up $15,000 for 110%.

Estimated takings:

"PLAYBOY OF PARIS" (Paramount)
METROPOLITAN—(4,350), 25c-60c, 7 days. Other attractions: Publix revue, news. Gross: $45,500. Rating: 140%.

"WOMEN EVERYWHERE" (Fox)
KEITH ALBEE—(2,500), 25c-60c, 7 days. Other attractions: Vaudeville, comedy, Sportlight, news. Gross: $23,000. Rating: 120%.

"CHECK AND DOUBLE CHECK" (RKO)
KEITH MEMORIAL—(2,800), 30c-65c, 7 days. Other attractions: Comedy, news. Gross: $28,000. Rating: 160%.

"HELL'S ANGELS" (United Artists)

"LINCOLN" (United Artists)
MAJESTIC—(1,800), 50c-$1.50, 7 days. Other attractions: None. Gross: $7,000. Rating: 120%.

"BILLY, THE KID" (M-G-M)
LOEW'S STATE—(3,700), 30c-50c, 7 days. Other attractions: Burton Holmes Travelogue, comedy, news. Gross: $24,000. Rating: 125%.

"Splinters" Roadshown

Montreal—"Splinters," the British war comedy, was roadshown at His Majesty's by Regal Films during the week of Nov. 2. Prices ranged from 30 cents to $1 and performances were given twice daily.

Seattle Falls for "Double Check" To Tune of 185%

Seattle—Amos 'n' Andy moved into town this week and a big portion of the local citizenry visited them during the week at their quarters in the RKO New Orpheum. Business reached about $27,000 (185%) and the film is being held for another week. The only other attraction ever to achieve that distinction was "Rio Rita," which did about $50,000 in two weeks last fall at slightly higher prices.

Other attractions in the city played to average business only. "Her Wedding Night" at the Paramount sagged about $12,000 (85%), being all that it copped, Clara Bow seems to be a losing bet here since the advent of talkers. The Fox Fifth Avenue had a fairly good week with "Way for a Sailor" and a big stage show, taking around $14,500 (110%) for the run. "What a Widow" at Hamrick's Music Box was good for about $8,000 (115%) and "The Life of the Party" at the Blue Mouse took close to $7,000 (105%). "Up the River" at the Fox did a nice week with about $14,000 (120%), but Fox's Coliseum was off with "Clancy in Wall Street." Those last two words in the title have a nasty sound to a good many people.

Bainbridge's stockplayers moved into the Metropolitan Theatre for a season of stock at $1 top, and presented "Nancy's Private Affair" to good business.

Estimated takings:

"LIFE OF THE PARTY" (Warners)
BLUE MOUSE—(950), 25c-35c-50c-75c, 7 days. Other attractions: Vitaphone Varieties, news, Billy Ulman and band. Gross: $7,000. Rating: 120%.

RKO NEW ORPHEUM—(2,650), 25c-35c-50c-60c-75c, 7 days. Other attractions: News, orchestra concert, vaudeville. Gross: $27,000. Rating: 185%.

"HER WEDDING NIGHT" (Paramount)
PARAMOUNT—(3,150), 25c-35c-50c-60c, 7 days. Other attractions: "Song Service" (Paramount), "Bouncing Ball" (Paramount cartoon), news, Publix stage revue. Gross: $12,000. Rating: 85%.

Radio Boys Break Record

Toledo—"Amos 'n' Andy" played to more people and to larger grosses in the opening week of its extended run engagement at the Rivoli theatre than any picture in the history of the house. Police were called upon to handle the crowd, according to Al Mertz, RKO branch manager.

Radio Advertising Cut

Vancouver—Publication of radio programs in the newspapers of Vancouver has been discontinued by the publishers in justice to local exhibitors who use considerable display space each week. Radio advertisers were buying no space in the newspapers, it was stated.

"What a Widow" Only Film Over Par in Ottawa

Ottawa—"What a Widow" brought continued good business to the Centre theatre, but special exploitation played a strong part in drawing the crowds—particularly the women. Gross of $2,800 was equal to 95%. Comparatively, the most popular picture of the week was "Let Us Be Gay" at the Avalon at 35 cents top, which grossed $1,400, for 110%. "Good News" fell down some at Keith's, earning an 85% gross of $3,100 for the first half, and "Liliom" was responsible for $3,700, or 90%, being somewhat better in spite of the fact that many people called it a "crazy picture." It was a feature that aroused curiosity, however, while Farrell fans were there in numbers, of course. "The Spoilers" at the Regent was just so-so.

Estimated takings:

Turberg Promoted

Hamilton, O.—Nat Turberg, formerly treasurer of the Palace Theatre Co., has been appointed manager by Paramount Publix, who recently took the house over on a ten-year lease. The Palace will be under jurisdiction of Mark Wolf, divisional manager, whose headquarters are at Indianapolis.

Indorsers Share Fund

Indianapolis—The Photoplay Indorsers of Indianapolis are listed on the 1930 Community Fund roster as recipients of $400 of the money collected by the fund. The money is to be used to help defray the expenses incurred by the organization in its work of indorsing pictures for the public.

Canadians See "Hell's Angels"

Windsor, Ont.—Residents of border cities in Ontario are seeing "Hell's Angels," despite the ban of the Ontario board of censors on patriotic grounds, simply by crossing over to Detroit where it has been playing as a roadshow at Shubert's Detroit Opera House. The Detroit theatre advertised extensively in Canadian newspapers to get this patronage.

Action Needed

Pittsburgh—Although theatre business here is in the doldrums, exhibitors aren't particularly worried and express optimism over the future. Business is declared to be off 75 per cent, with 300 theatres dark in the trade territory.

Showmen here are crying over poor pictures and say that when distributors give them more action stuff business is sure to pick up. The few local successes scored here recently have been with action pictures.

Toronto Grosses $15,000 (125%) on "Double Check"

Toronto — The Canadian premiere of "Check and Double Check" was the talk of the walk in Toronto, starting out with a swell pre-view performance and being held over for a second week after a gross of $15,000, or 125%. This was the only hold-over in Canada for the week. Big business was also done by "The Big House" at Loew's, which rang up $16,500, equalling a percentage of 95%, while "Her Wedding Night" was good for $17,000 at the Imperial along with a pleasing stage show. The Uptown more than held its own with a split week of "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "Monte Carlo," doing around $5,500 on each, which means 90%.

Estimated receipts:

Sues Ince Studios for Commissions on Yarns

Hollywood—Edna R. Schley has filed suit against the Thomas H. Ince studios for $1,800 which she says is due her as commissions on the sale of rights on nine stories.

In her complaint Miss Schley contends that under her agreement she sold to Douglas McLean rights to "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave." The price paid was $5,000, of which $1,000 was rightfully hers, she contends. Commission on eight other stories, sold to Charles Ray, and including "The Egg Crate Wallop," amounting to $800, also never was paid her, the complaint declares.

Chevalier Clicks In Montreal with $18,000 Intake

Montreal — Maurice Chevalier was the playboy of Montreal, with the result that his "Playboy of Paris" at the Palace topped the list, Manager George Rotsky making it a sure thing by presenting the French print of the feature three times daily to draw the substantial French populace and also running in midnight shows. The gross outcome was $18,000, or 115%, yet the attraction was not held over, one week of intensive presentation being considered enough. The Capitol, with its stage show and "The Sea God," ran a close second with $17,500, or 105%, the Paramount picture being particularly popular. "Dixiana" was good for a week at the Princess, but no longer, at $11,000, or 95%, while "Good News," with vaudeville, rated 95% with $15,000 and Manager Adams was satisfied.

Business Slump? Not For Claude Neon Firm

Claude Neon Lights reports sales for itself and associated companies throughout the United States for the first nine months of 1930 amounting to $13,002,331, as against $10,604,458 for the first nine months of 1929, an increase of about 22 per cent.

The total sales for the third quarter of 1930 of $4,044,280 are within four per cent of the third quarter of 1929.

Sally Phipps in Short

Sally Phipps of "Once in a Lifetime" has been assigned the ingenue lead by Broadway Talking Pictures, Inc., in a two-reel dramatic film called "Her Story." This is one of a series of 12 two-reel pictures being made by this new producing organization. Raymond Friedgen is director and producer of the series. Others in the cast include Wyndham Standing, Roy D'Arcy and Louise Carter. Production will start on Friday at the Audio Ciname Studio.

Ohio Okays "Squealer"

Cleveland—"Squealer," Columbia prison picture, was passed by the Ohio Board of Censors with no major cuts.

Flesh Clicking

Cincinnati—Changing cycle of the times is reflected in the manner in which combination houses are going over, and emphasized by the RKO Albee here, whose gross has been doubled within the last four months.

Pepsodent Duo Clicks $22,500 In Kansas City

Kansas City—"Check and Double Check" led the parade of grosses, taking in $22,500 and chalking up a 150% rating, the Mainstreet holding over the Amos 'n' Andy picture for another week.

The other houses in town felt the effect of the drawing power of the radio favorites. Three houses managed to keep their heads above water and maintain an average week, while two dropped by the wayside. "Office Wife" gave the Newman $12,500, which is a rating of 100%. The Midland also had a 100% week with "Up the River," which brought in $14,500. Public generally agreed this picture had a poor title. Picture was well liked, but its drawing power was weakened by a title which spelled underworld, a type of picture which this town is getting fed up on. The Royal rated 100% with "Heads Up," getting $4,500.

The Pantages took a nosedive on "Extravagance," which gave the house only $8,500, or a rating of 85%. The Pan re-instated vaudeville this week in place of Fanchon & Marco revues. The suspending of the F. & M. shows is only a temporary move, however. "Last of the Lone Wolf" at the Uptown grossed $4,800, or a rating of 80%.

Sheuerman Reappointed Warner Branch Manager

Cleveland—Following the visit here of H. M. Warner, Spyros Skouras and Dan Michaelove, Fred Sheuerman was re-appointed office manager of the local Warner exchange, a position he held for several years and until last spring, when he was made city sales manager. L. F. Weintz, former office manager, is now with the Warner theatre department in this city.

Two Cincy Runs Give Amos, Andy Total of $45,100

Cincinnati—All roads led to the Palace and Capitol theatres, where Amos 'n' Andy regaled a receptive populace in "Check and Double Check." House records at both theatres were shattered completely, as a steady flow milled about the box offices fighting to deposit their money. Nothing like it has ever been experienced in the annals of local amusements. When the managers' reports were checked and double checked, the score stood $28,100 for the Palace, and $17,000 for the Capitol.

Advertising, publicity and exploitation for this picture were circused to the 'nth degree, exceeding anything of a similar nature that has gone before, and the records established, from both intake and advertising standpoints, leaves something for future pictures to shoot at.

Despite this unprecedented result, business at the other houses was not affected to the extent that was originally thought, with exception of RKO Albee, vaudefilm, where the gate went slightly below the 100% mark, which is very unusual for this house.

The Lyric, with second week of "The Big House," continued to stand 'em up, and although the gross fell considerably from the first week, it was, nevertheless, higher than that registered for many of the preceding pictures.

The Strand had an even break with the previous week, while the Family went way up on a split-week showing, turning in the highest gross since the new policy and price schedule went into effect.

Total gross for all houses ran $98,680, which is the highest ever turned in at any time by any Cincinnati amusement organization, constituting an all-time record.

Amos'n' Andy Do $16,000 and Break Providence Record

Providence—The bronze playboys of radio fame, Amos 'n' Andy, knocked the town for a loop, smashing all records at the RKO Albee and drawing $16,000 into the coffers. The week-end business was tremendous and Manager Harry Storin is holding the attraction over for a second week.

Business, generally, was good, Loew's State garnering $22,000 with "Billy, the Kid," which is well over the 100 per cent mark. The Paramount, too, showing "Laughter," was turning 'em away several nights, catching $15,000. The Majestic with "Office Wife" and the RKO Victory, showing "East Is West," also clicked for 100 per cent and over.

This business is considered remarkable in view of the fact that hectic political rallies were being held each night in the downtown districts and Al Smith drew 15,000 to the auditorium on Monday.

Estimated takings:

"CHECK AND DOUBLE CHECK" (Radio)

Midnight Previews Hit Omaha with a Rush

Omaha—This town went midnight preview all at once. After RKO Orpheum has campaigned a reserved seat premier of "Check and Double Check" for a couple of weeks Paramount-Publix sprung two previews on the same night to even things up. The Paramount showed "The Life of the Party" and the World screened "Her Wedding Night," both of which are current with the Amos 'n' Andy film.

Stench Bombs in Two

Akron—Stench bombs were hurled in the Paramount and Regent theatres last Tuesday, said to be the result of labor difficulties. Special police guards have been placed in both houses in an effort to catch the offenders.

"Double Check" in Chi Hits $44,675 Last 2 Days Drop

Chicago—"Check and Double Check" broke all existing house records at the State-Lake, outstripping the high for the house, reached under its old vaude-film policy. The Amos 'n' Andy picture hit $44,675. "Laughter," playing across the street from Amos 'n' Andy, earned the Chicago $48,960, which was high for the week. The Amos 'n' Andy film which did $39,712 the first five days of its run, or about $7,942 a day, dropped the last two days of its first week. On the basis of the opening days, the picture should have done $55,596, but didn't.

McVickers closed for one day to put in a large screen and magnifying lenses on projection machines for "The Big Trail" showing. The picture opened to fine trade and excellent plugs from the reviewers in mid-week and got $33,100 in six days. "Old English" knocked off a nice $24,190 in its first week at the Roosevelt, and "Du Barry" hit a fair $24,600 at United Artists to earn a second week. Oriental was only so-so with "Maybe It's Love," getting $34,000.

Estimated takings:

"EXTRAVAGANCE" (Tiffany)
CASTLE—(300), 60c, final 7 of 17 days. Other attractions: News. Picture playing to adults only. Replaced by "The Locust Lady" (Audible). Gross: $4,800. Rating: 154%.

Teaching by Talkers

Columbus—Foreign students striving to master our idiomatic English are to be given a break through the medium of the talkers, according to series of experiments to be conducted by M. R. Clark, local Paramount manager, in cooperation with Dr. John L. Clifton, state director of education for Ohio, who, incidentally, is chief of the Ohio censor board.

Initial experiment was held at the State theatre, with "The Big Pond" as the first articulate screen production designed to divorce the alien sons from their mother tongue and teach them to split a mean infinitive according to Webster et al.

Professors and instructors from Ohio State University, together with students from nearby colleges and high schools were among those present to note the reaction on the embryonic linguists. Consensus of opinion seems to be that the ambitious boys and gals will be speaking reverse English after acquiring the talker technique.

Harold in Duel With 'Check' Boys; Wins by $1,000

Portland, Ore.—Harold Lloyd in "Feet First," backed by a bangup exploitation campaign by Manager J. R. Frazier of the Paramount, copped first place in town with a gross of $15,000, which means a rating of 138%. It was a close race with Amos 'n' Andy, for the blackface comedians, in their second week at the RKO Orpheum, drew $14,000, for a rating of 125%.

It was a satisfactory week generally, with all theatres reaching par or above. The Washington-Oregon football game drew thousands to town—and to the theatres.

Exhibitor Sued for Unassigned Contracts

Milwaukee—Action has been started against Jack Yeo and the Odeon building by RKO and Universal for unplayed contracts. The Odeon and Davison, formerly conducted by Yeo, have been taken over by Fox Midwesco. A claim of $2,262.50 has been entered by RKO and $397 by Universal. Ben Koenig is acting as attorney for the exchanges in the matter.

Cleveland Gives Only 115% to 'Double Check'

Cleveland—For reasons which nobody has been able to dope out, business at local first-run houses was not so hot this week. There was nothing the matter with either the weather or the attractions offered, but they did not sell as well as they have done during previous weeks. Amos and Andy piled up a lot of admissions at the RKO Hippodrome, but the gross was not what was expected, considering the amount of business these radio stars have been doing elsewhere. A big advertising campaign covering all avenues of publicity was used, but the gross for the first week was a long way from the house record. The other first runs pulled through with average results, "The Big House" holding up well in the third and last week.

The 'A Boys' Cop Indianapolis Top, Grossing $22,000

Indianapolis—Amos 'n' Andy at the Circle proved to be the greatest draw at local houses. The Circle took in a gross of approximately $22,000 for a rating of 130%. The picture is to be held over for the second week and is expected to continue to draw good crowds. The Indiana, Apollo and Lyric drew average patronage and received ratings of 100%. The Palace, showing Gloria Swanson in "What a Widow," took in approximately $10,000 for a rating of 110%.

Amos 'n' Andy Knock Business For Mpls. Loop

Minneapolis—The extraordinary spectacle of one theatre doing an all but capacity business four shows a day with five on Sunday without making a ripple in the even flow of regular business for the other houses was proof conclusive here that the radio fans can be brought out with their shekels by such a feature as "Check and Double Check."

The folks from the sequestered firesides asked no questions about the show, apparently. They broke all the houses records at the RKO Orpheum in the Minneapolis section of the 300 simultaneous openings. They came out to see their old friends and not the picture. Nobody cared about the title, "Check and Double Check." It was Amos 'n' Andy, regular visitors in the house every night, almost as well known to the family as the mail man and the family dog, that the people wanted to look at. The pull was almost equal to that of a home talent production among the kith and kin of those who have fat parts.

On the word of the various managers and as far as inspection could reveal there was no appreciable falling off in other downtown business. Whatever was taken away by the grand smash, apparently, was given back by the overflow on the night shows when those who didn't get to see the colored comics dropped in at the theatre of their next choice.

The film has now opened in the RKO Seventh Street, the old Orpheum vaudeville house, which was dusted off with a two weeks' run of "Africa Speaks," and the question now asked is how long it will continue to do its stuff.

Sunday Shows Prove Hit at Bellows Falls

Bellows Falls, Vt.—In the face of competition from Sunday indoor and miniature golf, theatre managers here opened their theatres Sunday evenings in defiance of "blue" laws and the theatres were quickly filled. There has been no interference from local or state authorities. Sunday night shows will be continued here for the first time.

Box-Office

Hollywood—M-G-M has another box office smash in "Within the Law." Joan Crawford wins new laurels in it, turning in a fine performance. This talker has plenty of action, suspense and thrills. It moves at a fast tempo that never lets the interest die. Kent Douglas, a newcomer, and Robert Montgomery give excellent portrayals, as do others in the cast.

Sam Wood didn't miss a thing in the direction and the picture should click wherever shown. The story, taken from the stage play, has been brought up to date, and this treatment helps considerably. Depression has a hard time licking a picture like this.

CROUCH

'Morocco' Booked As 1st Paramount In Chinese Theatre

Hollywood—Evidence of the close working arrangement between Fox and Paramount is seen in the deal whereby "Morocco" goes into Grauman's Chinese for a run. The theatre is operated by Fox West Coast circuit and the picture was produced by Joe Von Sternberg. It is the first Paramount film to play that theatre.

No date has been set, but it is figured the run will get under way early next month. The Chinese is now housing "The Big Trail."

Freuler to Coast to Supervise Production

John R. Freuler, president of Big Four, has left New York for Hollywood to inaugurate new production units. The company will handle in 1930-31, via state rights market, a series of eight action "mellers," two series of six Westerns each and 12 two-reel comedies. Bruce Mitchell will make the first in the action series, starting work immediately upon Freuler's arrival. Craig Hutchinson will soon start on a comedy group, the first to be "Radio Raspberry." Alvin J. Neitz is scheduled to make the initial Western, "Hell's Valley."

English Talker Planned by Judea, Jewish Film Maker

Judea Films will slip an English talker into its schedule, the subject selected being a crook story which Sidney Golden will direct probably at the Bristol studio in Waterbury. The company has been making all-Jewish talkers.

Film Board Aiding Deaf St. Louis Theatre Fans

St. Louis—Silents have been placed by the Film Board at the disposal of organizations interested in persons afflicted with deafness. Meanwhile theatres here rapidly are installing equipment enabling the deaf to hear talkers.

'Check' Hits 155% In Philly; Stage Shows Big Draw

Philadelphia—Return of stage shows, following the conclusion of the musicians' strike, jumped the grosses at the Mastbaum, Fox and Earle, the three houses which normally feature presentations, though it is doubtful if the increased grosses made the week as profitable as the period when the stage bills were out.

With the Duncan Sisters and an augmented orchestra of 80 pieces, the Mastbaum hit $40,000, which was two thousand better than last week, when Moran and Mack appeared without musical accompaniment. The Fox jumped $2,000 with the Roxy Gang and ballet and the Earle, with a Warner-Publix stage show, jumped $1,000 over the preceding week. None of these increases seems heavy enough to cover the additional expense of the stage presentations, though the gradual drop from week to week in grosses during the strike gave indications that ultimately the lack of stage shows would be felt.

The big noise of the week, however, was "Check and Double Check," which swept into the Boyd for a gross of $28,000, beating the excellent record made by "Whoopee" three weeks before. Figure means a percentage rating of 155%.

Garmen Gets Avalon

Baltimore—The Avalon theatre, residential house in the northwestern section of Baltimore, has just been taken over by Louis Garmen, who owns the Pimlico in the same district. He has appointed Louis A. DeHoff, pioneer film exhibitor of Baltimore, as manager. The house will reopen shortly after having had its sound equipment changed.

Wheeler-Woolsey Remaining

Hollywood—RKO has denied report that Wheeler and Woolsey are to leave the company.

Black Face Boys Get 31 Grand in 2nd Detroit Week

Detroit—These two hombres, Amos 'n' Andy, surely occupy an important place in the hearts of Detroit fans, for their "Check and Double Check" is sailing serenely along, knocking the props from under local records.

The picture's second week showed that it has sustained drawing power, enabling the RKO Downtown to lead the city with a gross of $31,000. It's going into a third week. And this at a time when local houses are crying plenty.

Charge Accounts?

Cleveland—Requests for charge accounts are being made by Cleveland suburban patrons. They want to attend the theatre, one manager reports, but haven't the cash. Although thousands are out of work, the impression prevails that the slump is definitely ended and an upswing is in prospect.

"Whoopee" 200%, "A" Twins 160% In Des Moines

Des Moines—Business is on the up and up in Des Moines and two pictures playing for a week's run made record business for the year while the Paramount, with two popular pictures to which it had devoted the minimum of advertising, did a grand business, also. "Amos 'n' Andy," playing at the Orpheum for the week, had a line-up in front of the box-office even on the rainy nights and the first half of the week established a record business for this year, with the last half dropping slightly to a total gross of $13,000, or 160%. "Whoopee" started off very nicely and maintained a 200% average for the week at the Des Moines, the best business of the year so far, says Manager Bob Gary. "Liliom" showed up much better than "College Lovers" at the Strand, rating extra good business on Saturday and Sunday, 120% for "Liliom" and 100% for "College Lovers." "Heads Up" and "Laughter," splitting the week at the Paramount, each scored 120%.

Estimated takings:

"HEADS UP" (Para.)

Daylight Saving Out

San Francisco—Extensive campaign against daylight saving waged by amusement interests resulted in defeat of the measure in Tuesday's election.

Omaha Checkup Shows $26,400 For Taxicab Pair

Omaha—The town's biggest dough in several months went to "Check and Double Check" which lasted for nine days at the Orpheum and piled up a total of $26,400, hitting 165%. The house did five shows daily with a change of vaudeville at the end of seven days. The Berkoffs topped the stage bill, but all the draw was due to Amos 'n' Andy.

"Her Wedding Night" at the World, in face of such competition, got a par week and $11,000. At the Paramount, "The Life of the Party" grossed $7,650, or 90%.

First half at the State, "The Sea Wolf," was good for 125% rating on an intake of $2,812. Last four days, "Eyes of the World" slipped to 95%, getting $2,375.

Frosty weather has ended the miniature golf season, though a few of the places are still hanging on. Night football has replaced night baseball but it only comes once a week.

Estimated takings:

"CHECK AND DOUBLE CHECK" (RKO)

ORPHEUM—(3,000) 25c-60c, 9 days. Other attractions: Four RKO acts, headed by the Berkoffs, Rockne short, news. Gross: $26,400. Rating: 165%.

Century Resumes Stage Shows After Labor Rift

Baltimore—Loew's Century, managed by A. H. Beuhrig, re-established its stage show policy with talking pictures, an orchestra in the pit and on the stage and an organist this week. "Pastels" was the first Loew-Capitol theater unit offered.

Differences between the theatre organization and the musicians' union of Baltimore were ironed out with the same terms in effect as formerly except that there is a six weeks' cancellation clause now which can be put in effect but it is understood that if the theatre wishes to take advantage of that clause the musicians must be paid a bonus during the time.

George Wild is again conducting the pit organization of 17 men as formerly, while fifteen are engaged in the stage band. All soloists formerly with the Century have been re-engaged and some of the musicians double in the pit and on the stage. The organist is Al Hornig, formerly at Loew's Parkway in Baltimore.

Simon Starts First

Simple Simon Comedies has inaugurated its production activities at the Audio Cinema Studios in the Bronx. Louis Simon's first comedy is "Hot Shivers."

Mort Blumenstock is directing Simon in a vehicle written by William A. Grew and Rube Welch. Ruth Holden, second lead in the Chicago company of "June Moon" and previously in several Broadway productions, is leading woman. Aileen Cook, Walter Wilson and Peggy Cunard are other leads.

Gag

Cincinnati—A local newspaper man with an ingrowing sense of humor offered the MOTION PICTURE NEWS sleuth an exclusive yarn during the record-breaking run of "Check and Double Check."

He confidentially spilled the information that the picture had been withdrawn, and no further showings would be possible.

With visions of the misguided Ohio censors again indulging in their favorite indoor sport of "pulling" pictures, aforesaid sleuth, with his ear to the ground, reached for his note pad.

"Pepsodent is removing the film," was the smart retort from the wise-cracking journalist.

They'll Swear in Harmony in New 'What Price Glory'

Detroit—Fox will remake a musicalized version of "What Price Glory," with Fifi Dorsay in the role of Charmaine, she has been informed by long distance call from the studio.

At the same time, it was stated that it is doubtful that Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe, who were seen in the original silent version of the production, will be seen in the same parts in the new picture, as better singing voices are said to be wanted.

Fifi Dorsay herself is "Queen Bee" along Detroit theatre row these days. The "petite Parisian peril" jumped into town with only enough time to make her first scheduled appearance at the Fox during the second anniversary show last week, and her popularity is borne out by the fact that the house played to capacity crowds all week, thanks to an extra heavy billing the previous week by the opposition for "Those Three French Girls."

Open N. Y. Stage Unit In Houston Metropolitan

Houston—"Moonbeams," the first of the much-advertised "New York" stage units, opened at the Metropolitan, Publix deluxe theatre, with Jimmy Ellard, Houston's favorite m.c.

A slump in business, due to the lack of good pictures, according to the management, is being bolstered by bigger and better stage units. These units, formerly routed via New Orleans to Texas, were recast there. Now they are routed from New York to Dallas, San Antonio, Houston, and then New Orleans, with original casts.

Holiday Helps

Ottawa—All Saints' Day, Nov. 1, was a general holiday in the Canadian capital and in all cities of the province, and the theatres felt the direct benefit, the only counter-attractions being the football games. Another legal holiday throughout the Dominion is Monday, Nov. 10, observed as a combination Thanksgiving and Armistice Day.

Imitation Golf Folds on Coast; Mania Vanishes

Hollywood—Premature golf has had its day—for this year at least. The puny courses which made the city's vacant lots a thing of beauty and a gathering place for pellet putters are being folded up and moved to parts unknown. Once again the corner lots are becoming more sordid and await the building of a service station or "Eat 'n Your Car" stand.

Theatre managers have the whole field to themselves now and if business doesn't come to them it's not the fault of the golf pastime.

One golf course built early this year for about $5,600 was sold at a sheriff's sale the other day for $210. Other courses around town are available for the kids to play on free of charge and those owning a putter and ball are making use of the opportunity. Just how the larger courses are going to fare next year and through the winter is problematical, with the odds on the red side of the ledger.

Indoor Golfies Waning, Albany Official States

Albany—Theatre owners who are wondering just how many more indoor miniature golf courses will be built this fall were encouraged by an address by F. F. Futterer, director of municipal recreation, who declared that the pee wee variety of golf does not possess the challenge a game needs to have to endure. All outdoor golf courses in Albany are now closed, but each week sees from one to three new indoor courses opening.

It is figured that the heating of these indoor courses will necessarily be an expensive proposition and that many owners who have not figured on this will be forced to close their places before the winter is over.

Organists Dropped in Albany, Troy Theatres

Albany—Organists are no longer employed at any of the motion picture theatres of Albany or Troy, N. Y. Stage shows have also been abandoned in Utica. Steve Boisclair, premier organist of Albany for several years and who broadcast each week over WGY, is now said to be in the Middle West.

The Grand Entry

Hollywood—When the Villa Carlotta, new Hollywood apartment hotel, burned—that's where so many movie stars and folk live—the other evening, and the fire engines began roaring and clanging and sirening about the place, one of the guests in a downstairs apartment to which the smoke hadn't yet penetrated, commented:

"H'm; sounds like another director coming home."—Photoplay.

Weekly Premieres

Hollywood—Good showmanship is responsible for the success Fred Miller is achieving at the California International Theatre, where only foreign version talkers are presented.

One of the features of Miller's showings are the weekly premieres which occur every Friday night. Stars appearing in the foreign versions make their appearance and other notables attending are announced over a radio hookup. Lights and all the gala attraction of a first night help to sell the pictures and build up a steady clientele from among the 120,000 foreign speaking people of Los Angeles.

Colleen Moore on Stage Competish In Indianapolis

Indianapolis—The legitimate season started Oct. 31 at the English theatre with the presentation of Colleen Moore in her first stage production, "On the Loose." The first night drew an almost capacity crowd, although it is believed that the two night stand would not deduct from the attendance at the motion picture houses.

In the past the picture business has not been seriously affected during the stage season, as the legitimate offerings have been taken by the theatre-goers as additional entertainment and not as substitutes for the screen dramas, as might have been expected.

Articles of incorporation for the English Theatre, Inc., were filed recently. The new corporation was formed by interests of the Circle Theatre Co., which purchased the franchise for the house from the Valentine Theatre Co. The directors are Leo M. Rappaport, Edgar O. Hunter and Herman P. Lieber. C. Roltare Eggleston, former manager of Keith's theatre, will manage the house.

Serial Crashes First Runs at Seattle, Portland

Seattle—For the first time in the history of a first run picture theatre in this territory since the advent of talking films, a serial is to be a part of the program at John Hamrick's Blue Mouse, beginning next month. "The Indians Are Coming" is the serial and it has been booked by Hamrick for his Music Box theatre in Portland and his Blue Mouse in Tacoma.

Cruze Prepares Second

Hollywood—James Cruze's second picture for Tiffany will be "The Command Performance," which Walter Lang will direct. Lola Lane is the first player signed for the cast. Gordon Rigby is directing.

Greta Gets Spy Role

Hollywood—Greta Garbo will start work on "Mata Hari" as soon as she completes "Inspiration" for M-G-M.

Kiddie Shows As Builders Of Good Will

Ryllis Hemington, public relations director of Fox West Coast theatres, offers another in the series of suggested programs for Saturday morning kiddie shows, which appear regularly in Motion Picture News. The new group covers Nov. 22 and 29, both highly important on the showman's calendar because of the unlimited possibilities offered by Thanksgiving Day and other holidays in the season for the staging of elaborate and colorful programs in neighborhood theatres.

THANKSGIVING DAY (NOV. 27)

The last Thursday in November.

"Of all the holidays observed in this country there is none so distinctively American as Thanksgiving. It is a legacy of the Pilgrims, cherished because of the romance and traditions that surround it.

"But days of thanksgiving for special occasions have been common in all Christian countries in all ages. A number of such celebrations have been held in England, one of which was for the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588. The inhabitants of Leyden, Holland for many years observed October 3rd as a day of thanksgiving in memory of the deliverance of that city from the Spaniards in 1574. This was a popular festival among the Dutch during the ten years the Pilgrims lived in Holland and may have suggested to them the thanksgiving celebrations which were afterward held at Plymouth.

"The origin of the day we now celebrate must be attributed to Gov. Bradford of Plymouth. In November, 1620, the Pilgrims landed on the desolate coast of New England and passed the following winter with great suffering and privation. In the spring seed was sown and its growth was watched with great anxiety for on the result depended the lives of the colonies. When the grain was cut and the harvest was found to be abundant, there was great rejoicing and the Governor proclaimed a day of thanksgiving. He sent out four men in search of game and they soon returned with a large number of wild fowl, most of which were turkeys. It is doubtless due to this incident that the turkey has always been considered a necessary feature of Thanksgiving feasts. This festival lasted nearly a week and a large party of friendly Indians, including the Chief Massasoit, shared in the festivities. . . .

"In the summer of 1623 the little colony was again facing starvation. A drought, which began in May, almost destroyed the crops. About the middle of July the Governor appointed a day of fasting and prayer. Soon after this the weather changed. . . . About the same time Captain Miles Standish returned from a voyage which he had taken to secure provisions and brought with him not only food but also news that a ship which was expected from Holland had been sighted. In acknowledgment of these blessings a day of Thanksgiving was appointed and held on July 30, 1623.

"It is probable that both these celebrations had their influence in forming our present Thanksgiving day. The Pilgrims appointed similar days of Thanksgiving on various occasions but it does not appear that the celebration was regularly observed.

"On October 3, 1789, Washington issued a proclamation appointing Thursday, November 26, 1789 as a day of general Thanksgiving. This was the first Thanksgiving proclamation issued by a United States president and may be considered the first national Thanksgiving Day.

"For a little while the holiday was observed faithfully but somehow a break occurred and one by one the states began to observe the day at different times . . . but all of observances were in November.

"In 1864, President Lincoln issued a proclamation appointing the fourth Thursday in November, with a view of having the day observed every year thereafter. The very next year, however, the assassination of Lincoln almost caused a suspension of this rule but President Johnson was prevailed upon to appoint the last Thursday in November as Thanksgiving and since then each President has followed his custom. On receiving the President's proclamation, the governors of the several states issue a proclamation of their own naming the same day. Thanksgiving Day is now observed everywhere throughout the United States and is kept as a legal holiday in almost every state and territory.

"The adoption of the last Thursday in November as a uniform date for the observance of Thanksgiving was doubtless due to the efforts of Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, author of the last century. About 1840 she began agitating for a more general observance of the day and the selection of a definite time so that the celebration might have a more national character. Year after year she wrote to the governors of the states asking them to appoint the last Thursday in November. The idea met with general approval and this finally led to the adoption of the present method of fixing the date."

Stage Shows in Glendale; . House in Red for 2 Years

Glendale, Cal.—Fox West Coast is putting stage shows back in the Alexander after an absence of two years. The theatre has been playing pictures day and date with Los Angeles with only 21 days' protection and Hollywood fifteen minutes away.

The house has been in the red for two years and the new policy is probably figured by Oscar Oldknow as a way to compete with downtown theatres. There are two other first runs here, three second runs and one other. Plenty of competition for a suburban town.

Holdover Suit Against "Doc" Gallup Settled

Marquette, Mich.—Infringement of copyright action brought against the Delft Theatre Co. by Pathe and Universal has been settled in favor of the exchanges. It is reported that several other cases of infringement and bicycling of films against Wisconsin and upper Michigan exhibitors have been filed. The Delft firm is headed by H. C. (Doc) Gallup.

On Zoning Committee

Milwaukee—Arthur Schmitz, local RKO manager, has been named to the permanent zoning committee to succeed Thomas Greenwood, former Pathe manager, who has been transferred to Chicago. Jack O'Toole, Tiffany, and Charles W. Trampe, Mid-West Distributing Co., are the other two exchange managers on the committee.

Irving in "Resurrection"

Hollywood—George Irving is the latest member to be added to the cast of "Resurrection" which Universal is making with John Boles and Lupe Velez in the starring roles. Edwin Carewe is handling the megaphone.

Signs Merna Kennedy

Hollywood—Merna Kennedy has been signed for "The Midnight Special," fourth Chesterfield talker, being directed by Duke Worne.

Kismet

(First National)

It All Depends

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

HARD to spot "Kismet." If you approach it from the angle of that it is "different," it will click. Certainly the picture has considerable merit, revolving almost entirely around the magnetism and the skilled performance of Otis Skinner, who starred in the stage version and who also appeared in a silent version of the picture some years ago for Robertson-Cole.

The dialogue is steeped in poetic "thees" and "thous." Whether the fast-moving present generation will go for it remains to be seen. The picture is in costume, often effective in pageantry and splendid in production values. Likewise, it is theatrical and occasionally unwieldy, but through it all Skinner's performance is unquestionably the beacon light.

It may be that the type of audience that goes for pictures like those which George Arliss has made for the Warners may be counted upon to patronize "Kismet," but decision along those lines is one that must be reached by the individual showman, familiar as he is with the gang that patronizes his theatre or theatres.

While Skinner dominates the picture in every wise, the cast which has been assembled for his support is way under par. Loretta Young has practically nothing to do as Marsinah. Sidney Blackmer, as the Wazir Mansur, plays the heavy in the good old-fashioned way, which means he inclines to overacting. David Manners, as the caliph, elicits no cheers and, as far as Mary Duncan is concerned, you get the impression the director must have been looking more at the display of figure which her abbreviated costume reveals than her histrionics. Edmund Breese, as Jawan, has little to do, but that little is excellent. As a matter of fact, he rates second to Skinner.

The yarn transpires in one day and revolves around the rascality of Hajj, beggar and thief. Briefly, he steals robes from the bazaars, is arrested and brought before the chief of police who promises to spare his arm if Hajj will murder the caliph. The crime is planned to save the chief of police from being branded an absconder.

Hajj promises and, posing as a Moorish magician, is brought before the caliph who wards off the blow via a coat of mail he happens to be wearing at the time. The beggar is imprisoned, but escapes. Elsewhere, his daughter, Marsinah, is being prepared for entrance into the chief of police's harem. Hajj kills the villain, is again nabbed by the caliph's guards and banished as the daughter learns the simple gardener with whom she had fallen in love is really the ruler of Baddad.

Suspense

(British International Pictures)

A Powerful War Drama

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

A HIGHLY intelligent and powerfully gripping dramatization of Patrick MacGill's war story has found its way from the studios of England, where only too seldom does a talker emanate with such splendid production qualities, mechanically and otherwise, as are found in "Suspense."

American distributors will certainly have plenty to worry about in foreign-market competition if British producers continue the high production mark which is reached in this one.

From the angle of American exhibitors and their box-offices, there looms but a single hitch to prevent substantial grosses, and that rests in its war-story classification. Not that the dramatization is unauthentic, or unconvincing, but because predecessors in the field have nicked the edge on this type of material. Audience reaction usually handicaps those which bring up the rear in cycles. However, whether or not this situation develops with "Suspense" remains to be seen. The picture certainly deserves as much of a play as has been accorded previous war dramas, on the basis of comparative production values. By selling in true showmanship style, a national distributor might easily displace the handicap.

For stark drama, it is a pip. You are made to feel, way down in the depths of your boots, the same nerve-racking tenseness which gripped the heart-strings of most participants in that great struggle. We wager the most enthusiastic advocate of war will more than once consider conversion to pacifism when he feels the depressing reaction to the miserable and mind-wrecking phases of life in a mud-filled dugout.

Entirely a man's picture, for it is practically without the slightest trace of feminism, in cast or in action, a more truthful portrayal of the horrors of war has yet to be filmed. From the moment of the first shot, down to finis, there can be easily observed an unquestionable touch of realness. Sound contributes plenty in this respect, faithfully recording the whizzing of shells and the slush of mud.

This is the rainy, muddy side of war, more convincing, and surely more truthful than the flowery tints with which many have painted it. "Suspense" does prove that "war IS hell."

Direction is superb, and, aided by splendid portrayals by the entire cast, intelligent camera angles and almost perfect sound, you can practically rest assured that an indelible impression will be made on the minds of theatregoers who appreciate good screen drama. Not a little of that popular brand of dry English humor trickles lightly through all of this sordidness and does much to lighten the spirits of observers.

A real showmanship campaign is needed to put over this one. Tie-up with American Legions and other associations.

Headin' North

(Tiffany)

Unusual Western

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

A LOT of comedy and some unusual twists make this western stand out. It contains an abundance of laughs and goes far from the beaten track of western pictures.

In this, Bob Steele is out to expose the crooked gambler who had made his father go wrong. He teams up with a rancher who becomes his pal after a fight. In escaping from the law, the two are forced to pose as English actors. A lot of fun results when the pair do their stuff as limey performers. Some of the saloon scenes are a treat, particularly when the hardboiled girl does her stuff as a cabaret entertainer.

Bob Steele is an outstanding attraction, and in this he troups well. He is a good song and dance man in addition to his riding ability, and comes through okay in this.

It's a different kind of western, loaded with laughs, with the hero called upon to fake an actor's role in order to escape from the sheriff. With his pal, Bob puts on a vaudeville turn, which is a riot of comedy.

No review of this picture would be complete without due emphasis placed on the fine photography which characterizes it. Some of the shots are exceptional for their beauty and effectiveness.

Direction by J. P. McCarthy is very good, with all possibilities of the story having been taken advantage of. However, Steele is handicapped considerably by a mediocre supporting cast, no member of which stands out.

This picture will appeal strongly to western fans. It will get by nicely as a better-than-average program picture. Steele is adding considerably to his popularity and this picture should help the work along.

The Flame of Love

Just Fair

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

ANNA MAY WONG hardly rates stardom and in this picture she is not so hot. She has the role of a Chinese dancer, in love with the adjutant of a grand duke of imperial Russia. Although she exudes considerable sex appeal, her characterization leaves plenty to be desired. The picture lacks a happy ending, and, while perfectly logical, the climax in all probability will be detrimental.

Outstanding in the production is the performance of George Schnell as the grand duke. He is an accomplished actor who lends color and vigor to the role of the pseudo-villain. Although the part lacks conviction, Schnell makes it real and powerful.

Anna May Wong gives a good performance, but the part assigned her isn't so favorable. There is nothing in it to warrant special attention, although she enacts her role well.

The story is of an adjutant to a Russian grand duke, who falls in love with a Chinese dancer. The grand duke falls for the dancer and orders her to attend a supper party with him. In the course of the evening he makes unwelcome advances and is shot by the girl's brother. The latter is sentenced to die, but is saved when the girl offers to sacrifice herself. The grand duke, however, permits her to make a getaway, on her promise to renounce the adjutant forever.

Some of the scenes and dialogue are a bit risque. John Longden, the adjutant, resembles Frank Fay somewhat, and is not particularly keen in his part. The rest in the cast are satisfactory.

Comedy and musicals needed.

Grand Duke ..... George Schnell
Colonel Moravjev ..... Percy Standing

Oh, For a Man

(Fox)

Full of Giggles

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

A LOAD of laughs in this. Which makes it well worth a boost. "Oh, For a Man" is not big, but is amusing and sexy in a manner which can prove offensive to nobody.

The story, in brief, concerns the foibles of a grand opera star who falls for a burglar, makes him, marries him and the situations which develop between them before the final and inevitable happy fade-out.

The story had an idea, even if slightly farfetched, but the charm which Hamilton MacFadden injected into his direction and his always deft touch in guiding the characters through their paces more than surmounts the fundamental stretching of coherence which marks the story's conception.

In other words, it's a bit difficult to figure that normally an opera star, feted by the world as Jeannette MacDonald is in the picture, either could or would go for a second-story man even if he happens to be as prepossessing in looks as Reginald Denny. On the other hand, audiences undoubtedly won't concern themselves with that.

Here you have Miss MacDonald, temperamental and impetuous, declaring the life of a grand dame of the opera is the bunk. You know right along, of course, that she doesn't mean a word of it and that the last decision she might be expected to make would be to ditch her career. Into her room one night comes Denny who is the Barney McGann of the opus. She falls for him. He thinks he has possibilities as a singer and the singer decides to give him a chance.

She uses her wiles and her prestige with her impresario to get him a contact. Then in comes her teacher to whip the impossible into line. Of course, it's no go. Denny exhibits more of a bellow than a voice and that's that. He's about to wash up on his venture in the realms of opera, when MacDonald confesses she loves him.

He decides to marry her and off to Italy they go. The singer offers him a villa in the mountains overlooking a lovely lake. He's thinking of Third Avenue and the pals he used to know. The situation develops inevitably as you expect it must. Eventually, Denny has enough, leaves for New York, while Miss MacDonald sees suicide, the convent or her public as alternatives to placate her great sorrow.

So back to the opera she goes, has an auspicious opening once again to be visited that night by her husband via the porch route. He lays her out cold for a bad third act; she tells him it was because her heart wasn't in the performance and asks him to stay for a little bit anyway. He does—for longer than that—as the picture fades out. The ending is a bit weak and not up to the excellence of that which precedes it.

Miss MacDonald exhibits a versatility that has not appeared in her earlier work. She gives an extremely good performance. Denny, too, comes through in splendid style as the Irish husband. Alison Skipworth, as Laura the maid, is extremely good. Ditto for the rest of the cast.

Conspiracy

(Radio)

Mystery Stuff Entertains

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

A NOVEL story adapted from the stage play, plus some excellent acting by Ned Sparks makes this talker rather entertaining. The piece is rather crudely put together and would have been much better with more attention given to details and softening of the more dramatic moments.

The story revolves around Bessie Love's endeavor to protect her brother, the district attorney, from a band of dope peddlers. In order to protect herself she is forced to kill the head of the narcotic ring, and when Sparks, an eccentric writer and amateur detective, writes the story of the murder as it appears to him, Miss Love is disclosed as the murderess. However, Hugh Trevor as the truth-seeking reporter saves her from being tried for the murder and she is exonerated.

The part of the cantankerous writer is very well played by Sparks and it is his work that carries the piece over many rough spots in the story. A love interest between Miss Love and Trevor is woven into the yarn and given relief to the heavier moments. There are many plots and counterplots in the talker and at times the story becomes very confusing. Christy Cabanne directed and, in several instances, failed to get the most out of some of the dramatic situations.

Smaller roles are capably played by Ivan Lebedeff, Rita La Roy and Otto Matieson. Trevor is especially good as the reporter and Miss Love does fair in a part not especially suited to her talents.

The Third Alarm

(Tiffany)

Sure-Fire Hoke

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

IN silent form, "The Third Alarm" was one of the biggest money-makers turned out by FBO. The talker version should be a money-maker, as well, because it is loaded with exploitation angles. It's not outstanding as a production, but the sure-fire hoke is there, so it will please pretty generally.

Emory Johnson has wisely steered clear of the original story, so that, except for the title, this is in no sense a remake, a point which should be stressed in all advertising. He has written an entirely new story around the title, and while some of it is mushy, it gets over well.

Anita Louise and James Hall have big opportunities in this and come through nicely. Miss Louise is a beautiful girl with ability, and should become a bet. Hall probably does the best work of his career in this. Paul Hurst supplies a generous amount of laughs, in a part that fits him to a T. Little Georgie Billings is a talented kid, and helps the sob stuff. Hobart Bosworth, always a topnotcher, is fine as the fire captain, and Jean Hersholt is effective in an all-too-brief part.

The picture is well directed and dressed up nicely. The main action centers around the efforts of Hall to adopt Anita Louise and her little brothers, after they have been placed in an orphanage. Their father, a fireman, had lost his life at a blaze. The kids run away from the orphanage, and Hall and Hurst learn that they can adopt the kids, provided either Hall or Hurst are married. Then they try to land a wife, with Hall finally waking up to the fact he is in love with Anita. Hurst's up-to-the-minute date book, containing pictures of his various girls, is a laugh.

The climax is a fire at the orphanage. It's out and out hoke, but carries wallop.

Cohens and Kellys in Africa

(Universal)

Lots of Laughs

(Reviewed by Dick Crenshaw)

ALTHOUGH the Cohens and Kellys idea has been used plenty, this picture is probably the best that has been turned out by the well known comedy pair. There are plenty of laughs in the production, and it was well received at its first preview. It rates as a good programmer and is okay for first runs and split-week bookings.

Africa proves an ideal background for the trouble-hunting partners, Cohen and Kelly. These parts are again taken by Charlie Murray and George Sidney, while Vera Gordon and Kate Price appear in their usual roles as the wives. Animal scenes add much to the picture and work in well with the dialogue and plot. The picture would prove entertaining if for nothing but its action, animal and native African scenes.

Cohen and Kelly go to Africa with their wives in search of ivory keys to aid their piano business. After a number of comical experiences in an African city, they start the long hike into ivory territory. Here the native black men desert them and they are captured by cannibals. They escape from the man-eaters through a ruse and are caught by another tribe, which is ruled over by a former friend of Cohen's. This friend guarantees to furnish them with the ivory needed, and a game of African miniature golf over a novel course is played to settle a few business details.

In the meantime Mrs. Cohen and Mrs. Kelly are captured by a desert sheik and held for ransom. Not being beauties, their abductor decides to set them free without payment from their husbands. The life in the sheik's harem has proven so tasteful to the two, however, that they decline to leave until their husbands reverse the situation and grab off a few of the harem beauties.

The talker was over footage in preview form, but with considerable editing will be speeded up.

Murray and Sidney do their usual stuff and are okay. Vera Gordon and Kate Price fit in well as the wives, and the direction by Vin Moore is satisfactory.

Beyond the Law

(Syndicate Pictures)

Pretty Weak

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

ON A double feature bill this can get by, but it needs plenty of help. It lacks the rapid fire action patrons expect from a western. Louise Lorraine is the outstanding member of the cast and does the best work. Frazer is miscast as a western player. Direction is just fair.

The action takes place on the border between California and Nevada, where a bandit chief rules the country-side, presumably with the undercover aid of the sheriff. He harrasses a rancher and his daughter and son, until the rancher finally leaves for the capitol to get state aid. A happy-go-lucky wanderer, Robert Fraser, and his pal are held up by one of the bandits, but secure employment on the ranch, where he helps frustrate the rustlers until the troops arrive.

The troopers' songs give this a touch of color and the battle between the troops and the outlaws is effective.

Needs comedy support.

Produced and distributed by Syndicate Pictures. Directed by J. P. McGowan. Story by A. G. A. Durham. Photographed by Frank Newman. Length, 4,930 feet. Running time, 50 minutes. Release date, Aug. 15.

Wunder to Discuss Academy in Lectures

Clinton Wunder, executive manager of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences, arrived in New York on Monday for conferences on Academy affairs. He is to address a gathering at Kansas City on Nov. 16, in the first of a series of speeches before civic leaders throughout the country. Other speeches scheduled are: St. Louis, Nov. 18; Memphis, Nov. 19; Omaha, Nov. 21; Des Moines, Nov. 20 or 22; Minneapolis, Nov. 23 and 24; Milwaukee, Nov. 25; Chicago, Nov. 26.

Projection Training School Head Aquitted

Seattle—Charges of grand larceny against Jay E. Holmes, agent for a motion picture projectionists' training school and organization, were dismissed in this city last week by Justice of the Peace John B. Wright for lack of evidence.

Holmes was alleged to have induced prospective projectionists to enlist in his school by telling them it was affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and had contracts with leading local theatres to furnish them with his graduate students. Both of these charges were denied by the defendant.

Several witnesses were introduced to prove that Holmes had assisted them in obtaining employment after they learned the projectionists' trade, and they also denied that Holmes had enrolled them under false pretenses.

Publix Changes Mind, Reopening Detroit House

Detroit—Sudden decision on the part of the Publix-Michigan officials in Detroit resulted in the re-opening of the State Theatre Thursday. The State closed its doors a week ago Friday without advance notice, word now being given out that the closing was for purposes of "renovation." A lower admission scale is to be effective under the new policy of one-week runs. "Doorway to Hell" is the first attraction.

Paramount Adding to Stage Show Houses

Detroit—Report that stage shows are to be eliminated from the Publix-Kunsky theatres, the Michigan and Fisher, where they are now important parts of the program, are absolutely without foundation, according to N. M. Platt, Detroit district manager. Platt says the organization is now adding to, rather than decreasing, stage resources.

Daab Goes West

Hy Daab, publicity and advertising chief for Radio Pictures, leaves for the Coast Saturday to take a peek at "Cimarron" and other pictures newly completed or nearly so.

This, by way of preparation for advertising campaigns which will launch them in the trade.

Cutting Havana Reference

Washington—Pathe is deleting all reference to Havana in "Her Man," following official Cuban protest that the film presented the city in a false or derogatory light.

Educational Contracts Renewed

Hollywood—Contracts of Charlotte Greenwood and Bert Roach have been renewed by Educational.

Cut Laye Opus

Hollywood—Samuel Goldwyn took another look at the Evelyn Laye picture the other night after 3,000 feet of film and several song numbers had been removed and the result was a faster and better piece of entertainment.

Evelyn Laye is a great bet and shows great screen possibilities as a commedienne. She possesses a marvelous voice and her acting is of the best.

The comedy antics of Leon Errol were not cut any and are decidedly mirth provoking—the limber-legged comic stealing many scenes from a talented cast.

The story is of the Cinderella type and the picture will meet with approval if sold as a comedy, rather than a filmusical.

Racket Cheers

(Sennett—Educational)

Plenty of Laughs

MACK SENNETT directed this comedy. It is up to his usual high standard. The trouble encountered by Andy Clyde and his wife, Daphne Pollard, when they buy a rum running yacht, provides the basis for many clever and amusing gags. This comedy is okay for any bill.

Most of the story, if there is a story, deals with a running gunfight with the coast guard. In order to stop Andy and his friends on the yacht, the government agents call out the whole navy, planes, subs, warships and all. Stock shots are used of these, but they fit well into the talker.

Charles Irwin and Marjorie Bebe as the rum runners add some good comedy touches, but Clyde and Pollard take top honors. Running time, 22 minutes.

The Crystal Gazer

(Columbia)

Laughs Galore

EDDIE BUZZELL, as a Hindu crystal gazer, foretells an impending divorce, the story following with Eddie the sympathetic judge. There are plenty of laughs at the expense of the husband, but the final twist proves a wow. Then the crystal shows the old hokum of a miniature golf salesman (Buzzell), misunderstood by a jealous husband, who throws him out of a high window. Then the old gag of Eddie coming back for his rubbers goes over big despite the fact that this gag had been done by the late George Le Maire in "The Dentist" and others.

Pulling a Bone

(Paramount)

Starts Slow; Then Builds

BURNS AND ALLEN are featured in this piece of nonsense built up around a chap with a bone in his throat. As you expect, he has a merry time trying to have someone believe him first, and secondly to help him. Some of the gags are old and a lot of them new—to this reviewer, at least. Not much sense to it, but after a slow start, this one builds. Worth a play. Directed by Howard Bretherton. Running time, 10 minutes.

Humanettes

(RKO)

Novelty Angle

FAILS miserably in its weak attempt to be humorous, but for sheer novelty there are sufficient twists to pass muster with average neighborhood audiences. Out completely for the de luxe stands. A dull and uninteresting story prevents the intended laughs. The skeleton dance is splendid. Running time, 9 minutes.

United Artists Plans To Star Walter Huston

Walter Huston is being groomed for stardom by United Artists. He had the title role in "Abraham Lincoln." Huston arrived in New York yesterday from Toronto.

Jannings Stays in Berlin

Berlin—Emil Jannings will not return to America in the near future for talkers, for the player has signed a new contract with Ufa for a third picture.

Opinions on Pictures

Scarlet Runner & Co.

(British International Pictures)

Great

HIGHLY interesting and very well done, this is a picturization of the various stages in the growth of a scarlet runner. It is one of the cleverest and interesting shorts it has been our good fortune to see. Ingenious handling of the theme makes it an unusual subject. Any audience will get a lot of information and entertainment out of this fine subject. Running time, 8 minutes.

Audio Review, No. 43

(Pathe)

Interesting

SOME unusual shots of the Rock of Gibraltar and of the life of the Spaniards living at the slope of the British fortress is the opening unit, but the most interesting feature shows the interior of the Chicago Planetarium with its intricate mechanism by which it throws a faithful reproduction of the stars on the globe ceiling. The issue is rounded out by a tour of the mansions of New York millionaires. Worth playing. Running time, 9 minutes.

The Electric Ship

(General Electric)

Fair

THIS commercial short takes us on the SS. Virginia, an electrically-driven steamer of the Panama-Pacific line and the largest vessel built in this country, to the West Coast via Havana and the Panama Canal. Routine shots aboard ship and at ports of call are included. It's an advertising plug for the company, and will not excite any one. Running time, 9 minutes.

College Capers

(Vitaphone No. 4124)

Fair

PHOTOGRAPHED in Technicolor, this short has the merit of a fresh idea, but its possibilities have not been developed to the fullest extent. It contrasts the college graduation exercises of two decades ago, when dignity reigned, with a jazzy parody along modern lines, but it is produced with such a pronounced jerkiness that the idea is ruined. Running time, 10 minutes.

Charles Hackett

(Vitaphone No. 1143)

Bombastic; Lacks Illustion

THE famous romance of Romeo and Juliet takes it on the chin in this Vitaphoner. Exactly how old Romeo was may be subject to controversy in so far as actual years may be concerned. Juliet, too, according to Bill Shakespeare, was a very comely wench. And so, when you see a Romeo who obviously reached his majority years ago and a Juliet who sings far better than she looks, it becomes one tough job to keep the illusion that presumes to surround these two renowned lovers.

The renditions are very good, and thus the ear is satisfied. But the eye has thrown at it more than it can reasonably absorb. Hackett's operatic bombasity doesn't add to the affair, either. Running time, 9 minutes.

The Big Cheese

(Pathe—Aesop Fable)

Fair

THERE are some laughs in this, but they are few and far between. Most of the action is devoted to a prize fight, with the pugs interpolating esthetic dances, but it's overdone. Very little thought was devoted to making this. Running time, 8 minutes.

Short Subjects

Go to Blazes

(Universal)

Has Lots of Laughs

THIS starts out as pretty much of a dud, but gathers momentum as it goes. By the time of the wind-up it registers as a hilarious comedy which will go big with any kind of audience. George Sidney and Charles Murray have an individual style of comedy which gets over nicely. In this, they are entrusted with the care of the fire station while the boys are having a picnic. The inevitable fire finds them taxing their ingenuity in trying to rescue the widow both are keen for. This can be depended upon for plenty of laughs. Running time, 21 minutes.

The Bandmaster

(Krazy Kat—Columbia)

Great

ANOTHER reason why these clever cartoons are so popular. The Kat appears in the title role, going through a series of funny capers which will put this over in grand style on any kind of bill. This cartoon is worth special billing in any kind of theatre. Running time, 9 minutes.

Traffic Tangle

(Pathe)

Feeble

THE lines supplied to Nat Carr and Dot Farley in this alleged comedy are so putrid that your audiences will groan—if they have any intelligence. And the story is almost as bad. Nat buys a new Ford and the family, consisting of Miss Farley, Spec O'Donnell and George Billings, starts on a camping trip. They tangle up traffic, but a cop, unable to find his "tickets," orders Nat to drive him to his home to get them. Twice on the way there they are stopped by motorcycle cops, neither of whom notices the huge cop sitting beside Nat and gives the latter a ticket. That's too much license and the interest of the audience sags. Don't plug this one. Running time, 20 minutes.

The Glory of Spain

(Pathe)

Average

THE photography in this Tom Terriss Vagabond Adventure is so flat that the interest palls. Long shots of Spanish towns that look like the Bronx from afar, close-ups of little girls dancing and a few stereotyped bull fight scenes make up the "adventure." Terriss, however, manages to become excited and romantic in his synchronized spiel. Running time, 10 minutes.

Razord In Old Kentucky

(RKO)

Has Laughs

THIS is a burlesque on a Kentucky feud, the town divided into two armed camps, when Nick and Tony arrive to set up a barber shop. They figure they'll be in for heavy dough, due to the prevalence of beards. The dividing line runs right through the barber shop, so the veteran partners are forced to take sides. It has some laughs, particularly the summoning of the clans with the trick automobile horn of the type Eddie Cantor made famous. Running time, 20 minutes.

Bird Island of Peru

Very Interesting

DR. ROBERT CUSHMAN MURPHY lecturing on Peruvian birds. He photographed the pictures on the Peruvian Oceanographic Expedition of the American Museum of Natural History. It has some fine shots of bird life, and the love-making of two boobies is a treat. Dr. Murphy is an entertaining talker. These travel monologue films are going over well. Running time, 21 minutes.

Hot and Bothered

Peppy

EDDIE BUZZELL as a radio announcer keeps up a rapid-fire spiel as the action flits hither and yon, with some funny antics. Eddie explains what it's all about, although only brief flashes are shown of him before the microphone, and in some episodes, by means of clever dubbing, the characters' voices are carried by Eddie with fairly perfect synchronization of the talk and the lip movements. Eddie's voice becomes tiresome, however. Running time, 10 minutes.

The Showman

(Radio)

Old Stuff

A TOBY, the Pup, cartoon filled with the stereotyped singing and dancing acts of beast, fowl, fish, etc. There's one original gag—a goldfish donning a regulation diver's suit to come to the surface and join in the singing. It's got a few laughs in it. Running time, 7 minutes.

Jewel of Asia

(Columbia—Bray)

Stale

THIS is the second in the Rambling Reporter travelogue shorts being made by the Bray Studios, but it lacks action and interest. The cameraman roams the city of Bangkok, Siam, depicting scenes shown often before. The synchronized voice is flat. Just another travelogue. Running time, 10 minutes.

While the Captain Waits

(Paramount)

Mild Attraction

ARMIDA, featured player in a number of recent Coast pictures and now a musical comedy star on Broadway, gets the stellar spot in this short, a musical with a nautical background. The setting is aboard an ocean liner and the night that on which the usual concert in the first cabin is to be held. But Armida is back in the steerage singing and dancing for the immigrants. She sings as well as her small and undistinguished voice permits, but dances considerably better. No world-beater. Just a mild attraction. Directed by Ray Cozine. Running time, 9 minutes.

Mariutch

(Paramount)

Pretty Good

ONE of the series of song cartoons produced by Max Fleischer for Paramount distribution, "Mariutch" has had a number of better predecessors. The song, however, is known up and down the land and is 'way ahead of the cartoon work that accompanies it. In high spots, there is one: when the curtain behind which the violently active hootchy-kootchy dancer doing her stuff goes up and demonstrates the gyrations belong to three acrobats. Running time, 7 minutes.

Chicago Theatres Do Share in Aid Of Unemployed

Chicago—Numerous local theatres are cutting themselves in on a generous share of the city's good will as a result of their effective participation in relief measures for unemployed persons.

Approximately fifty theatres, cooperating with the Chicago Daily News, ran trailers urging patrons to list "Help Wanted" advertisements in the free classified ad space provided by that newspaper. Other theatres, cooperating with other emergency relief organizations, ran trailers urging charitable contributions of clothing, food, fuel, money and employment. Numerous theatres, themselves, provided or created jobs by immediately inaugurating house cleaning and decorating programs and caring for delayed repair work.

The Chicago Daily News' policy of offering free classified ad space for the listing of "Help Wanted" advertisements was duplicated in Memphis and other cities in the middle west and south. Memphis theatres, cooperating with the morning and evening Commercial-Appeal, are running trailers similar to those in use here, urging patrons to list employment in the free columns.

The theatres' aid has proved effective in every instance and has won for numerous managements the good will of their communities and editorial commendation by newspapers.

Hours and Wages Reduced in W. E. Hawthorne Plant

Chicago—Western Electric's Hawthorne plant—Chicago's largest employer of labor and the country's second largest—this week put into effect a reduced working week in order to prevent further layoffs of employes. Half of the office and factory staffs at Hawthorne are now working on a forty-four and one-half hour and forty hour week, as compared with the former fifty and one-half hour week. A salary reduction has gone into effect to conform to the shorter working schedule. Approximately 15,000 employes are affected by the change.

Stage Shows Are Obsolete, Warner Reaction in Chi

Chicago—Would you think of calling for your best girl in a horse and buggy? No more would Warners think of putting a stage show in a Chicago theatre. Read their announcement of the introduction of an all-picture policy at the Capitol:

"The Capitol," says the ad, "is too progressive a theatre to cling to out-moded, old-fashioned forms of entertainment . . . and too loyal to its patrons to tax them for something which has lost its appeal as entertainment.

"Public sentiment demands the discarding of stage presentations as obsolete and lacking in novelty, and tomorrow finds the Capitol ready with its popular new policy, The Entire Show on the Talking Screen—and the public pockets the saving!"

The Capitol formerly used Fanchon & Marco units, and is the fifth important Chicago theatre to oust stage shows and go all-picture policy in recent months. Others were: B. & K.'s Belmont, Granada and Marbro, and the RKO State-Lake.

"10 Nights in Barroom" Suit Is Settled

Chicago—Damages of $50,000 are asked in suit filed here against Willis Kent, independent producer, by Leon Goetz of this city which has been settled out of court. In the praecipe of the suit Goetz charged that he had not received his full share of the earnings of the independent production, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," in which he held an interest, and asked an accounting and settlement. No answer was filed by Kent.

More Publix Give-Aways

Chicago—The recently opened Paramount at Hammond, Ind., is already resorting to give-aways in order to bolster business. Philco radio drawings at the theatre are being widely advertised. Perhaps it's just as well that that Publix-sponsored clause in the new zoning plan prohibiting give-aways was contested by the independents.

Red Hot Spice Peps Ads of Chi Warner Theatres

Chicago—Warners have stolen the crimson toga for lurid theatre advertising from other Chicago theatre offices in the brief space of a few months. Here is a sample from recent Warner advertising here:

"'A Lady Surrenders'—Mary gave what Isabel refused." This prominent line was flanked by an illustration of a girl disrobing. Another showed a woman being carried to a definitely suggested destination on the arms of a man.

"Half Shot at Sunrise" was the story of the "boudoir buccaneers in the grin and garter belt of Gay Paree," and plenty more in the same vein. And if there was a boudoir sequence in the entire picture it wasn't shown in Chicago, for one place.

"Scarlet Pages" was the "electrifying drama of women seared by shame."

But perhaps it's not all the advertising department's fault. Warner theatres here have been playing more "pinks" than any other group of theatres in the city, and an advertising man can't be expected to sell a certain plumbing fixture with copy based on quotations from Keats' "The Eve of St. Agnes."

It was Warners' advertising of "Party Girl" that caused a local court to invalidate the injunction under which it was playing here.

"Dawn Review" For Milkmen

Chicago—Something new in pre-views was brought to light with the receipt here of trailer copy heralding a "Dawn Preview," scheduled for 5:45 A.M. at the Ritz theatre, Muskogee, Oklahoma. The picture billed was Paramount's "Playboy of Paris." Regular admission rates were in effect with main floor seats by reservation. Breakfast was served by the theatre to all patrons. A particular appeal was made to milk men finishing up and to stenos starting out, with the reminder that the performance would be over by 7:30, in time for every one to get to work.

Flesh Being Dropped At Warner Chi House

Chicago—Warner's Capitol, large South Side house, this week will discontinue stage shows. All-picture programs, with a reduction in admissions, will be the new policy.

THE

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

It is not a difficult matter to visualize two windings, one with 10 turns of wire with a total resistance of 20 ohms and another coil of 400 turns rated at 10,000 ohms. Suppose further that these two windings are used as the magnetizing coils in two meters such as that shown in Figure 84.

A current of .01 ampere through each winding causes the meter pointer to move over an arc equivalent to that of the scale of the meter between the 0 and the full scale deflection. In order that the meter containing the low resistance coil indicate full scale deflection a voltage of .2 volt must be applied across the terminals of the meter. In order that the needle of the meter containing the high resistance coil indicate full scale deflection it is necessary that the voltage applied across the terminals of the meter, therefore the winding be 10,000 x .01, or 100 volts. Thus, if the resistance of the magnetizing winding is increased so that full scale reflection is obtained for a definite value of current flow, that meter is suitable for use as a voltmeter.

With the high resistance coil fixed as to the number of turns and with the maximum magnetizing current fixed at .01 ampere, the meter will deflect when potentials between 0 and 100 volts are applied across the meter terminals. Now, it is evident that the deflection of the meter needle is a function of the current coursing through the winding and that a full scale deflection of the meter needle is an indication of a current flow of .01 ampere, but the meter is no longer suitable for the measurement of current flow. This is so since the internal resistance of the instrument is so great that if it is placed in series with a circuit carrying current, the resistance of the meter will add so much resistance to the circuit that it will greatly influence the characteristics of the circuit and the current indication upon the meter will no longer be a true indication of the actual current in the circuit.

As a matter of fact, the insertion of such a high resistance into a low resistance circuit of a few hundred ohms will impair the operation of the system. Thus, a voltmeter is not suitable for the measurement of current despite the fact that it is a current indicating instrument.

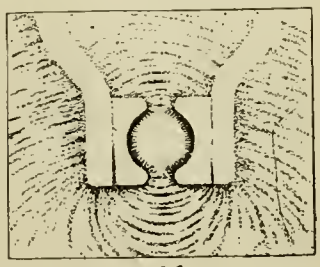
Recognizing the use of a low resistance winding in a current meter and a high resistance winding in a voltmeter, it is impractical to construct high range voltmeters with magnetizing coils of many turns and high resistance. Obviously the higher the range of the voltmeter, the greater would be the number of turns required for the magnetizing coil. To make a long story short, the use of high resistance magnetizing windings is used only in low-range instruments.

A much more practical method is employed. Referring to the moving iron type of meter illustrated in Figure 84, illustrated in Lesson 23 full scale deflection means a voltage of .2 volt and current flow of .01 ampere. This is the equivalent of a coil or meter resistance of 20 ohms, indicated as D in Figure 84. This same value of current may be caused to flow through the meter when the applied voltage is .4 volts by adding a resistance Rs in series with the meter, so that the current through the meter coil remains at .01 ampere with an applied potential of .4 volt. This arrangement is nothing more than the regular series circuit discussed in Lesson 8.

Consider Figure 85. Rm is the 20-ohm resistance of the meter winding. Rs is a series resistance. The current flowing through the meter coil, or R, is governed by several conditions.

First, the value of the applied voltage E; second, by the value of Rs, and third, by the value of Rm. We know that Rm is fixed; hence, if E is constant, the current, according to Ohm's law, which is applicable in this case, is going to be controlled by Rs. No matter what the value of E, some value of Rs will, in series with Rm, limit the flow of current through Rm, therefore the meter to any predetermined value necessary to give full-scale deflection, yet not to indicate off scale.

In the case cited, the maximum current is limited to .01 ampere. The voltage indication required is .4 volt. This means a total resistance of 40 ohms is necessary. Of this total 20 ohms is represented by Rm, hence the series resistance required is the difference between the total and that in the meter, or $40 - 20 = 20$ ohms. With an applied potential of .4 volt and a series resistance Rs of 20 ohms, our meter will indicate full-scale deflection equivalent to a current flow of .01 ampere and an applied voltage of .4 volt. It is significant to note that the drop across the meter has not changed. It still remains at .2 volt. But the sum of the respective drops in the circuit is equal to the applied voltage, or



$$IR_m + IR_s = E$$

We have selected for our illustration a very low value of voltage. Suppose that the required voltage indication is 400 volts. The meter remains as before. Its maximum current is .01 ampere, and the drop across the meter is .2 volt. Hence an external element must produce a voltage drop equal to the applied voltage E less the drop across the meter, in this case 399.8 volts. Therefore, the value of the series resistance is governed by two factors. First, the required voltage drop, and second, the maximum current flow through the meter. In the case cited

$$Rs = \frac{399.8}{.01}$$
$$= 39{,}980 \text{ ohms}$$

A resistance of this value connected in series with the meter will allow the application of 400 volts or will allow the measurement of voltage up to and including 400 volts, since any voltage up to and including 400 volts will cause the flow of current not greater than .01 ampere. Such is the arrangement of the series resistance and the current meter to comprise a voltage indicating instrument. This explanation by no means concludes the discussion of series multipliers. Its function was to illustrate the formation of voltage indicating instruments with current indicating meters as the basic structures.

It should be understood that the series multiplier resistance arrangement is not to be found in every voltmeter. Low-range meters employ high resistance coils. This is a general statement and should not be construed as being absolute because many voltmeters even of very low range, less than 10 volts to be exact, make use of series resistance voltage multipliers. Further discussion relating thereto shall follow upon the conclusion of the preliminary description of the moving coil type of meter.

The Moving Coil Type of Meter.—In contrast to the moving iron type of indicating instrument, suitable for the measurement of alternating and direct currents and voltages is the moving coil type of meter, limited solely to the measurement of direct current and voltage, but extremely popular for that form of work. In other words, if the data desired is that relating to direct current or voltage, the moving coil type of meter is used in preference to the moving iron type of instrument.

While it is true that the mechanism of the moving coil type of instrument differs from that in the moving iron type of unit, the basis of operation is the same in both types of meters. The current through the magnetizing coil in the moving iron type of meter evokes forces between two magnetized bars. The current through the coil used in the moving coil type of meter evokes forces between two magnetic fields, this force being in the form of a torque upon a coil, causing it to turn within a certain space. By virtue of the form of pivoting of the coil, its rotation occurs in a predetermined manner. However, let us start at the beginning and show the structure of the average moving coil meter. We take as an example the Weston instrument of that type.

There are two important parts of a moving coil type of meter. These are the permanent magnet and the moving coil. The permanent magnet is in the form of a horseshoe. Lines of force are existent between the poles of this magnet, but since the moving system is located at a definite point, an effort is made to concentrate the lines of force at the poles of this magnet by the use of two soft iron pole pieces, as shown in Figure 86, depicting the poles and pole pieces of the permanent magnet. This illustration shows the lines of force at the pole pieces. The radial position is the ideal required because it affords a uniform concentrated field within which is located (when used) the moving coil.

By suitable design of this air gap so that a uniform field exists between the pole pieces or within the space through which the coil is to rotate, a uniform scale with equal divided divisions is possible. This part of the instrument is the same for current or voltage indicating instruments.

The moving coil in a current indicating instrument consists of a few turns of wire wound upon a rectangular form, usually of aluminium. Such a form is shown in Figure 87. The pointer is attached to this form and pivoted in such manner that rotation of the coil moves the pointer across the scale.

When the coil is located within this constant magnetic field (due to the permanent magnet) and current is passed through the turns of the coil, another magnetic field is created around the turns of the coil. Thus, we have two magnetic fields within the space between the pole pieces. Now, between every carrying conductor and a magnetic pole, there exists a mechanical force, whose value depends, in addition to other things, upon the product of the current through the coil and the strength of the pole.

For the sake of brevity we shall assume that "the other things" have been taken care of, and since the constant field is uniform, the torque exerted upon the coil is proportional to the strength of the current through the coil. By virtue of the relation between the two magnetic fields, the forces evoked tend to turn the coil in such manner that the coil will be linked by the maximum possible number of flux lines.

Since the meter pointer is attached to the coil and since the design of the system is such that the movement of the coil is proportional to the current through the coil, the meter pointer moves through a uniformly divided arc. This is in contrast to the moving iron system, where the motion of the pointer dependent upon the forces evoked between two like poles of a magnet moves over a scale which is proportional to the square of the current.

The presence of the constant field due to the permanent magnet makes this type of meter unsuited for A. C. measurements. Furthermore, it creates polarity in the instrument. When the direction of the current flow through the coil is correct the reaction of the two fields is such that the meter needle moves in the proper direction. However, if the direction of the current through the coil is reversed, the reaction between the two fields will still be existent, but the direction of the force will be reversed and the meter pointer will deflect in the opposite direction. Hence, when alternating current is applied to the coil, the total motion of the pointer is zero or perhaps oscillation over a short distance around the 0 point upon the scale.

Internal Resistance of the Meter.—Once again the deflection is due to the current flowing through a coil. And once more it is impossible to wind a coil without resistance, hence the moving coil type of meter, like the moving iron type of meter, is possessed of a certain value of resistance, i. e., internal resistance. Whether this value of resistance is small or great depends entirely upon the design of the instrument. For current meter it is low and for voltage indicating instruments it is high, but at all times the maximum deflection indicates the flow of a predetermined value of current. Excessive current flow will cause the meter to deflect beyond the upper extremity of the scale or "off scale."

Meter Ranges.—It is customary to quote the range of any type of meter as from 0 to some maximum value. This would tend to create the impression that any value of voltage within these two limits may be measured with a voltmeter or any value of current may be measured with a current meter. Such is not the case. While it is true that the lower limit is zero and that any finite value of current or voltage is in excess of zero, decimal values of unit current or voltage are not very readily discernible upon current or voltage indicating instruments which have maximum ranges equal to several hundred times the unit value.

In other words, it is not very easy to read .001 volt upon a voltmeter of a single range with a maximum range of 100 volts. The reason for this is that the instrument is not designed for such work. The width of the pointer, the width of the lines upon the scale, the inertia of the moving system itself are factors which impose definite limitations upon the lower limits of all indicating instruments. For this reason, current and voltage meters are made in various ranges.

The subject of meter ranges is of interest. Obviously, for any one fixed design of a meter, be it of the current or voltage indicating type, extension of the range may be accomplished without much trouble, but reduction of the range and utilization of the full scale for reduced range is not practical. It is possible, but generally not practical. Examples of how such reduction may be attained will be shown later.

As in the case of the moving iron type of meter, the basic moving coil type of instrument is a current indicating device. Current meters have windings of low resistance and voltage indicating instruments have windings of fairly high resistance, but once more all voltmeters do not employ high resistance windings. At the same time meters designed to indicate high values of current do not pass all of the current indicated upon the meter, directly through the meter.

Meters are calibrated in decimals of the unit of current or multiples when they are current indicating instruments and decimals of voltage or multiples of voltage when they are voltage indicating instruments. Thus, current meters are referred to as microammeters, milliammeters and ammeters. Naturally each of these may be interpreted in the other, but it is customary to qualify the type of instruments according to the equivalent of the maximum indication. Thus, if a meter indicates 1,000 microamperes, or 1 milliampere, at full scale deflection, that meter is generally known as a milliammeter. If the full scale deflection is a decimal value of 1 milliampere, the meter is known as a microammeter. By the same token, if a milliammeter indicates 1,000 milliamperes, or 1 ampere, at full scale deflection that meter is known as an ammeter, with a range of from 0-1 ampere.

The same may be said of voltmeters. A meter with a full scale deflection of 1,000 millivolts is a voltmeter with a range of from 0-1 volt. If the meter indicates 750 millivolts at full scale deflection it is a millivoltmeter with a range of from 0-750 millivolts.

Supplementary to the current or voltage designation of a meter, one frequently hears the application of a term designating the utility of the meter, i. e., its location in a system, viz., filament voltmeter, plate millammeter, grid current meter, plate voltage meter, etc. These terms are applied to indicating instruments employed in connection with vacuum tubes and vacuum tube circuits. Similar appellations are applied, of course, different in character to indicating instruments employed in connection with other equipment and systems.

In connection with such names, it should be understood that the name does not limit the application of the meter to the circuit stated. That same meter is suitable for use in any circuit where the maximum potential does not exceed the maximum or full scale rating of the instrument and the character of the potential or current conforms with the design of the instrument.

Current and Voltage Ranges.—We have mentioned that the range of a current or a voltage indicating instrument may be increased at will. Suppose that we start with a current meter. As an example we shall select a moving coil type of instrument rated at .001 ampere, or 1 milliampere, and an internal resistance of 30 ohms. The drop across this meter coil is $.001 \times 30$, or .03 volt. If this meter is connected into a circuit through which is flowing some value of current within the 0-1 milliam-pere limits, the value of the current will be indicated upon the meter. What about a circuit which is carrying 10 milliamperes, or 10 times the maximum of the meter? Is this meter suitable for insertion in such a system? The answer is to the affirmative with reservations. The reservation is the use of a shunt.

We know from the previous discussion of resistances in parallel (Lesson 8) that if two resistances are connected in parallel, the total current is the sum of the current flowing through the branches. We also know that the voltage is the same across all branches of a parallel system. From this we glean that the current through each branch varies inversely as the resistance of the branch, that is, when the voltage is maintained constant. With these relations in mind it is not difficult to visualize a state wherein the known current flow through one branch of known resistance will be indicative of the total current in the circuit.

Consider Figure 88. E is a voltage. Rm is one resistance and Rs is another resistor in shunt with Rm. The total current in the circuit is I. At the junction between Rm and Rs, the total current divides into $I_m$ and $I_s$. If Rm = Rs, the value of $I_s$ will always be that of $I_m$, regardless of the value of E. Whether E is small or great, $I_s = I_m$ when Rm = Rs. Thus, if we know $I_m$, we automatically know Is. Furthermore, by making Rs a predetermined decimal or multiple of Rm, we can make $I_m$ a predetermined decimal or multiple of $I_s$ and of I. This becomes evident when we consider the relation between currents through parallel branches. Suppose that Rm is twice as great as Rs. Whatever the value I, twice as much current will flow through Rs than is flowing through Rm. If we know the current through Rm, the total current can readily be determined. By a suitable known ratio of Rm / Rs, and known current through Rm, we can determine total current I.

Now, if a meter such as we have mentioned is to be employed to indicate the flow of 10 milliamperes for full scale deflection, the meter winding need never carry more than 1 milliampere. If this winding is Rm, we can arrange a shunt resistance Rs to carry the remaining 9 milliamperes and the meter scale with this shunt always in place can be calibrated for a full scale deflection of 10 milliamperes. By virtue of the ratio between Rm / Rs the meter scale is multiplied a definite number of times. By suitable selection of Rs the flow of .001 ampere through the meter (Rm) may represent a total current I of 10, 100, 1,000, 10,000, or even 100,000 milliamperes.

However, we must qualify the ratio Rm / Rs. This does not indicate the actual multiplying ratio. This ratio indicates the division of the currents between Rm and Rs. But since the meter at all times carries a part of this current, the multiplying term is

$$\frac{Rm}{Rs} + 1$$

The part "+ 1" represents the portion of the total current flowing through the meter. This relation may be expressed in another manner. The total current is that flowing through Rm and Rs. The current through Rm bears the same relation to the total current I as the Rs does to the sum of Rm and Rs. In other words, the multiplying factor is

$$\frac{Rs + Rm}{Rs}$$

These two ratios are absolutely independent of current values. They pertain solely to the resistances involved, hence any current range is possible by suitable arrangement of the shunt resistance or element. A 100 ampere meter would naturally require very heavy coils, as a matter of fact so heavy as to be entirely impractical. But by the use of a shunt element which is a part of the external circuit of the meter, a meter mechanism which requires only .001 ampere for full scale deflection can be utilized and calibrated to represent a total current flow of 100 ampere when .001 ampere flows through the meter.

Suppose that we have the current meter rated at .001 ampere and 30 ohms. This meter is shunted by a 10-ohm resistance Rs. Whatever the value of current through Rm, three times as much flows through Rs. Thus the ratio Rm / Rs indicates the division. However, we know that the meter is carrying current and, if the shunt is carrying three times as much, the total current may be said to be divided into four parts; one flowing through the meter and three parts flowing through the shunt.

That one part flowing through the meter is present at all times, even when the value of the shunt is greater than the meter resistance or when the current through the meter is greater than through the shunt. We can add the currents through Rm and Rs and thus determine the total current, but such operation requires definite knowledge relative to the currents in each branch. By operating with the resistances, we predetermine the division of the currents.

Thus, in the case cited, the current through the meter is .001 ampere and through the shunt is .003 ampere. The sum of these currents is .004 ampere. If we apply the multiplying factor to whatever value of current is indicated upon the meter to determine the total current we have

$$I = Im \times \frac{Rs}{\frac{Rm}{Rs} + 1}$$
$$= .004$$

and

$$I = Im \times \frac{Rs + Rm}{Rs}$$
$$= .001 \times \frac{40}{10}$$

Because of the known division of currents through paralleled circuits of known resistance we can determine the values of resistance necessary for use as a shunt in order to provide a definite division of currents. If we desire to multiply a meter scale three times and remember that one part of the current will flow through the meter, the remaining two parts must flow through the shunt. Hence the shunt must carry twice as much current as the meter, therefore the resistance of the shunt must be half of that of the meter.

If we desired to multiply the meter scale six times, we must secure a division of currents whereby the current indicated upon the meter is one-sixth of the total. The other five-sixths will flow through the shunt. If the shunt must carry five times as much as the meter, its resistance, because of the inverse law relating to current division in parallel circuits, must be one-fifth of the resistance of the meter. This division is expressed as where I is the total current and $I_m$ is the current through the meter. The relation $(I/I_m - I)$ indicates the division of the current. Thus, if the meter resistance is 30 ohms and the required range is .01 ampere or 10 milliamperes and the meter scale is .001 ampere or 1 milliampere, the value of Rs, the shunt

$$= \frac{30}{\frac{.01}{.001} - 1}$$
$$= \frac{30}{9}$$
$$= 3.33 \text{ ohms}$$

At the same time, we can determine the resistance of the shunt by considering the ratio between the current through the meter and the current through the shunt. If the meter scale is to be multiplied 10 times, it is the equivalent of dividing the current into ten parts; one part flowing through the meter and the other nine parts flowing through the shunt. Hence, the ratio $I_m/I_s = .001/.009$ and if we multiply the resistance of the meter by this quantity we ascertain the value of the shunt, since the ratio between the shunt and the meter resistance must equal the ratio of the current through the meter to the current through the shunt or

$$I_m/I_s = R_s/R_m$$

and $R_s = (I_m/I_s) \times R_m$

Blood-Thirsty Reformer

Portsmouth, O.—An unsigned threatening letter, evidently written by a religious fanatic, has been received by C. A. Harrell, city manager. The writer strenuously objects to picture houses being open on Sunday, and threatens to "bump off" Manager Harrell, Municipal Judge W. R. Sprague and Patrolman Charles Bender unless this nefarious practice is immediately discontinued.

The communication is similar in text to ones received by other city officials at Portsmouth in which the self-appointed guardian of the city's morals threatened to take the officials for a ride if the Sabbath day continued to be thus desecrated.

Fingerprint experts are investigating. Meanwhile, Sunday shows are in operation, and the would-be killer has not carved any additional notches in his gun.

"Hell's Angels" Jam

Toronto — Counting on a blanket okay on "Hell's Angels" from English censors as a means of getting the Ontario ban on the picture raised, the decision to make another try for the local board's verdict was again postponed when the British officials ordered three reels out. Ontario censors say these are the same scenes to which they objected. Patent rights also complicate the question here.

"Equitable Copyright" Demanded in Canada

Ottawa—George Herbert Thring, secretary of the Incorporated Society of Authors, Playwrights and Composers, London, England, is in Ottawa for the announced purpose of conferring with the Canadian government with a view to securing the enactment of "a fair copyright law" in Canada. Thring declared that all other Dominions of the British Empire had adopted an equitable act.

Exhibitors in Canada are watching developments but, in the meantime, are ignoring the demands of the Canadian Performing Rights Society for an annual tax on a seat basis for the privilege of using copyrighted music in pictures and otherwise, the Canadian assignments of which are held by the society.

Cincy Legit Out!

Cincinnati—An unconfirmed rumor is in circulation to effect that the Victory, the only legitimate theatre in Dayton, which has been dark for several months, is to be wired for sound, in which event legitimate attractions are to be discontinued entirely.

The Retort Swell

Andy Clyde, the Mack Sennett comedy star, had been ill for two weeks, and his physician advised daily osteopathic treatments.

Appearing on the Sennett lot unexpectedly a few days later, he was greeted by Marjorie Beebe with:

"Didn't you go to the osteopath today, Andy?"

"No," he replied, "I was kneaded at home."

Pathe Halts Plan To Remake Serials

Hollywood—Pathe has called a halt on production of serials, following a compilation of comments from exhibitors. It seems that the idea of remakes in chapter plays hasn't clicked so favorably, exhibitors feeling that new stuff is what the public wants. It had been planned to make talkers of some of the past Pathe serial successes.

Meanwhile, Universal and Mascot Pictures are cleaning up on talker serials.

Warners Continue with Theatre Field Expansion

Warners has not abandoned expansion plans but intends to go through with theatre projects scheduled. Contracts for three new Warner houses have just been let. These are: Morgantown, W. Va., 1,300 seats; Torrington, Conn., 1,900 seats, and New Avenue Grand, Washington, 1,800 seats. John Eberson is contractor for the first and last named while Thomas Lamb is architect for the Torrington house.

Extras' Average Pay $2.63 Weekly

The average wage of a Hollywood extra is $2.63 a week, Jerome Beatty discloses in "The Modern Screen Magazine." There are over 17,000 men, women and children in the film city competing for the eight or nine hundred jobs open to extras every day. Ten dollars a day is the usual wage and out of that extras are expected to furnish a complete wardrobe. Jane Arden, whose two-year average wage of $47.45 a week is the highest in the industry, has among other things fifteen hats, twenty-one pairs of shoes, seven evening dresses and four evening wraps. Babe Green, who has averaged $46.95 for the past two years, owns full dress, tuxedo, sport suits, military uniforms, cutaway, knickers, riding habit and every sort of ordinary clothing. Miss Arden's wardrobe cost more than $2,000 and Green's well over $1,000; yet, says Mr. Beatty, they are mighty glad to get $10 a day and to work a little more than an average of four days a week, for they know that if the producers wanted to hire extras at bed rock prices they could fill the stages, so great does the supply exceed the demand.

First De Luxer at St. Louis Going to Stock

St. Louis—This city's first de luxer, the Grand Central, is about to make its final bow about Christmas as a film house, switching to a stock policy. Competition of the St. Louis, Missouri and Fox proved too tough and the old theatre went dark several months ago. Later it was proposed to install an indoor miniature golf course, but with the popularity of that fad passing this plan was abandoned. Dramatic stock seems to be in demand here.

Wins $55,000 Award

"Dawn Patrol" Theft Case Off to Nov. 17

Hollywood—Preliminary hearing in the action revolving alleged thievery of "The Dawn Patrol" script has been continued to November 17 by Municipal Judge Ballard.

Defendants are Edith Higgins, accused of theft of the original manuscript from First National studio, and Forrest J. Easley and Joseph M. March, charged with conspiring with her to commit burglary and grand theft.

Miss Higgins, former employe of Warners, took the manuscript, valued at $20,000, from the studio, it is charged.

March and Easley are accused of conspiring with her and offering her $100 to be given to Carmelita Sweeney, another Warner employe, for her assistance.

Why the theft, if one was perpetrated, has not come to light.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

SALARIES!

THE oft-heard expression, "The laborer is worthy of his hire," apparently never received much attention from theatre owners — if present day managers' salaries are any criterion.

There was a time, in what now seems like the dim and distant past, when men entrusted with the management of a large and expensive theatre were paid a salary somewhat commensurate with the responsibilities of such a position.

Then came—not the dawn—but chain theatre control and the none to gentle process of cutting overhead. And for some unknown reason that process always started with the manager's salary.

Yet, if you stop to analyze the operating expense of a theatre you will soon find that the cost for the man who runs the house is one of the smallest items of all the essentials needed to properly operate the house.

Aside from stimulating interest in the theatre and increasing its receipts, the manager must mix with the various organizations in the community and while the theatre may bear the dues for membership in those organizations, the manager, as a representative citizen in the community, is often put to the expense of those many items coming under the heading of entertainment and goodwill.

He must dress and look neat at all times and that costs plenty, too.

Then he must be an able executive both in his contact with merchants and civic leaders as well as in his relations with the general public and his staff. He must keep an ever-watchful eye on every part of the theatre's equipment so as to avoid expensive breakdowns and replacements. Summing up in as brief a way as possible, he must carry the entire responsibility of an investment running from several hundred thousands to sometimes a million dollars.

And for all of that work, all of that effort, all of that responsibility, they tell him that the house cannot afford to pay more than "just so much," which in many instances means fifty to seventy-five dollars a week.

A man capable of looking after an investment involving so much money, a man who understands his job and looks after every detail of it as though it were his own personal investment, and, above all, a man who is, admittedly, the right man for the job, deserves a damned sight more than seventy-five dollars a week.

We hope to see the day when a happier condition will exist between theatre-owners and managers on the salary question.
